Did anybody representing the steamboat interests of the Mississippi river testify?—not the St. Louis interest, but the Galena interest, the St. Paul interest—did anybody of that sort testify before the committee? And if so, did they say it was no obstruction? Let the amendment be adopted, and if any rights have accrued in favor of individuals, let them prosecute those rights.

Mr. CONNESS. Allow me, as a member of the committee, to say to the Senator on the point he makes that I answer yes; there was abundant testimony from those interests before that committee, and that testimony was closely and carefully examined. There was also testimony from engineers, including General Warren, and that was closely examined; and the committee came to the fairest conclusion they could in view of all the testimony, and I think the only conclusion the case admits of.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was not informed of the testimony; I have not got it on the record. The committee do not say in their report that they examined even a single witness. They say they had evidence, but whether it was documentary or otherwise I do not know. I did not know, before the Senator from California informed me, what the testimony was.

Mr. CONNESS. I will tell the Senator, with his permission, what class of testimony was before the committee. It was documentary evidence, such as were presented in the case when it was before the courts of law, full, ample, and complete upon the subject, presenting that side of the case in its strongest light.

Mr. HENDERSON. The committee themselves show that a right of action has accrued in at least one case; and that was the case of the Starlight, which lost a barge. A right of action certainly accrued in favor of the steamboat Starlight. Now, according to my understanding of the decision of the Supreme Court in the Wheeling Bridge case, if we pass this act it does result that that suit will be destroyed. It is true that was an action to abate the bridge at Wheeling by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and as was very properly said by the Senator from Maryland, the court, after it was made a post road, held that that action made it a legal bridge from the time of its construction; and this bill makes this bridge a legal structure ab initio. Then if any right of action has accrued in favor of the party I cannot see how judgment can be rendered against the bridge company, provided that decision be founded upon correct principles, even if the party has been damaged.

Now, will the Senate vary their decision of the last session, which required the bridges on the Mississippi to be one hundred and sixty feet span, and determine that a structure of but a hundred and twenty-eight feet span, wanting three of the seven requisites of a good draw-bridge in the opinion of an engineer appointed to examine it, wanting three important elements of a good bridge that does not destroy navigation, shall be legalized even to such an extent as to destroy rights of action already accrued? I think not. If a right of action has accrued, let that action be prosecuted, and if the party is entitled to a judgment, let him recover that judgment. It is but right, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I will tax the patience of the Senate for only a very few moments to notice some of the points made by the Senator from Missouri. He says in substance that this bridge has been built in violation of the law at the last session of Congress, that the draws are narrower than those authorized by the law of the last session, and that if we legalize this bridge as the bill proposes we give authority to other men to go on and build other bridges in violation of that law with draws one hundred feet wide and then eighty feet wide and then sixty feet wide, and so on. That is not a fair statement of this case. These men have not gone on and built a bridge in violation of that law. Their bridge was built before that law was passed, and therefore it could not have been a violation of that law. That bridge was in existence and in use and had been for twelve months before you passed your law of the last session. What are the facts about it?

A railroad bridge had been built at Rock Island, and had been in use some ten years. Certain objections existed to that bridge; suits had been brought to abate the bridge, and they had been pending during these ten years, certain specific reasons being alleged why the bridge was an obstruction to navigation. In building this bridge those points were avoided, those difficulties were overcome, great pains were taken and great expense incurred to avoid the very difficulties that the same men who are now litigating against this bridge alleged to be the difficulties with the Rock Island bridge. It is therefore not correct to assume, as the argument of the Senator from Missouri seems to imply, that these men have gone on regardless of your law and put up a bridge in violation of the terms of your law. The truth is they had built that bridge before your law was passed, and in building it they took great pains and expended much money to avoid the very difficulties which were alleged against the Rock Island bridge by the same gentlemen who are now trying to remove this bridge for other alleged deficiencies. If any person goes on and builds a bridge over the Mississippi river now of less span of draw than was prescribed by the act of Congress of last session, he does it in violation of your law; but, I repeat, this bridge was built before that law was passed.

The Senator asks why it is necessary to have a law of this kind at all, because he says if the bridge is not a nuisance it will not be abated. The very difficulty is because of the law passed at your last session. Were it not for that law there would not be any difficulty. The men who are pressing for the destruction of this bridge bring in a law passed by Congress after the bridge was built, and make that the main point on which they rely for the judgment they hope to obtain for the abatement of this bridge. They come in and say, "Congress has shown by its legislation that this bridge is not a proper bridge to be built across the river; the law of Congress passed at the last session gives the deliberate judgment of Congress against this bridge;" and they seek to make use of that act and make it an all-powerful argument before the courts, where a suit is pending for the destruction of the bridge.

I do not know that it is necessary to go over the facts of this case again, they were so ably presented by the Senator from West Virginia. The bridge has been there two years, and but one single steamer has had her aft-guards broken, and that did not interrupt or delay her trip an hour. It is claimed, I cannot say how truly, by those in the interest of the bridge, that it was owing to her own neglect, or the neglect of those who were in command of her and managed her. Aside from that, in two entire years that this bridge has been in use, there have been two barges injured; one was small, with some three hundred or four hundred bushels of oats on it; and the other was damaged, so that after going down below the bridge a quarter or a half mile it was drawn up on the beach and part of its cargo injured. That is all the injury that has occurred in two years; and if my recollection is right, the same St. Louis company that has been litigating with the Rock Island Bridge Company for the last ten or twelve years, and is now litigating with this bridge company during the entire of last year, did not lose a dollar. I think the barge injured last year did not belong to that company.

Some stress is laid upon the statements made by General Warren. I listened as a member of the committee to what he had to say with a great deal of interest and a great deal of respect. He was there, however, but a single day, as his own statement showed. In regard to one of his objections, which is that but one of these draws can be used, the testimony shows that the opinion even of an experienced engineer may be erroneous. As has been stated to the Senate already, there has been a record carefully kept of every boat and of every barge and of every raft that has passed that bridge during the entire time it has been standing, the hour of the day or of the night when it passed, and everything pertaining to its passage; and that record shows that the opinion expressed by General Warren that the west draw cannot be used is an entire mistake, because nearly or quite one half the passages that have been made have been made through that draw.

Mr. HENDERSON. Do I understand the Senator from Iowa to assert that the engineer, General Warren, made a mistake about that matter?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. He expresses an opinion in his statement that the draw upon the Iowa side of the river is not of much benefit to navigation. That, the Senator will find, is one of the reasons alleged against the bridge. Now, the record shows as indisputably as any fact can be shown, that very nearly half the number of passages under the bridge have been through that very draw. He was there but a single day; and it is a matter but of opinion on his part at most, and that opinion is contrary to the fact.

The current does pass the draws of this bridge at right-angles. He says so expressly and clearly and indisputably; but he says that above the bridge on the right bank, the Iowa bank, the shore is curving, so that there is not a straight line of a thousand feet above the draw, and he thinks that there ought to be a straight line of a thousand feet above the draw. Now, in that he may be technically right; it would not do for me to set up my opinion against his, of course; but concede that he is right, how far does the fact that there is a curve in the bank above practically affect the question? We have the answer in the record made during two years.

It seems to me that if we adopt this amendment of the Senator from Missouri we might just as well not pass the bill. If I understand the effect of this amendment, it, if adopted, will make the law mean this: that this is a lawful bridge and a post route; but if the courts shall find that it is an obstruction to the river, then it is not a lawful bridge and a post route. The amendment of the Senator is thus an entire destruction of the whole intention and purpose of the bill; and if the desire be to defeat the bill, it might as well be done directly as by indirection. If the intention is to defeat the object of the bill, you may just as well vote it down as attach to it the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. TRUMBULL. As I understand the legal effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, it is a defeat of the bill. The bill without his amendment would not take away the right of private action for an injury that had been done by this bridge heretofore. If a private party has suffered, and has a right of action already accrued against this bridge company, or has commenced a suit for a private injury, he can maintain that suit notwithstanding the passage of the law. But the bill would have the effect to stop a public prosecution against the bridge, an indictment to abate it as a nuisance, and such is intended to be its effect. Otherwise, as the Senator from Iowa says, there would be no object in passing the law. The declaration of Congress that this bridge shall be a post road and a lawful structure will be of no benefit to the parties who have constructed the bridge, if, notwithstanding this declaration, it may be abated as a nuisance in the precise way that it could be if there were no law on the subject. This bridge was constructed before Congress took action in relation to the construction of bridges over the Mississippi river; and hence it is not obnoxious to the charge of the Senator from Missouri that it is built in defiance of that law.

A party who should build a bridge hereafter could not allege the passage of this law to protect him, because these parties built this bridge under the authority of the States of Illinois and Iowa before Congress acted.

This bridge thus constructed is a part of the great line of railway reaching from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean; and let me say to the Senate that you may place a car on the railroads on the sea-board and it may pass to-day all the way to the bank of the Missouri river opposite Omaha, and as soon as the Missouri shall be bridged, as authority has already been granted by Congress to bridge it, that car may pass more than three hundred miles beyond Omaha on its way to the Pacific ocean. This bridge is on that great line of travel, the only line that to-day connects you with the Pacific railroad which you are constructing, and on which you are expending millions of money. Is this connection to be cut and this bridge to be taken down, although it has been built in good faith, and has been no obstruction to navigation as the facts prove; a bridge which, after a most careful examination by a committee of this body, has been reported to be no substantial or material interference with the navigation? Of course any bridge to some extent would be an interference with the navigation of the river. The placing of abutments in a river a mile wide, with a channel twenty feet wide, if you please, would be some obstruction, an obstruction to the extent of the space occupied by the abutments.

Now, it does seem to me that this amendment should not be adopted. If it is adopted it is destructive of the very object which has led these parties to apply to Congress. If I had time I would go into this whole question again; but I know how impatient the Senate is. We have settled the question that bridges are to be built, and now when we are pressed for time I do not feel at liberty to go over the general ground of discussion which came up in the Senate a year ago when this whole question was up, and the Senator from Missouri expressed his views somewhat at length upon it.

Mr. BROWN. I was not in my seat when the bill was called up, and did not anticipate that it would be called up to-day for discussion, and indeed I have not had access to any of the testimony that was submitted before the committee, and therefore am not prepared to discuss the more material points in connection with it which have been brought up here for comment; but I can say that so far as the case stands the objection to legalizing this construction has been so fully and so ably presented by my colleague, and indeed so exhaustively presented by him, that I do not deem it necessary to repeat anything that has been said in that connection, and I would not rise now even to add a remark except it were to enter a protest in behalf of those I represent against this action of Congress.

The city of St. Louis, which has been alluded to here, is not opposed, so far as its interests are concerned, to the construction of bridges across the Mississippi. On the contrary, there are many of its citizens who are now moving in that direction, and who deem that such structures are necessary to the development of the whole western country. But the city of St. Louis is also a point at which centers the commerce of the whole valley, and all the interests both above and below find their representation and find their expression at that point, and it is that expression which has protested against this structure being legalized. It is not simply the expression of merchants in the city of St. Louis, but it is the expression of those who are connected with that whole commerce up the Mississippi river who consider this as an obstruction, and who do not desire to see it legalized in this manner and at this time.

So far as the act of the last session of Congress is concerned, it seems to me very strange that the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, which had the subject then under consideration, which reviewed it carefully, and which came forward and presented limitations and provisos under which bridges would be safe across that stream, should now travel back across its own record and ask us to pass a bill to legalize a bridge which contravenes in essential particulars those safeguards which they presented to us for action and asked us to approve. I think their own action is the best answer to the present recommendation.

For my own part, it is known that I have been favorable to bridging the Mississippi and all the western streams. I do not participate in a great deal of the antipathy that is felt by many to any structures crossing those streams, whether that antipathy result from local jealousy or otherwise. I think it is a necessity of commerce and trade that we should have uninterrupted communication across that river at all points where it is practicable to effect it, and I think that legislation may perhaps be needed for further assisting in the construction of bridges even lower down than the city of St. Louis; but I do desire that in all legislation of that kind we may as far as practicable require that the corporations which enjoy this great privilege shall so construct them as not to interfere with the rights of others, and especially with such large interests as are involved in the commerce of that river. I think that the amendment which my colleague has offered touching the question of suits that are already pending is one eminently proper to be put upon this bill, and I hope the Senate will concur in it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. HENDERSON.]

Mr. HENDERSON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken resulted—yeas 9, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Creswell, Edmunds, Foster, Henderson, Johnson, McDougall, Nesmith, and Sumner—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Conness, Doolittle, Fessenden, Fowler, Hendricks, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Poland, Pomeroy, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Cowan, Cragin, Davis, Dixon, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Howard, Norton, Nye, Patterson, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, and Stewart—19.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken resulted—yeas 30, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Conness, Creswell, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Fowler, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, and Henderson—3.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cattell, Cowan, Cragin, Davis, Dixon, Edmunds, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Johnson, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Patterson, Riddle, and Saulsbury—19.

So the bill was passed.

DRAFTED MEN.

On motion by Mr. WILSON, the Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 811) for the relief of certain drafted men, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and

On motion by Mr. WILSON,

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. WILSON, Mr. COWAN, and Mr. NESMITH.

RIGHTS OF VOLUNTEERS.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, the Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 1134) declaring and fixing the rights of volunteers as a part of the Army, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and,

On motion of Mr. WILSON,

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of both Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. WILSON, Mr. HOWARD, and Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN.

COMPOUND-INTEREST NOTES.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1220) to provide ways and means for the payment of compound-interest notes; and it was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 607) to amend an act granting the right of way over the military reserve at Fort Gratiot, Michigan, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that the Senate take up bill No. 204, on which a House amendment is pending. The Committee on Finance desire that the Committee on Indian Affairs should be prepared on Saturday morning to proceed with the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill; and the decision of the Senate on the bill which I now propose to take up will materially affect our action, and indeed we cannot well proceed with the appropriation bill until some action is had on this. It is highly important that it should be considered and disposed of.

Mr. POLAND. From what little I know in reference to the course of proceeding, I understand that the bill which was under consideration last evening was the unfinished business of yesterday and was entitled to be taken up at one o'clock. It was so announced by the Chair; but another subject being under consideration at that time I did not desire to stand in the way of it, but consented that it be laid aside until the bill should be finished. I do not care now to have it taken up if we can have some time assigned for it and for other bills in my charge from the Committee on Patents. An evening was set last week for the consideration of business from that committee; it was postponed until last evening; last evening business from that committee was unfinished. If the Senate will consent that I shall have this evening to finish that business and also some other bills in my charge from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I shall be entirely content. I should be glad to have some time fixed when nobody else desires to do anything.

Mr. SUMNER. You will never find such a time.

Mr. POLAND. I move that we have an evening session this evening, commencing at half past seven o'clock, with the understanding that it is to be devoted to the business I have suggested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will entertain the motion of the Senator from Vermont if there be no objection.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that will not be done. It is impossible at this period of the session to assign any particular time for the consideration of particular business.

Mr. POLAND. If the Senator from Maine objects to that, I desire to know whether I am not now entitled to proceed with the bill which was under consideration last evening?

Mr. FESSENDEN. There will be no objection to the Senator taking up his bill as soon as the vote is taken on the bill called up by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope the course proposed by the Senator from Vermont will not be pursued. I do not believe the patents covered by his bills ought to be extended; it is introducing a new principle here to authorize the Commissioner to extend patents to parties who neglected to apply for an extension at the proper time, as prescribed by law.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not in order for the Senator from Vermont to move now to take up any other bill, if I am correctly informed of the state of the question. The Senator from Missouri moved to postpone all prior orders and take up a certain bill. I presume no other bill can be interposed until that motion is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Missouri is the one before the Senate.

Mr. BUCKALEW. In order to facilitate business, I move that we proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HENDERSON and Mr. SHERMAN. Let us first get through with this Indian bill.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Well, if we can get through with that bill in a short time I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 204) to provide for an annual inspection into Indian affairs, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Although I am in favor of the House amendment as it stands, yet the Committee on Indian Affairs having unanimously reported against it, it is idle for us to attempt to carry it. I therefore move that the Senate disagree to the House amendment, so that the bill may go back to the House, leaving it in their power to ask for a committee of conference if they want one. This course will expedite business. There is no use in wasting time upon the House amendment, because, being against the unanimous report of the Committee on Indian Affairs, it is idle to attempt to carry it at this stage of the session.

Mr. CONNESS. With all the respect I feel for the unanimous report of one of the standing committees, I am not prepared to believe that the Senate will not hear some testimony which is ready for presentation in favor of the proposition of transferring the management of Indian affairs to the War Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will appreciate the reason why I make this motion.

Mr. CONNESS. I do appreciate the reason.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have no time now to enter into an elaborate discussion, and the Senator from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, has himself informed us that at the next session of Congress the committee will take up the subject, with a disposition on his part at least to favor this measure. Under the circumstances it is worth while for us to consume important time in the discussion of a proposition about which there is a great difference of opinion; a proposition carried by a very close vote in the other House, and which, while the Military Committee reported for, the Committee on Indian Affairs reported against?

Mr. NESMITH. I beg to correct the Senator; both committees reported against it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Under these circumstances any consumption of time on the measure will I think only be wasted. We must have an executive session to-day. The condition of the executive business is such that it is necessary to have an executive session. If we dispose of this bill there will be no trouble in going into executive session and getting rid of the executive Calendar.

Mr. CONNESS. I am aware of and appreciate the reasons given by the honorable Senator as to the necessity of saving time; but, sir, there is something that strikes me as being fit to be stated, though I do not wish to open up a discussion. The honorable Senator from Oregon rises and reminds the Senator from Ohio that there is also a report from the Committee on Military Affairs against this proposition. Now, I should like to inquire whether that honorable Senator is not a member of both committees, and whether he did not vote in both on the proposition. I think the honorable Senator is not the only instance in which that has been done. It does happen that many Senators on the Committee on Indian Affairs are also members of the other committee, and it appears to me that upon this proposition they have had an opportunity to vote twice, and thus command the votes of two committees of this body.

Mr. NESMITH. With the permission of the Senator from California, as he has proposed the question, I will state to him that I am a member of both committees, and that I did vote in each committee against the proposition to transfer this bureau to the War Department; but if I had voted otherwise, and voted in favor of it, the majority in each committee would have been overwhelming against me, and it would not have changed the result.

Mr. CONNESS. There are other Senators in the honorable Senator's position; and while I am willing even to accept the proposition which has been made by the Senator from Ohio, I do not wish it to be said in the Senate that there are reports of two standing committees against the measure of the House upon its merits, and I would very much prefer that the Senators had contented themselves with one report on that subject. I think, as I suggested, there are other cases of Senators who are members of both committees, and this obtaining the reports of two standing committees against a proposition which I believe is a good one, a sound one, one that ought to be carried, is not exactly the thing.

Mr. NESMITH. I will state to the Senator that there is only one member of the Military Committee besides myself who is on the Indian Committee. There are two members who are on both committees. When the subject was under consideration in the Military Committee there was no other member of the Indian Committee present than myself, and if I had voted in favor of the proposition to transfer the Indian Bureau to the War Department it could not possibly have changed the result.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am opposed to the bill that was reported to the Senate from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and in favor of the amendment proposed by the House of Representatives; and I am not quite willing that this matter should be disposed of in the Senate in a summary way and without any discussion by a dissent from the House amendment, because that amounts to a judgment of the Senate against that amendment; and then the whole bill with the amendment will be referred to a committee of conference. I have heretofore had a good deal of confidence in conference committees; but recently my faith has been greatly shaken by statements made in the Senate by Senators; and in this matter, which I conceive to be one of great importance, I am not willing that a committee of conference should have the subject under consideration after the Senate has pronounced its judgment against the amendment proposed by the House of Representatives. If it be desirable to save time now, and if there be no other way, I wish to have this question left open until the next session; and I would prefer to make a motion to postpone the bill indefinitely. That will leave the Indian department in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. That will not change the condition of Indian affairs. But I do not wish that at this time a judgment of the Senate should be pronounced against the proposition to transfer the Indian Bureau to the War Department, for I am satisfied that it will be of great advantage to the country, and that that fact can be made to appear.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to suggest to the Senator that the course proposed by him will spare the expense of the commission contemplated by the bill, which, as I think, will be a waste of public means.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I submit a motion that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to say a word on this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is evident now that a debate is inevitable upon this question of postponement; I know Senators will debate it on both sides; and there is no use, at this stage of the session, in wasting time. I need not say that there is a pressure of business in executive session.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I hope my honorable friend from Ohio will allow me to say a single word. The Senate, after the fullest consideration at the last session, passed this bill, and deliberately voted down a proposition to transfer the Indian Bureau to the War Department. It is certainly no objection to the bill that the Committee on Indian Affairs have favored it, and that the Committee on Military Affairs also reported against the proposed transfer of the bureau.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think my motion is not debatable.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I am not going into the discussion of the question. It is no objection to the bill that two standing committees of this body have reported against the House amendment, and that a special committee raised by the two Houses of Congress unanimously reported the bill before the Senate after the fullest consideration, and that the Committees on Indian Affairs of the two Houses are unanimous in the support of the bill as the best practical measure to bring about a better administration of Indian affairs. It is surely no objection to the bill that these facts exist; and I say to my friend from Ohio that there are involved in the bill very great considerations, and it ought to be passed at this session and this day if possible. If no other gentleman wishes to go into the discussion of the merits of the bill I do not desire to do so.

Mr. BROWN. Certainly it will be discussed if it comes up.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the bill must be discussed, as a matter of course we may as well meet the discussion to-day as at any other time.

Mr. SHERMAN. The question is on my motion to go into executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the motion before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is debatable within certain limits, though it is difficult to define the precise limitations.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know from what Senators have said to me in regard to this matter that the discussion will consume a great deal of time, and I think we ought to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should be much obliged to the Senator from Ohio if he would not press his motion for an executive session until we dispose of this measure in some way.

Mr. SHERMAN. This motion will leave it as the unfinished business for to-morrow.

Mr. HENDERSON. I know it; but I desire to have a meeting of the Committee on Indian Affairs to-morrow to decide on the amendments to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill, and if we spend the day to-morrow discussing this measure in the Senate, of course the committee will not be able to take up the appropriation bill to-morrow morning and agree on the amendments. The Senator from Ohio, who has charge of that appropriation bill from the Committee on Finance, insists on it being taken up on Saturday, whether we be prepared or not. He has just put in my hands many recommendations from the Department, and I do not know how to consider them until we settle this question.

The suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio is, I think, the best one for the disposition of this subject; and that is to non-concur in the House amendment and let the bill go back to the House. Then, if the House want a committee of conference, let them ask for it; if they want the bill dropped, be it so, then I shall know to-morrow exactly what to do. The House can take it up and dispose of it to-morrow morning. I do not wish to consume the time of the Senate, and I will not take time now to discuss this measure. It is useless and unnecessary to do so; and I hope members of the Committee on Indian Affairs will not provoke discussion. I trust the Senate will adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, non-concur in the House amendment, and then if they ask for a conference we can settle the matter. We have no time now at the heel of the session to discuss these matters.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The motion of the Senator from Oregon to postpone the bill indefinitely, of course opens the whole subject. There is nothing gained by that. You might just as well act upon the bill and vote it down or pass it, because if we vote to postpone indefinitely that kills the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that; but I stated that my object was to adjourn the discussion until the next session.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Of course nothing is gained by such a motion: its adoption kills the bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the bill is not passed at this session it is killed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Of course; we understand that; and that is the object of the motion; but nothing is gained by such a motion. I would be entirely willing to assent to the proposition of the Senator from Ohio, and I should not have said a word if he had not alluded to a committee of conference in connection with this bill. I did not want it to go to the House of Representatives that the Senate desires a committee of conference in reference to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not allude to a committee of conference, except that I said that if we disagreed we could send the bill back to the House and they could ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator had left out his reference to a committee of conference and let the House understand the view of the Senate, I should have no objection to taking the course suggested by him. There seems to be a very great difference of opinion between the Senators from California and Oregon and other Senators here. I do not wish to open up any discussion in regard to the measure; but I object to going into executive session this afternoon, because I think we can get the vote quicker now than at any other time. If Senators will discuss it, let them discuss it to-day, and let us hold on to it until we finish it. I think we can soon get a vote. If the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from California insist upon discussing it, let them do so to-day. I do not know, however, that either of them does; and I think the Senator from California declined to discuss it further to-day. If we can get a vote on it soon, it will be much better than to delay it. I hope we shall not go into executive session until we dispose of it.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the motion to go into executive session will not be agreed to. It seems to me it is a bad economy of this very precious time of ours. We have this bill before us, and a suggestion has been made by the Senator from Ohio which promises to bring it, at least for the present, to a certain close. Why need it be discussed at this stage of the session when there are two committees of this body against it? I am for discussion always if there is any reasonable time, and if there is any chance of any practical result. Now we have not time, and there is no chance of any practical result. It seems to me that it should not be discussed now; we should not open that field. I therefore went with the Senator from Ohio when he proposed that we should return the bill to the House. Let us do that without any discussion, save our time, and then proceed with important matters that are on our Calendar. All the Senators about me have bills in their charge which they wish to press; I have.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Massachusetts will allow me to say that if we go into executive session any member can rise at any moment and move that the doors be opened, and that the Senate proceed with legislative business. If when we get into executive session, the Senator does not see the necessity for it he can at once move that the doors be opened.

Mr. SUMNER. We are all aware of the importance of an executive session, but then I think it is more important at present to get this bill out of the way.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let us occupy the next hour on this bill and see what we can do with it.

Mr. SUMNER. I think that better.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts comes with rather an ill grace from him, because, if I am not mistaken, he often discusses at great length in this body propositions of his own, when he knows that they will not receive more than half a dozen votes in this body. Now, he suggests that because two committees have reported against the House amendment to this bill there shall therefore be no discussion upon it. I do not know that it necessarily follows that a bill will pass because one committee or two committees favor its passage.

Now, sir, what is the great necessity for the passage of this bill? It simply creates eight or ten offices with salaries of $4,000 apiece, and multiplies the expenses and the officers of the Indian department. That is its only practical effect, and yet it is urged here as though the salvation of the country depended upon its passage. I say that I am not willing that the judgment of the Senate shall be taken at this time against the House amendment without discussion, although I am very unwilling to occupy the time of the Senate. This is a great question; it is a question upon which a conference committee cannot act, because it is a simple question as to whether the Interior Department or the War Department shall have the charge of Indian affairs. How can you compromise that. One or the other must necessarily recede from its position, and therefore it is a question that must be decided without a conference committee, and I do object to the judgment of the Senate being forced against the proposition to put the Indian affairs of the country under the control of the Military Department of the Government without discussion, because I have lived from my boyhood to this time in western States and Territories, where I have had an opportunity to see the working of the present system, and I am convinced that the Military Department ought to have the charge of Indian affairs.

Mr. WILSON. Eight years ago I voted in the Military Committee to report a bill to transfer the Indian Bureau to the War Department; I think since that time I have introduced two or three bills for that purpose, and my judgment has been in favor of that policy. The other day I introduced a bill which was prepared with the greatest possible care, not by myself, but by Colonel Parker, on General Grant's staff, in accordance with the report he made to General Grant. His bill was approved by General Grant and was in harmony with the report and the facts stated in it. That bill was taken up in the Military Committee; and as the House of Representatives had put this amendment on this bill, accomplishing the same purpose, it was suggested that that bill be indefinitely postponed. Some members of the committee who are in favor of the transfer assented to that suggestion, knowing that the question would come up on the House amendment to this bill; and hence the committee directed me to report against the bill I had introduced. I did so and it was indefinitely postponed.

So much for the action of the Committee on Military Affairs. Senators will see how much such action is worth, and to what extent it should influence the action of the Senate.

Mr. CONNESS. It is not worth anything.

Mr. WILSON. That is my opinion. Now, I wish simply to say that this is a great question; it is a question that ought to be discussed two or three days in the Senate, and that ought not to go to a committee of conference. We have no time to discuss it now, and I do not think it ought to be forced to a vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to suggest that this is a business question. The question is not now on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, and although the motion is nominally debatable, the rule requires that debate should be restricted to reasons why the Senate should or should not go into executive session.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion, because it is a defeat of this measure.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I beg that my honorable friend from Illinois and other friends of the bill will not say that going into executive session to-day defeats the bill. It leaves it as the unfinished business, and to-morrow at one o'clock I shall insist upon this bill being taken up and a vote being had upon it. If the Senate now go into executive session, I do not look upon that as any defeat of the bill. It has been announced by the Finance Committee that the Indian appropriation bill is to be taken up on Saturday, and it is well understood that that bill cannot be acted on until this bill is disposed of. I hope my honorable friend will not regard the mere question of going into executive session as a test question on the bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is most manifest that if the Senate gives this bill the go-by to-day the Senator from Wisconsin will not be able to get it concluded to-morrow. It is now but a few minutes after three o'clock. We all understand that we may as well go into executive session an hour hence as now. Let us see what is to become of this bill; and if there is not strength enough to pass the Senate bill, let us agree to the House amendment, and dispose of the question. It should not be left in the condition it now is. The last thing to do is to do nothing. I think it important that we should act upon the bill. I shall abstain from discussing it myself at any considerable length, although I have very decided opinions in regard to the matter; and I hope the Senate will decide now on this vote, which is not a debatable question to any extent, whether we are to consider this bill at this session. I shall regard it as decided by this vote.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I shall vote to go into executive session; but I object to the test stated by the Senator from Illinois.

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted—yeas 24, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Creswell, Dixon, Edmunds, Essenden, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Harris, Johnson, Morgan, Patterson, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Van Winkle, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Doolittle, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Lane, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Ross, Sumner, Trumbull, and Yates—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Cowan, Cragin, Davis, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Guthrie, Kirkwood, McDougall, Norton, Nye, Poland, Riddle, Saulsbury, and Wade—15.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After an hour and a half spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and the Senate took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven and a half o'clock p. m.

JOSHUA H. BUTTERWORTH.

Mr. WILLEY. The Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom was referred the petition of Joshua H. Butterworth, praying for an extension of his patent for his improvement in bank and safe locks, have instructed me to submit a report accompanied by a bill for his relief, and to ask that the bill may be put on its passage at the present time if there be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia asks that the bill now reported by him may be considered at the present time. It requires the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider it at this time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the title of the bill be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is entitled to be read once, as it is a report from a committee.

The bill (S. No. 620) for the relief of Joshua H. Butterworth was read a first time by its title, and passed to a second reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WILLEY. It will not take a moment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The unfinished business is the Indian bill, but if this bill will give rise to no discussion I have no objection to the unfinished business being laid aside informally to allow it to be passed.

Mr. WILLEY. If it leads to discussion I will withdraw it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If it can be considered informally, I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No objection being made, the bill will be read.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is with that understanding that the Indian bill is laid aside informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No objection being made to the consideration of the bill it will be read. If any objection is made the bill will not be read.

The bill was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Commissioner of Patents to proceed upon, determine, and decide the application of Joshua H. Butterworth, for an extension of his patent for an improvement in safe and bank locks the same as though the patent had not been extended once already; and the Commissioner is to examine the application and decide upon it on the same evidence and in the same manner as in other cases where extensions of patents are applied for, and without regard to the time when the application is made.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TENURE OF OFFICE OF JUDGE ADVOCATES.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1130) to amend section twelve chapter two hundred and ninety-nine of the laws of the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, to report it without amendment; and as it is a bill of but one section of eleven lines, I should like to have it put upon its passage now. It will not take a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the bill on the day it is reported.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the title of the bill be read for information.

The Secretary read the title of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am obliged to ask for the reading of the whole bill. The title does not indicate what it means.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted &c., That the last clause of section twelve, of chapter two hundred and ninety-nine, of the laws of first session Thirty-Ninth Congress, approved July 23, 1866, is hereby amended by repealing all after and including the words "until otherwise provided by law," so as to place the judge advocates thereby authorized to be retained in service upon the same footing in respect to tenure of office and otherwise as other officers of the Army of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have no objection if it is understood that the unfinished business is laid aside informally, and that this bill will not lead to debate. If it does, I shall insist on proceeding with the unfinished business.

Mr. WILSON. This will not take any time.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not know how much this bargain will affect—

Mr. WILSON. I make no bargain.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. There is no bargain.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment; ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY WAGON-ROAD IN OREGON.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have a little bill that I should like to put on its passage. It is a House bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands without amendment, and it will take but a minute or two to pass it. I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration. It is House bill No. 910.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. No. 910) granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon-road from Dalles City, on the Columbia river, to Fort Boise, on the Snake river.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I am apprehensive that that bill may lead to some discussion and displace the unfinished business of the morning. The Senator from Oregon will understand that I have no disposition to interfere with him. If the bill can be passed without any discussion whatever I make no objection.

Mr. NESMITH. I do not suppose the present bill will lead to any discussion. It has passed the House and been reported without amendment by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think there will be any debate upon it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Then by common consent the unfinished business can lay aside informally, and let this bill be acted upon if it will lead to no discussion. If it does, I shall call for the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I understand that it is by unanimous consent that this bill is taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair puts the question to the Senate. He does not understand that there is any division asked for, and the Chair announces that the Senate vote to proceed to the consideration of the bill. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, which proposes to grant to the State of Oregon, to aid in the construction of a military wagon-road from Dalles City, on the Columbia river, by way of Camp Watson, Cañon City, and Mormon or Humboldt Basin, to a point on Snake river opposite Fort Boise, in Idaho Territory, alternate sections of public lands, designated by odd numbers, to the extent of three sections in width on each side of the road; to be exclusively applied to the construction of the road, and to no other purpose; and to be disposed of only as the work progresses.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to inquire of my friend from Oregon how much land is covered by this grant; how many acres?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not able to state, but I can state that the road is to be constructed through the mountains and the desert, and I presume all the land that can be seen on the route of this road is not worth enough to pay for surveying it. If there is any valuable land there I do not know where it is. It is simply to build a road from the Columbia river out toward Idaho, through the mountainous and desert part of Oregon. There may be along the road some valleys that will be of some value; but the land generally in that vicinity is not worth anything except for mineral purposes. I cannot state how much land this grant embraces.

Mr. POMEROY. Where the lands are not occupied by reservations, and where they are not occupied by settlers, there will be three sections to the mile. The distance I do not know precisely; but there are three sections to the mile where the land is not occupied as reservations or by preëmptors.

Mr. NESMITH. The distance is about three hundred and fifty miles, and there are three sections of land to the mile granted. I will say that a portion of the way the land is covered by an Indian reservation; that all the country intervening in this three hundred and fifty miles, or nearly all, is an arid and sterile region, and I do not think the land to-day would sell for ten cents an acre. It is through an unsettled portion of the country, connecting the navigable point on the Columbia river with the great mining region. It is necessary that the country should be opened up in order to facilitate communication between the navigable waters of the Columbia and this great mining region lying east. The land has been opened to preëmption, that which is not covered by occupancy for the last twenty years, and I do not think there are twenty sections of it that have ever been taken up. It might have been taken either under the homestead law or under the donation to actual settlers. The land is comparatively valueless. It is thought that it can be used probably in the construction of this road and the opening up of the country so as to facilitate settlement. It is a country entirely destitute of timber, and the only purpose for which it is valuable is grazing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is very unusual I think to pass bills of this description without a report from the Department of the Interior or the Commissioner of the General Land Office as to the extent, location, and so on, of the land granted; but I am not disposed to quarrel with this bill on that ground. I should be glad to be informed by the chairman of the committee or by my friend from Oregon whether there is in this bill the usual exception of mineral lands.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir; it expressly excepts all mineral lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like the Secretary to read that clause in the bill.

The Secretary read the following proviso to the first section:

And provided further, That the grant hereby made shall not embrace any mineral lands of the United States.

Mr. POMEROY. Bills of this character, I will state for the information of the Senator from Vermont, are all drawn from one model. Wherever there is anything reported from the committee that has not been passed by the Senate in previous land grants, we always make an express statement to that effect, because we have one model and one system for all land-grant roads that have passed this body within the last four or six years. They all contain precisely the same grant in the same form.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will state, for the information of the Senator from Kansas, to reciprocate his courteous information to me, that as far as my observation has gone there has been another model, and that is, that we do not grant lands until we know from the Land Office how much and what they are; and therefore on principle this bill ought not to pass until the Senate is officially informed of the extent and location of these lands; but, as I said before, I believe personally that this particular bill is a fair and just one from what I know in general about it, although I was not present in committee when it was considered, and so I am not disposed to object to the bill on that ground; but I should not wish it to be used as a precedent for granting away the public lands when we do not know how much or what they are.

Mr. POMEROY. These land grants extend over the unsurveyed lands of the United States, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office knows as little about the unsurveyed lands of the United States as I do. He has no means of knowing. When the bill defines how many sections per mile is conveyed nobody knows how many acres are granted any better than the Senate do who pass the bill. You can get nothing in the Land Office on that subject.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 965) declaring Clinton bridge, across the Mississippi river at Clinton, in the State of Iowa, a post route; and that it had passed the bill of the Senate (S. No. 283) for the relief of Edward St. Clair Clarke.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1188) for the relief of James Tetlow; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 297) instructing the Secretary of the Interior to order a survey for a bridge or bridges across the Potomac.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I now desire to proceed with the unfinished business, which is Senate bill No. 204.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope the Senator will allow me to call up a couple of bills that have passed the House of Representatives and been reported by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. This bill has passed the Senate and House of Representatives both, and is now pending on a disagreement between the two Houses, and it is very important that the question should be acted upon, as the Indian appropriation bill is behind it, and it is necessary to act upon this bill before that is acted upon.

Mr. POMEROY. The State of Tennessee did not accept their land grant for an agricultural college within the time required. They were not represented in Congress. I have here a joint resolution which has passed the House merely extending the time to enable the State of Tennessee to accept the agricultural college land grant, and there is nothing else in it. The State was in no condition to accept it before. This resolution has passed the House and is in the Senate, and it will take but a moment to pass it through the Senate, and thus enable the State of Tennessee to accept that land grant.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. That is a measure that can be called up at any time. We shall soon dispose of this bill and then we can take that up afterward. I have no objection to that resolution. My courtesy and good nature in yielding first to the right and then to the left I fear will absolutely destroy all the chance I have to get the unfinished business proceeded with before the Senate.

Mr. CONNESS. I rise for information. I desire to inquire whether there is such a thing as unfinished business having precedence now or not? Have we not proceeded to business, and is there such a thing as unfinished business before the Senate at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks, strictly, there is; still the Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him, and the Chair was about to put the motion when debate began upon it.

Mr. CONNESS. I have no objection to that; but when it is put I hope the bill will not be taken up.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If it is necessary that I should, under the circumstances, make a motion and take the sense of the Senate, I will take the sense of the Senate. This bill was under consideration yesterday, and gave way for the reconstruction bill. It is understood generally that it is important that it should be disposed of. It was before the Senate to-day as unfinished business when we went into executive session; and when any person has proceeded to take up any measure this evening it has been by unanimous consent as I have understood, for I distinctly stated every time that a measure has been proposed that I yielded informally with the unanimous consent of the Senate if it would lead to no debate. If I had supposed that I was allowing this bill to lose its place, I should have objected to every measure presented here. That was my understanding.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I deem it proper to say that was my understanding also. I understood the measure I called up was taken up informally.

Mr. POMEROY. The last measure was taken up by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I hope the Senate will consider this as unfinished business and let us go on with it.

Mr. MORRILL. Call for it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have called for it, but I understand the Chair to intimate that it is necessary to make a motion to take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator as making a motion, and was about putting the motion to the Senate.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator from Wisconsin has not made any motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood him to make a motion. If he withdraws it, that of course ends it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I may have been so understood by the Chair. My intention was to call up the unfinished business.

Mr. POMEROY. I submit that he can call up the unfinished business only by a motion.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. This bill was pending when we went into executive session. My friend from California raises the point whether it is unfinished business. We will not get into a discussion about that; but as the shortest way to it I will take the sense of the Senate.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that the Senate proceed—

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not yield the floor to a motion to displace my bill.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Make your motion.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will inquire of the Chair if the Chair understands that this is the unfinished business. If it is not, then I submit a motion to take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that it was unfinished business, but still would prefer to submit the question to a vote of the Senate.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Then I will take the sense of the Senate. I move to take up the unfinished business.

Mr. CONNESS. Upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BROWN. I ask that the bill may be reported that the Senator calls for, that we may hear what it is.

The Secretary read the title of the bill as follows:

A bill (S. No. 204) to provide for an annual inspection into Indian affairs, and for other purposes.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senate will not proceed with the consideration of this bill tonight. First, the Senate is thin, and it is perhaps one of the most important bills that has been presented during the session. I can well understand the disposition there is on the part of some Senators to consider this bill, if it is to be considered at all, before what is called the Indian appropriation bill shall be considered, but I very much prefer that the Indian appropriation bill shall be considered without any reference to this measure. What is it that we propose to consider? A bill to establish, I do not know how many, something less than a score of additional offices in connection with the management of Indian affairs, to add to the present enormous expenditure; to put a new set of agents and superintendents watching and superintending over those that exist, and to give them large salaries, thousands of dollars; as has been well described, to select one as a military officer, another from the religious denominations of the country, and some civilian, and to set aside in doing that the important and able reports that have been made by our great military commanders. At this very moment, when our military posts on the western frontiers are being captured and general disorder exists under the present administration of Indian affairs, we are called upon not simply to perpetuate it, but to increase the number of officers under the present system. Now, Mr. President, it appears to me we ought to wait until we have at least a full Senate to consider it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do not discuss its merits on the question of taking it up.

Mr. CONNESS. Well, Mr. President, I will say to the Senator behind me that I have no disposition to discuss the merits of the case more than to present the importance of the issue that we have before us. I am very free to say that this bill cannot pass, if I can hinder it, until it is discussed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I agree to that; but do not discuss it in the mean time.

Mr. POMEROY. I should not object to the consideration of the bill indicated in the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin in a full Senate and at the proper time; but this evening it was very generally understood that some miscellaneous matters could be attended to that do not and cannot command the attention of the Senate during the day. The Committee on Military Affairs have had an evening; the Committee on Pensions, the Committee on Patents, and the Committee on the District of Columbia have also had evenings assigned to them; and the Committee on Public Lands have a few bills which have passed the House of Representatives which they thought the Senate might perhaps consider this evening and pass. I submit to the Senator from Wisconsin whether it would not be at least fair to allow those bills to arrest the attention of the Senate for a few moments this evening. I do not suppose any of them will require the least discussion; but they have passed the House, and there are great interests at stake in their passing the Senate at the present session. This joint resolution in relation to Tennessee has to pass the Senate, if it pass at all, with an amendment; and that amendment will carry it back to the House of Representatives, and it will fail entirely unless it reaches the House at an earlier day than it will be likely to reach it if it is put off beyond this evening. I think that the Senator from Wisconsin should at least leave such a bill of the character I have named to pass the body. I cannot conceive of a reason why he should want to resist the passage of such a bill and others of the same character, that cannot occupy the attention of the Senate more than a few moments; and by that time the Senate might be fuller than it now is, and we could proceed to the consideration of the bill in which he feels an interest, and which he knows very well I intend to support. With this view of the matter, I thought he would at least allow the Senate to be occupied by these bills for a few minutes. Then I did not understand how the Senator from Wisconsin had particularly the management of that bill, which was reported by the chairman of the Indian Committee; and I cannot understand why he particularly should call it up.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. This bill was reported first by a special committee appointed by the two Houses of Congress, of which I had the honor of being chairman. It was submitted also to the Committee on Indian Affairs at a time when, to a certain extent, the responsibility of that committee was thrown upon me. It passed at the last session of the Senate; it went to the House of Representatives; it has come back here with an amendment; and as between the honorable chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs at the present time and myself there has been an understanding in relation to this bill that I should try to get it before the Senate, I certainly have had no intention to take any responsibility which does not belong to me in relation to this bill. I suppose that I have some responsibility in connection with it, being still upon the Committee on Indian Affairs, and having had charge of the bill heretofore.

Now, sir, in the course of the day, during the afternoon and morning, several speeches have been made by gentlemen in opposition to the bill as it passed the Senate, and not one word has been said by one of its friends. I shall not go into its discussion now. I only say to gentlemen that I agree entirely with the Senator from California that it is a very important bill. It contains within itself the elements of saving more millions and tens of millions of dollars to this Government than any bill that has ever been devised in relation to Indian affairs. It is a bill which has no connection whatever with politics. For once politics can be eschewed and we can discuss the thing upon its merits and with a view to economy to the Government and humanity toward the Indian tribes and toward ourselves. I shall not go into the merits of it. I say it is important. If the Senate are willing to take up this question, as the honorable Senator from California suggests, in the day time to-morrow, I am perfectly willing to agree to that. I have no disposition to press the bill against other business; but, sir, you know very well how it was on yesterday. I took it up and it was pressed aside by this reconstruction bill which came from the House. The whole of yesterday and last night was occupied. This bill was called up to-day, and upon a motion to go into executive session it was put aside. It was the unfinished business; and if it has lost its place to-night as unfinished business, it was not because I intended it should lose its place, but because I said, in courtesy to other gentlemen around me who desired to take up bills, that I was willing it should stand aside informally to accommodate them if they would not involve us in any discussion. The Chair supposed from this course of proceeding that this bill had lost its place as unfinished business; and this is the position in which I now stand.

I am not to be charged as not trying to call this up in a full Senate. I wish every Senator were here. I have some facts to present to Senators, and I should be glad to have the ear of every Senator, the Senator from California as well as every other. The facts which I wish to present to him, which have no connection with any possible political question, for this bill seeks to get rid of politics in the administration of our Indian affairs and to organize a system which shall be tempered with humanity, with firmness, with justice, and at the same time have some regard for that race with which we are dealing—

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator excuse me if I inquire why these frequent allusions to political matters? Does he mean to intimate that I am influenced by political considerations in this connection?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Not at all, sir.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I say this: I say to the honorable Senator, almost all important legislation which comes up here, more or less, has some political question or bearing which has disturbed the Senate for a long time. This measure, as I humbly trust, as I believe, as I hope, has nothing of the sort in it, and we can discuss it on its merits whenever we get to it, and pass upon its merits. That is precisely the situation. I am perfectly indifferent; it is just as the Senate chooses, to have it to-night or to-morrow. For myself I would rather every Senator would be in his seat when the facts are to be presented.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would correct an error he made in his suggestion to the Senator from Wisconsin. The Chair decided that this bill was not unfinished business. The Chair understood it to be the unfinished business; but he saw that there was difference of opinion among Senators on the subject, and he preferred therefore to submit the question on motion to the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. I think the Senator from Wisconsin is taking an unfair advantage in endeavoring to bring this bill up at this time. If my recollection serves me, he distinctly gave notice to-day, when a vote was taken on going into executive session, which was considered a test vote on this subject, that he would move to take this bill up at one o'clock to-morrow. I will say further that there are Senators who desire to discuss this bill who are not now present, and that it would be injustice to them to take it up in their absence—gentlemen who are very much opposed to it, who believe it will be a great disaster instead of a benefit, as the Senator contends. For my own part, I am free to say that I think the whole system of Indian affairs, as it has been managed under the Interior Department, has been the cause of more slaughter, has been the cause of more expenditure to the Government, three times over, than would have been the case had it been under the authority of the Secretary of War. All the wars nearly and all the encroachments that we have had, and all the murders we have had on the border, have been owing to the policy which has been pursued since this bureau has been under the Interior Department. That is my deliberate conviction, founded upon a more intimate knowledge, perhaps, of these Indian relations than is possessed by many other Senators here present.

In the remarks that have been made reference has been made to the action of the Military Committee, of which I am a member. I do not think there is any authority for quoting here the action of that committee as favoring this bill at all. When the question came up in committee it was simply a question whether we should act on the bill referred to us by the Senator from Massachusetts; and it was stated in explanation that a provision transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department was attached by the House of Representatives to this bill, and therefore there was no longer any necessity for acting upon that measure then before us. And it was so reported, and its indefinite postponement moved for that reason, and that without any special discussion before the committee, and when the committee was not full. I say, therefore, there is no authority for claiming that it was a full expression of the Military Committee on this subject. When the question comes up properly for discussion I may have something further to say about the bill; but I think at the present time to take it up would be doing injustice to those who desire to be heard on the question.

Mr. WADE. I consider this one of the most important questions we have had before us for a long time. I do not think at this period we are quite well enough informed to decide it as we should. There is another session close by when we shall not be limited by time, when we can take it up and debate and settle it intelligently. Now, in order to endeavor to get rid of this debate, which I perceive will prevent the transaction of all other business this evening, I move to lay on the table this motion to take up the bill; and that will be a test question whether we are willing to go on with it or not.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to reply to some statements made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Brown] in relation to the facts which transpired this afternoon. Will the Senator from Ohio withdraw his motion for that purpose?

Mr. WADE. I withdraw it if there is anything personal to be said; but I shall renew it again.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The Senator from Missouri I think confounded something that may have been said by the Senator from Illinois, not now in his seat, [Mr. TRUMBULL] with what I said. It is true that when the motion was made to go into executive session, the Senator from Illinois said that that would be a test question upon the bill; but the Senate will remember that I rose immediately and protested that I should not regard it as a test question; but that if we went into executive session this matter would come up to-morrow at one o'clock. This I said; but at that time the Senate had not determined to have an evening session. It was before we determined to take a recess, and when we went into executive session, in view of the large amount of business on the executive Calendar, it was supposed that business would take up the whole day, and that instead of meeting this evening we should adjourn till to-morrow, and in that view I said that I would call up the bill to-morrow as the unfinished business.

Now, Mr. President, a word in relation to what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WADE] has just said about our not having time to consider this bill. This bill was reported a year and a half ago; it was fully and elaborately discussed in the Senate, and on due deliberation it was passed and sent to the other House. The House of Representatives have returned it with an amendment, and we are just as well prepared to act upon it now as we ever shall be. I deem it of exceeding importance, that the bill of the Senate should become a law. As I said before, I do not wish to take it up when there is a thin Senate; I am willing to go on with it to-night or to-morrow; but I think it is fairly and properly the unfinished business. If we had not had an evening session it would come up as the unfinished business to-morrow, and I think it is now the proper unfinished business of the Senate. We could have proceeded far in its discussion but for this continued debate as to what we shall do.

Mr. WADE. I renew my motion, in order to test the sense of the Senate whether they will go on with this or some other bill. I move to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CONNESS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Frelinghuysen, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Ross, Sherman, Sumner, Wade, Williams, and Wilson—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Henderson, Hendricks, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Patterson, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, and Van Winkle—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Johnson, Lane, McDougall, Norton, Nye, Poland, Riddle, Saulsbury, Stewart, Trumbull, Willey, and Yates—21.

So the motion was not laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope the Senate will take up the bill and dispose of it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 18, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fogg, Foster, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Patterson, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sprague, and Van Winkle—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Conness, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Sherman, Sumner, Wade, Williams, and Wilson—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cattell, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Dixon, Fessenden, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Guthrie, Johnson, Lane, McDougall, Norton, Nye, Poland, Riddle, Saulsbury, Stewart, Trumbull, Willey, and Yates—22.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 204) to provide for an annual inspection into Indian affairs, and for other purposes.

Mr. HENDERSON. Without taking up the time of the Senate, I will state, as I have previously stated, that last summer when this bill was first presented I felt very favorable to the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. I thought then it would be the better policy; but when I was called upon to examine the question this winter, in the face of the facts existing in the Territories, I came to the conclusion, as did all the other members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, that it would be impolitic just now to make the change, whatever might be desirable in the future.

I hold in my hand the earnest protest of eight of the nine delegates representing the Territories of the United States in the other House against this transfer. They earnestly protest against it, believing that it would be prejudicial to the interests of the people there in the face of the present threatened difficulties with the Indians. I will state also for the information of the Senate that we have the protest I believe of almost every chief, if not of every chief, of the Indians now represented here in the city. There are a great many Indian chiefs here, and I believe they all, without an exception, signed a protest and sent it to the committee against the proposed change.

Whatever may be the best policy in the future, they believe at present that it is a declaration of war against them. They seem so to regard it; and in the light of surrounding circumstances the committee thought it advisable at present not to insist upon the change.

Now, Mr. President, some Senators say that if we non-concur in the House amendment it is a declaration that the Senate is in all time opposed to the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. I do not so regard it. I, as one member of the committee, will not look upon it as a declaration of the Senate that under ordinary circumstances they would be opposed to the change. I shall simply look upon it as a declaration that now, in the present condition of the country, it is unadvisable to make the change. I have no very strong feeling about the matter in any way. I do not desire at this period of the session to take up the time of the Senate. I hope that the proposed action will be had, that we shall non-concur with the House amendment, and let the bill go back to the House, and then they can take further action. I ask the Chair if it is in order to submit a motion that the Senate non-concur in the House amendment. I suppose that really makes no difference, however, whether the vote is taken on a motion in that form or on the vote of concurrence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be put affirmatively, Will the Senate concur? A vote in the negative will be in fact a vote to non-concur.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope we shall take the vote without further discussion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I regret that the Senator in charge of this bill feels bound to force it to a passage this evening, or to insist upon a final vote at this time, because there are several Senators absent who feel a deep interest in the question involved, and who I am confident did not expect that it would come up this evening. It seems to me that when it is proposed to consider legislation of this importance in the evening, notice ought to be given beforehand, so that Senators will understand what the business will be. As we very well know the evenings are ordinarily set apart for the transaction of business from committees that is not considered of any great importance; but there seems to be a disposition to hurry this bill through the Senate, and we are urged to pass it without any discussion, although everybody admits that it is one of the most important measures that has been before Congress this session.

It is represented here, as one reason why this amendment from the House should be rejected by the Senate, that the Indians suppose it is a declaration of war against them. Now, sir, if the Indians are so stupid, if they know so little about this measure as to believe that it is a declaration of war against them, then they can be induced to sign any paper to be presented here to the Senate without knowing what its contents are; and how this paper was procured from these Indians, what representations were made to them, what inducements were held out to them to sign it, I am not advised, but certainly it is no very great evidence that their statements or understanding should have influence with the Senate when they have been induced to suppose that the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department is a declaration of war against them, when it amounts simply to the restoration of the Bureau to the Department of the Government to which it formerly belonged.

Reference has also been made to what the Delegates from the Territories say. Well, sir, they may know more about Indian affairs than other people do; but I am not willing to admit it, and it is a fact not to be disguised that more or less influence is brought to bear upon this question, in connection with the Indian agencies and Indian superintendencies and the numberless offices which the present system provides for persons, to say nothing of the stealings of the system which now disgrace the service of the country. I am fully persuaded, although I suppose it is perfectly useless at this time to discuss the question, that the interests of the country require the change which this amendment from the House of Representatives proposes; and I am unalterably opposed to the passage of the bill which was reported by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, and in lieu of which the House have proposed this amendment.

It is said that great abuses have sprung up in the administration of Indian affairs; that the officers connected with the system are corrupt; and the remedy proposed by the original bill is simply a multiplication of the officers connected with that branch of the administration of the Government. Here are the sub-Indian agents; here are the Indian agents; here are the superintendents of Indian affairs, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and, as the final head, the Secretary of the Interior. Besides all these officers, commissioners are frequently appointed by the Secretary of the Interior to examine into the affairs of the Indians in different portions of the country, and committees are appointed by Congress to investigate Indian affairs, and hundreds of men are now employed in the examination into and management of Indian affairs. This bill proposes, as a remedy for all the evils of the system, and in order to prevent future corruption, to create ten or twelve new offices, at salaries of $4,000 a year apiece, and thus add to the expenses of the present system, and present a greater temptation to corruption.

The bill proposes to divide the vast Indian territory of this country into five districts, and three persons are to constitute a board to inspect Indian affairs in each district; and it is provided that they shall visit the different superintendencies and the different Indian tribes and make an examination into the management and conduct of the different officers connected with the Indian Department. We all know how such things are managed. These men will go about the country; they will see the superintendents; they will talk with the Indian agents; they will perform some little service in that way; but the effect will be nothing so far as the Indians are concerned. The difficulties which we have with the Indians are unavoidable, and grow out of the nature of things. You may appoint as many Indian agents, superintendents, and inspectors as you please; but just as long as the white people of this country and the Indians are brought in contact, just so long there will be difficulties between them. They are unavoidable, and there is no remedy for them, because the Indians can see that the advance of the whites into their territory is their destruction. They are wasting away before the advancement of civilization and the white race. They are conscious of that fact, and they are struggling in their way to save themselves from destruction, and there is a state of war between them and the whites, and there always will be. It may not always amount to open hostilities; but there is and always will be between the white people and the Indians of this nation a state of war; and the only way that peace can be preserved, the only way that the Indians can be prevented from committing depredations upon the whites, the only way that the Indians can be protected from the encroachments of vicious white men, is by a military organization. The inspectors that this bill proposes will have no more power to prevent Indian disturbances than the present corps of officers connected with the Indian department.

It seems to me that the advantages of turning over the Indian Bureau to the War Department are manifest. In the first place—I know it is the case in Oregon—wherever there is a reservation, and our Indian agent is appointed with his employes to take care of the Indians upon the reservation, it is necessary to have a military force there to keep the Indians from killing the agent and his employes, or at any rate to preserve the peace between the Indian agent and his employes and the Indians upon the reservation.

Mr. NESMITH. Permit me to correct my colleague. There are five reservations in Oregon and eight in Washington Territory, and there is no soldier about any of those reservations except one. The whole administration is in the hands of farmers and practical men; there are no troops about them.

Mr. POMEROY. There are ten reservations in my State, and not a military post connected with them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know that the superintendent of Indian affairs in Oregon has telegraphed to me several times since I have been here, urging me to apply to the War Department to provide troops for certain reservations in Oregon, and declaring that unless troops were provided and put upon those reservations a difficulty would be inevitable between the whites and the Indians upon those reservations. I do not know that it is so in all the reservations, but I know it is so in some reservations in Oregon, that troops are kept in readiness in the immediate neighborhood for use in case any difficulty should occur between the Indians upon those reservations and the white people.

Moreover, the great complaint against the present Indian system is the corruption that has grown up in the administration of Indian affairs; and it seems to me that if the military be substituted for the present system these corruptions will be greatly prevented. It is a fact well known, and I presume my colleague will not controvert this assertion, that the Indian agents in Oregon with hardly an exception, upon a salary of $1,500 a year, manage in three or four years to become immensely rich. I know two or three of the Indian agents in Oregon who held office there under the administration of Mr. Buchanan, and at the expiration of the four years were possessed of from fifty to sixty thousand dollars in gold, and took it and carried it South and used it in promoting the cause of the southern confederacy. So far as I am acquainted with the facts generally, it does happen that in some way or other the Indian agents, notwithstanding their salaries appear to be limited, manage to amass large fortunes out of the use of the public funds. And where is there any responsibility? There is none. Suppose an Indian agent by his management acquires a fortune of twenty-five or thirty or fifty thousand dollars, and his corruption is established and he is discharged from office, what does he care for the action of the department here? He has made his fortune: he is content. But if a military officer is made responsible for the administration of Indian affairs, under the same circumstances charges can be preferred against him and he be put upon his trial before a court-martial; and if it be ascertained upon trial that he has been guilty of corruption or fraud he is cashiered, discharged, and disgraced. If there be no other consideration connected with the military service, there is at least that inducement on the part of a military man to administer the affairs in an honest and upright way.

I understand that one great reason for making the proposed change is to save the enormous expense to the country which the present Indian system devolves upon us; and this expense is growing, and everywhere throughout all the country where there are any Indians it is becoming a crying and a gigantic evil, and there ought to be some remedy provided for it by law. A remedy is proposed in this bill:

that the President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, nominate some civilian; that the Secretary of War shall detail an officer of the Army; and then that the religious denominations of the country shall nominate persons to the President, and out of the number they nominate he shall select some person. So we are to have a preacher and a soldier and a politician traveling around through these Indian regions together. How they are to cooperate I do not understand. I suppose that the preacher is to attend to the religious and moral interests of the Indians, while the soldier fights them and compels them to submit to the authority of the United States; and as to the part which the politician is to play upon this board I do not know, unless it is to preside and give it dignity and receive his $4,000 a year. This board is to be invested with judicial powers. The bill authorizes them to send for witnesses, to institute courts wherever they see proper, and in that way they are empowered to make as much expense to the country as they please, and nobody can tell to what this expense will amount. They will undoubtedly, judging from our past experience, accumulate enormous sums. If it be desirable, if the object of legislation on the part of Congress be to save expense, to reduce the millions upon millions which are every year paid out in order to maintain this Indian system, it seems to me that it is pursuing the wrong policy to commence by multiplying offices and adding to salaries. On the contrary, the offices should be reduced, the system should be put under military discipline and regulation, and in that way there is some chance, some possibility of reducing the expenses of the Indian department of this country.

These are some of the considerations which influence me to oppose the bill that has been proposed by the Senate committee, and to favor the amendment that has been submitted by the House of Representatives. It seems to be generally conceded by those who were acquainted with the management of this system when it was in charge of the War Department that it was more economically managed than it is under the present arrangement. We are called upon here every year to make appropriations of millions of dollars to make what is called peace with the Indians, to make treaty stipulations with them, and what is the effect? Is there any peace with the Indians? There is all the time a state of war, and troops must be placed in different positions in the Indian country for the sake of keeping them in subjection, keeping them in such a condition that they cannot commit depredations; and notwithstanding all the diligence of those who are employed under the existing Administration and all the efforts made by the troops, it is well known that everywhere upon our frontier outrages are being constantly committed by the Indians, and I think experience has demonstrated to the country by this time that there is no way in which the peace of the country can be preserved, in which the frontiers can be protected, in which the emigrants across the plains and the pioneers on the western borders can be protected, except by the exercise of military power.

You cannot persuade these Indians by anything you may give them in the way of money or presents. You may temporarily produce a state of quiet; but the difficulty lies in the fact that they see, as the white man advances, as he takes possession of their country, as he drives them back, that it is a matter of extermination with them; and they are trying in their way to protect themselves from destruction. You may send your preachers and your officers and your politicians to the Indian as much as you please, but unless they are accompanied with a military force there will be no effect produced. The Indians respect the power of the United States. Indian delegations are brought here from different portions of the country and they are impressed with the greatness of the United States and the futility of fighting the white men of this country. Such considerations influence the Indians; such considerations induce them to keep the peace. When they become satisfied that the power of the United States is irresistible, when they are convinced that it is utterly useless for them to contend against that power, they will be quiet; but any effort to make them quiet by talking to them, by sending some smooth-tongued preacher, or some officer without any power, or some politician who may be appointed to talk with them, will be all in vain. These expedients are now employed. The superintendents and Indian agents in the Indian country are constantly engaged in this way; and I do not know but they are just as good men as we are likely to have under this bill. Sir, the persons who are to fill these offices are to be appointed by the President of the United States, as the men who now manage the Indian department are appointed; and what reason is there to suppose that these men will be any better or any purer or any further removed from improper influences than those who are now holding office under the Indian department? I can see no reason for this change; and as it seems to be conceded by the chairman of the committee that the probabilities are that very soon it will be advisable to substitute military power for the present system, why not let the present system stand unchanged for the present? Why add this enormous expense to the Indian department if it be proposed next session or at some not very distant period of time to abolish the present system and substitute the military authority in its place?

I do not know but that the passage of this bill in its present shape is a foregone conclusion in the Senate; and if the Senate disagree to the House amendment, and it goes back to the House, and the House insist upon the amendment, and a committee of conference follows, I do not see any ground upon which the committee can compromise. They must either take this bill with the present system, or they must take the military power, as proposed by the House. I think that question ought to be settled without a reference to a committee of conference. So far as I am concerned I do not ask particularly to put the military in place of the civil power in the administration of Indian affairs if that be not thought advisable by those interested in the passage of the bill; but let the matter rest for a little time. Why the great urgency of passing this particular bill at this time? Suppose the matter is postponed; the Indian affairs are left in the hands of the Interior Department; there is no change effected; and then at another session we shall have ample time to consider as to whether the Indian Bureau should or should not be transferred to the War Department. Then the threatening circumstances which now surround the relations between the Indians and the whites may have passed away; and it is only those considerations that seem to influence the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. Present appearances indicate, as it seems, difficulties between the Indians and the whites. If they should pass away, if a state of perfect peace should be restored, this matter may then be taken up and passed upon deliberately, and in view of all the surrounding circumstances, and we can then determine whether this change shall or shall not be made. But there seems to be, for some reason or other, a very great anxiety to pass this bill and appoint this corps of inspectors to travel around through the country.

How often, I would ask, can these inspectors visit these different Indian tribes? Take the district comprising the State of Oregon and the Territories of Idaho and Washington. Suppose the board is located in Oregon, as it probably will be, these gentlemen may possibly make one trip in a year up to Idaho; they will go up there and see the superintendent and talk with the agents; but will they go about there among those wild, untamed Indians who are scalping every white man they can find, to talk with them and undertake to persuade them that they had better conform to the requirements of the Government? No, sir. They will go up to Idaho; they will display their power in that Territory, no doubt; but as to their producing any effect upon the Indians it is perfectly absurd, in my judgment, to suppose any such thing. The only thing in the Territory of Idaho or elsewhere in that district that can influence these savage Indians, these wild roving untamed tribes—and those are the Indians to be dreaded, those are the Indians to be managed at this time—the only thing that can produce peace there is the exercise of the military power, that very power which the military of the country is now exercising with considerable efficiency upon that portion of the Pacific coast.

I insist, therefore, Mr. President, that this bill ought not to pass; and if the Senate will consent to put it off till next session I shall be content; but if not, I shall do what I can to substitute the amendment of the House of Representatives for the bill which was passed by the Senate.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon a question, as he has had a good deal of practical experience on this subject. Will these boards that are to be sent out require the aid of the military to escort them in the Territory?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no doubt that if they visit the Indian tribes, unless they go to those tribes that are perfectly quiet and content at this time, or such as may be collected on the reservations, they will require a military escort in order to protect them while traveling through their respective districts, because it is now unsafe for other people to go through those districts in many places, and there is no reason to suppose that these officials would be more safe than others unless they were protected by military power.

Mr. NESMITH. Mr. President, I am glad that my colleague has taken occasion to enlighten the Senate on the subject of Indian affairs. And inasmuch as he told us to-day that he had lived in the Indian country ever since he was a boy, I am sorry to doubt the accuracy of his facts in relation to the reservations on the Pacific coast. When he stated that military forces were being kept at all those reservations I undertook to correct him by saying that out of the four reservations in Oregon, and the eight in Washington Territory, and the ten in Kansas, there were but two reservations of the whole twenty-two where there was a single soldier. Not only are the military removed from these reservations, but there are none kept in the neighborhood. They are not visited by officers of the United States Army. I do not know that even my colleague ever went so far as to visit one of them. I have visited them all within less than two years. He insisted that there were military posts at each of those reservations; and when I undertook to correct him, those twenty-two military posts fizzled down to a telegraphic dispatch that he had got from the superintendent of Indian affairs requesting him to intercede with the authorities here to have troops placed upon the reservations. It is true that in some portions of the States and Territories on the Pacific there are disturbances among the Indian tribes, which occasionally make it necessary to have a few troops in the vicinity of the reservations in order to enforce the police regulations that are instituted by the agents; but, so far as my observation goes, those Indian reservations are all under the charge of practical men, men of experience, who have resided long in that country on the frontier, and who are familiar with Indian character and management. The change proposed, and which my colleague advocates, is to remove these practical men and to substitute for them military men. I put the question to him directly, conversant as he is with the men upon the frontier who are managing Indian affairs, whether he believes that some lieutenant, who perhaps two years ago was a saloon-keeper or a clerk in a dry goods store in some great eastern city, is better adapted and better qualified for the administration of these great agencies and these great reservations than the practical men who he knows are now upon the spot? I ask him whether a change of that kind in the superintendency of our own State would be beneficial either for the Government or for the Indians?

It is not the policy of the Government to hold the Indians under military surveillance where the necessity for the presence of the military does not actually exist. It does not exist in the great reservations on the Pacific, where attempts are now being made, however badly they may result, for the purpose of ameliorating the condition of the Indian tribes. The object which the Government has had in view, and the object which has been had in view by all men who have undertaken a just and correct administration of Indian affairs there by civilians, has been to ameliorate the condition of the Indians, to instruct them in agriculture, and to induce them to become self-sustaining by their own labor. That is the great desideratum at which the Government has attempted to arrive. I do not think the system would be bettered by the substitution of Army officers for the practical farmers and men of experience on the frontier who now manage Indian affairs.

In relation to the bill which is now pending, I may be permitted to say, perhaps, that it is a bill which has received very extensive consideration. It has received the consideration of two committees of this body, and of a joint committee of the House of Representatives and the Senate. Nearly a year was spent in the examination and investigation of the different Indian tribes by three members of this body and four members of the House of Representatives. They visited most of the great Indian tribes in the United States, and after a full, fair, and careful examination of the condition of affairs, not only the condition of the Indians, but their relation to the Government and the disbursement of money by the officers of the Indian Bureau, and the connection of the Indians with the Government through the agencies, that committee unanimously came to the conclusion that it was necessary to remedy the evil by the passage of a bill such as the Senate passed at its last session, and that has now come back from the House with this amendment.

In addition to that, at this session both the Military and the Indian Committees of this body were called upon to investigate and report upon this very subject, and the Indian Committee reported unanimously against the proposition of the House of Representatives, and the Military Committee very nearly unanimously. Perhaps I may be pardoned for alluding to the fact that when this bill was called up to-day the Senator from California [Mr. CONNESS] complained that so humble an individual as myself happened to occupy a position upon both of those committees. That, perhaps, was my misfortune, or the misfortune of the Senate, who placed me there. It was not a matter of my own choice. I was selected by the Senate to act upon both of these committees and discharge my duties to the best of my ability. I regret that the committees did not have the benefit of the advice and knowledge of the distinguished Senator from California to shed his wisdom upon the great and important considerations that are brought before those committees, so that the Senate could have been properly enlightened on the subject on which they are now called to act.

A great deal has been said in relation to the corps of inspectors for which this bill provides. It is true that the bill does provide for five inspectors, but not with the enormous salary which my colleague has represented; quite a limited salary. It provides simply for the appointment of five assistant commissioners of Indian affairs, to be accompanied by a military officer and such citizen as may be selected by the religious denominations of the country, for the purpose of visiting the Indian tribes and exercising a supervisory control over them.

I do not know, and I do not pretend to say, that even the adoption of this bill is going to cure the evils which now prevail in the Indian department. I think, however, the tendency of it will be to check the abuses which are now known to exist, and which are so palpable to the country. These commissioners are to exercise a supervisory control over the agents and the superintendents. They are also vested with power to act as commissioners for the purpose of arresting persons who may be found illegally within the Indian country or who are engaged in interfering with the rights of the Indians. One great difficulty which grows out of the present administration of Indian affairs is owing to the fact of dishonesty or improper conduct upon the part of disbursing officers. These commissioners are not themselves to be disbursing officers. They are entirely removed from the temptation of peculation or improper use of public funds, as they are never to handle the money. They are simply inspectors, who are to report to the Government and keep them constantly advised of the condition of the Indians and the treatment which they are receiving at the hands of the whites, and to make such suggestions as may be expected to correct abuses. That is all there is of it. I admit that even the adoption of that system may be a failure; it may not correct present existing abuses; but it is the unanimous opinion of the committee which was charged with the investigation of this subject that it would have a tendency to correct them.

Another objection to the transfer of this bureau to the Military Department of the Government grows out of the fact that there are great questions of civil administration connected with Indian affairs, and there is a vast and complicated land system; there are land grants, there are reservations, there are complex legal questions growing out of the conflict of rights between different tribes, and between the whites and the Indians, and between railroad companies and the Indians. These legal questions, by the provisions of this amendment, are to be turned over for the decision of an Army officer, or of such person as the Secretary of War may select to superintend and supervise the Indian system.

So far as the hostile Indians are concerned, I believe they are as effectually now under the administration of the War Department as they possibly could be. The military jurisdiction over the hostile Indians is always conceded. There is no conflict between them and the civil Department that I know of where the Indians are hostile. The soldiers are then directed to go among them and fight them and kill them and do what they please and nobody interferes. It is the duty of the soldier to prosecute the war with the Indians for the protection of the frontier settlements; but under the provisions of the House amendment you propose to take the soldier from his proper and legitimate duty and make him a petty disbursing officer, and charge him with the superintendency of Indian farms. We should remember that we are proposing a vast field of labor for the military. We have already organized, by a bill which has passed both Houses of Congress, five military districts in the South, each to be presided over by a brigadier general. It takes more than half of the effective brigadiers of the Army to fill those districts which have been created by law, leaving perhaps two or three active, effective brigadier generals for all the rest of the service of the United States, and by the provisions of this amendment one of those two or three is to be selected and placed at the head of Indian affairs.

Sir, I make no remarks deprecating the ability, the capacity, the courage, or the integrity of Army officers as a class. I believe they are not surpassed for all these qualities by any class in the country. My opposition to the change suggested by this amendment is that it is taking the officer from his legitimate and proper duty and assigning him to a duty for which he is not supposed to have any qualifications by education or by practice. The duties of an Indian agent are so diverse and so contrary to anything that an Army officer is likely to have learned by his experience that it would take him a long time to acquire a knowledge of the business. Then he will be liable at any time to be called away, and some young officer must naturally in the course of events be selected to take his place. These positions are places of great responsibility; and one great injury, one great wrong, which has existed in the administration of Indian affairs has been the constant change of officers resulting from the political action of the Government. Men have been turned out every few years and new men put in their places having no capacity for the business and no acquaintance with the Indian tribes which they are expected to control.

As I suggested before, the hostile Indians are now as effectually under the control of the War Department as they could possibly be if the House amendment should become a law. My colleague, in discussing this question, drew largely upon his imagination in reference to their being military posts at the Indian reservations. He also spoke of the conduct of certain officials in Oregon, two or three, who had accumulated fortunes of forty or fifty thousand dollars, and made their escape to the southern confederacy. There was one Indian agent in Oregon who, I believe, speculated upon the General Government, and did take away from the State some twenty or thirty thousand dollars, with which he went to the southern confederacy. If a board, such as this bill provides for, had been organized at that time, with power to suspend or arrest him, that trouble would never have occurred; that man would never have got outside of the State with the funds which he had speculated from the Government. There was no power there to arrest him then. The person in charge of the superintendency at the time made an attempt to have him arrested, as he had before tried, by correspondence with Washington, to have him removed and taken from the charge of the agency; but it was impossible to do so either from a laxity here on the part of the Department or a failure to respond to his requisition. But that is an evil which is as likely to occur under military as under civil administration. How many officers of the regular Army—to whom it is now proposed to commit this business—did the very same thing at the commencement of the war? That was in the nature of things. Men in all departments of the Government were found faithless to their trusts at the commencement of the war. The fact that one individual stole or speculated from the Government and turned traitor is no argument against the general system or the continuation of the policy.

This amendment goes still further. Under the present system we have some guarantee for the faithful administration of Indian affairs. Each Indian agent and each sub-agent and each superintendent is required to execute a bond to the Government for the faithful disbursement of the public moneys placed in his hands. This amendment of the House, contrary to any system that has ever been adopted in this country relative to disbursing officers, relieves the Army officers who may be appointed to discharge this duty from that responsibility; and it entirely relieves the Government from any security upon the individual for the public moneys which may be placed in his hands. It is proposed to select officers of the Army, make them disbursing officers of these superintendencies and agencies, having sometimes $500,000 for disbursement, and the only hold it proposes to have upon them is a military court-martial. This system was found to be an error, even in the Army itself; and there is not now, I believe, a disbursing officer of the Army, either in the paymaster's department or the quartermaster's department or the subsistence department, who is not required to give bonds for the faithful disbursement of money which is placed in his hands. The provision in this amendment is that Army officers charged with the disbursement of moneys for the Indians shall not give bonds, that they shall be trusted with an indefinite amount of money for the purpose of general disbursement without offering or affording to the Government any security whatever.

I have said more, sir, upon this subject than I proposed at the commencement of the discussion; and as there are others who desire to speak on the question, I will no longer occupy the time of the Senate.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, when before the recess, I happened to inquire of the honorable Senator who has just taken his seat whether some of the members who are claimed to have reported from the Committee on Military Affairs in favor of the bill reported favorably by the Committee on Indian Affairs were not also members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the Senator from Oregon answered that he was on both committees. At the time I had no especial design of pointing out the Senator from Oregon in that respect. It had simply attracted my attention as a coincidence and a fact that two of the gentlemen upon the Committee on Indian Affairs were also members of the Committee on Military Affairs; and it occurred to me that if, after voting in favor of the bill before the Committee on Indian Affairs, they had attended the meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs and there voted in the same manner, the report made or claimed to have been made by the Committee on Military Affairs is not to be wondered at.

Upon this the honorable Senator undertakes to make a point and give a construction to what I said very different from what I had intended. I intended no reflection upon the honorable Senator, and his remarks in answer thereto I will simply say, so far as they are applied to myself, I regard as entirely gratuitous. I find on looking a little further into the matter that a majority of the Committee on Military Affairs are not in favor of the proposition coming from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I do not know upon what ground it was stated or claimed here that such was the case. The honorable Senator from Wisconsin, who seems to have taken this business in charge, was not present he tells me at the committee meeting.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CONNESS. And the chairman of that committee is against the proposition, and so are, as I stated, a majority of its members.

Mr. NESMITH. I will say to the Senator that I have not polled the committee or made inquiries on that subject, and do not propose to do so now. What I made my statement upon was simply the action of the committee. I am aware that there were some members absent at the time. So far as the Senator complains of my remarks in relation to himself, I will simply say that I intended them as complimentary to his distinguished ability.

Mr. CONNESS. Among others who are absent to-night is the Senator from Nevada. [Mr. STEWART,] who desires to be heard by the Senate upon this subject.

Mr. BROWN. And the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. GRIMES.]

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator from Nevada I know did not expect that this measure would be called up this evening, and if it is determined to proceed to a vote to-night I shall be compelled to occupy the floor in the absence of the Senator from Nevada, which I do not wish to do to-night; but in order that that Senator may have an opportunity to be heard, and that this subject may have further consideration, I move now that the bill be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have no objection to the Senate adjourning so as to leave this question the unfinished business to come up to-morrow; but to postpone it now is to displace it from its position before the Senate, and I therefore cannot consent to that.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to say to the honorable Senator from Wisconsin that this motion of mine is made in good faith, and being made in good faith I should feel bound in honor to vote with the Senator to-morrow to take up the bill. I desire him distinctly to understand that.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have no doubt of the entire good faith of the Senator from California; but the effect of the motion will be to displace this bill, so that to-morrow it will not be before the Senate. I have no objection to a motion to adjourn or a motion to go into executive session, because that will leave it as the unfinished business.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business, withdrawing the motion I previously made.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope not. We have been in executive session for a long time to-day, and it is well known that we transacted a good deal of business there. There is a joint resolution which it is very important the Senate should act upon within twenty-four hours. I refer to the joint resolution with reference to the Universal Exposition at Paris. It has been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I desire to have the Senate proceed with it during the remainder of this evening. I think there can be no objection to that.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The effect of that is precisely the same unless I am entirely mistaken, as I suppose I must have been at the beginning of the session this evening. I then found myself out of court, and it required a motion to get in.

Mr. SUMNER. Let it be understood that the Senator's bill can be taken up at one o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If there can be a universal understanding of the Senate that we shall take up the bill at one o'clock to-morrow and go on with it, I shall not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to state that I have occupied but little of the time of the Senate, and I do not think it is the disposition of the Committee on Indian Affairs to occupy time on this bill. If the Senate desire to consider it, it ought to be acted upon now. Unless we dispose of it by one or two o'clock to-morrow, it will be useless to consider it longer. I am sorry that the Senator from Nevada is not here, but he had the same opportunity to be here that I had. I am sick and scarcely able to come here. I do not know that there is any excuse on the part of the Senator from Nevada for being absent. The Senator from Iowa, I believe, is sick, and I have no assurance that he will be here to-morrow either to speak or to vote on the bill. I regret as much as any one that we have not the valuable experience and the good judgment of the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Nevada; but I know of no excuse why the Senator from Nevada is not here. I hope, therefore, the Senate will consider the matter to-night.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think there is a disposition in the Senate to go into executive session. I think the question had better be taken on a motion to postpone this bill temporarily, or lay it over informally.

Mr. CONNESS. I have no objection to that, and I withdraw my motion.

Mr. BROWN. I shall have no objection to this bill coming up to-morrow at one o'clock.

Mr. SUMNER. Let us proceed with the Paris Exposition bill.

Mr. BROWN. That is another question. Permit this to be put first.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think we might as well adjourn. We have been sitting here every night now for a week past or more. It is very hard on the secretaries, the reporters, and ourselves. I move, therefore, that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at nine o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 1, 1867.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, by unanimous consent, Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1173) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ASSAY OFFICES.

Mr. KASSON. I ask unanimous consent to report, from the Committee on a uniform system of Coinage, Weights, and Measures, a bill to establish certain offices for the assay of gold and silver, in lieu of certain branch mints heretofore established. The bill is in accordance with the recommendation of the Treasury Department, and I ask leave to report it now, as the committee will not be again called this session.

The bill was read. The first section requires the Secretary of the Treasury to establish assay offices of the United States for the receipt and for the melting, assaying, and stamping of gold and silver at Denver, in Colorado, at Charlotte, in North Carolina, and at Dahlonega, in Georgia; and it appropriates the sum of $5,000 for the purchase and repairs of buildings at the branch mint at Charlotte, and the same sum for the same purpose at Dahlonega, to carry out the provisions of this section.

The second section provides that as soon as the public interest shall require the services of such officers, the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for each of said assay offices, one superintendent, who shall perform the duties of assayer, and one treasurer, who shall perform the duties of melter; and the superintendent shall employ one clerk for his assistant, and three workmen and one watchman, if in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury such services shall be required. The salaries for such officers shall be as follows: for the superintendent and assayer, $2,500 a year; for the treasurer and melter, $2,500 a year; for the clerk and assistant, $1,800 a year; and the subordinates and workmen shall be paid such wages as may be determined upon by the superintendent and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; provided that such compensation shall not exceed such wages and allowances as are customary, according to their respective trades and occupations.

The third section provides that the officers and clerks to be appointed under this act, before entering upon the execution of their offices, shall take oath or affirmation before some judge of a court of the United States or of the supreme court of the Territory, as now provided by law, faithfully and diligently to perform the duties of their respective offices; and shall each become bound to the United States of America, with one or more sureties, to the satisfaction of the Director of the Mint or the Secretary of the Treasury, conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of their offices.

The fourth section provides that the business of said offices shall be under the general control and direction of the Director of the Mint at Philadelphia, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and for this purpose it is made the duty of the Director to prescribe such regulations and require such returns and to establish such charges for melting, assaying, and stamping as shall appear to him necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

The fifth section proposes to enact that the assay offices shall be places of deposit for public moneys, if in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury it shall be expedient; and the treasurer thereof is to have the custody of such moneys as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct, and for that purpose he is to be subject to such provisions of an act to provide for the better organization of the Treasury and for the collection, safe-keeping, transfer, and disbursement of the public revenue, approved August 6, 1846, as relate to the Treasury and to the branch mint at New Orleans.

The sixth section provides that the owner or owners of any gold or silver in bullion, dust, or other form, or of any foreign coin, shall be entitled to deposit the same in any of said offices; and the treasurer is to give a receipt stating the weight and description of such gold or silver, bullion, dust, or coin as aforesaid, in the manner and under such regulations as are or may be provided in like cases of deposits at the Mint of the United States. And such bullion, dust, or coin is without delay to be melted, assayed, and cast into bars or ingots, on which shall be stamped the name of the assay office, the number of the deposit from the first day of each year, its weight and fineness and value in each metal; and in this form the bullion shall be returned to the depositor upon payment by him of the established charges of the office.

The seventh section proposes to enact that all laws and parts of laws now in force for the regulation of the Mint of the United States and its branches, and for the government of officers and persons employed therein, and for the punishment of all offenses connected therewith shall be in full force in relation to the assay offices established by this act so far as the same may be applicable thereto.

The eighth section provides for the repeal of an act to establish a branch mint at Denver, Colorado Territory, approved April 21, 1862, and an act to establish branches of the Mint of the United States, approved March 3, 1835, so far as the latter relates to the branch mints at Charlotte and Dahlonega.

The ninth section proposes to authorize and require the Secretary of the Treasury to remove the machinery and implements belonging to the United States mint for the purpose of coinage in the branch mints at Charlotte and Dahlonega to the Mint at Philadelphia; but he may authorize the retention of such portion of the property, buildings, and machinery at either of those places as may be necessary for the purpose of assaying metals, as provided by this act.

The bill was received, read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MORNING HOUR DISPENSED WITH.

Mr. STEVENS moved to dispense with the morning hour, as it was for private business only.

Mr. INGERSOLL objected.

Mr. STEVENS moved to suspend the rules. The motion was disagreed to.

AMENDMENT OF TARIFF.

Mr. ALLEY. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following to cure a defect in the existing law. It meets the approval of the Committee of Ways and Means.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution to amend section five of an act entitled "An act to increase duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the paragraph of section five of an act entitled "An act to increase duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, as follows, to wit: "On lastings, mohair cloth, silk, twist, wool, or other manufactured cloth woven or made in patterns of such size, shape, and form, or cut in such manner as to be fit for shoes, slippers, booties, gaiters, and buttons exclusively, not combined with India-rubber, ten per cent. ad valorem," be, and the same is hereby repealed.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

GRANT TO CALIFORNIA RAILROAD.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of a bill giving aid to construct a railroad from Stockton to Copperopolis, in California, with the amendments thereto, and that the same be laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

LAWS OF NEW MEXICO.

Mr. BOUTWELL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a joint resolution in relation to the laws passed by the Legislative Assembly of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution provides that the laws passed by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico at its last session, beginning on the 3d of December, 1866, and ending on the 3d day of February, 1867, and signed by W. F. M. Army, acting secretary, shall have the same force and effect as if the same had been signed by the Governor duly appointed.

Mr. BOUTWELL. If the House will allow me a single word of explanation: the Governor of New Mexico was absent during the session of the Legislature, and the secretary of state, who by law would have been acting Governor, was also absent from the Territory. This does not confirm these laws in the sense in which Congress may confirm territorial legislation, but only places them in the same situation as if the Governor had signed them.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOUTWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE OHIO RIVER.

Mr. FINCK, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported back resolution of the House in regard to improvement of the navigation of the Ohio river, and moved that the same be laid upon the table, the subject having already been decided upon in another place.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. STEVENS moved that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ALISON in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of House bill No. 1227, making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 13, 1867, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I object.

The bill was accordingly read a first time, and was afterward read by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read the following paragraphs:

Engineers' office:

To meet deficiencies of the present fiscal year on account of engineer office having the supervision of the Union Pacific railroad and branches, land-grant railroads, and wagon-roads, namely:

For compensation of clerks, $3,800.

For contingencies, $300.

For per diem of one Government commissioner Central Pacific railroad of California, to attend meeting of board of Government directors, commissioners, and engineer at Washington, District of Columbia, February 1, 1866, for the purpose of fixing a standard of railroad to which the Pacific railroad and branches shall conform, seventy-five days, at ten dollars per day, $750.

For mileage of said commissioner from San Francisco to Washington, six thousand five hundred and sixty-nine miles, and back, at ten cents per mile, to attend said meeting, $1,213 80.

For per diem of two Government commissioners of the Union Pacific railroad and Union Pacific railway, eastern division, while attending said meeting of board of Government directors, commissioners, and engineer, for purposes above stated, ten days, at ten dollars each per day, $200.

For mileage of three commissioners of said Union Pacific railroad and Union Pacific railway, eastern division, from their residences to Washington and back, to attend said meeting of board referred to above, two hundred and ninety miles, at ten cents per mile, $290.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to strike out all of the foregoing paragraphs after the words, "for contingencies, $500." By a law which we passed these companies were bound to pay all their expenses. Our Clerk inserted them here, and I move to strike them out.

Mr. HIGBY. When I can be satisfied by reference to any law that we have passed that the Pacific Railroad Company are compelled to pay the expenses that accrued previous to the passage of the law, I shall have nothing to say. But I do not so understand. I have no objection to their being compelled by law to pay the expenses of commissioners, or at least to refund to the Government whatever amount the Government might be pledged to pay to those men; but the service provided for in this bill was performed previous to the passage of the law of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania speaks. I know that one of these commissioners came from California at the call of the Secretary of War, and that he actually performed the services that are provided for in this bill. At that time there was no law requiring the Central Pacific Railroad to pay these expenses. There was nothing in the law on the subject. Now, does the gentleman claim that any law which we have passed on this subject is retroactive? I am not to be understood as speaking in favor of this company—only in favor of those men and others who performed service getting their pay somewhere. As it appears that these companies are not obliged to pay them I think the Government ought to do so, because the Government did employ them. When I become satisfied that the companies are obliged to pay these expenses I shall have nothing to say.

Mr. STEVENS. When the Government made grants to these railroad companies it expected that would end all it had to pay toward the construction of this road. It never imagined that the engineers, surveyors, and commissioners were afterward to come upon the Government for their pay. It supposed that when the Government did so much for the benefit of the companies the latter were to pay their own expenses. Such was the original understanding of those who passed the law. But afterward these companies came in with their charges; and last year these charges amounted to $70,000. So in July, 1866, Congress passed a law in which I find the following section, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Sec. 21. And be it further enacted, That whenever in any grant of land or other subsidies, made or hereafter to be made, to railroad or other corporations, the United States has reserved the right, or shall reserve it, to appoint directors, engineers, commissioners, or other agents to examine said roads, or act in conjunction with other officers of said company or companies, all the costs, charges, and pay of said directors, engineers, commissioners, or agents, shall be paid by the respective companies. Said directors, engineers, commissioners, or agents shall be paid for said services the sum of ten dollars per day for each and every day actually and necessarily employed, and ten cents per mile for each and every mile actually and necessarily traveled in discharging the duties required of them, which per diem and mileage shall be in full compensation for said services. And in case any company shall refuse or neglect to make such payments, no more patents for lands or other subsidies shall be issued to said company until these requirements are complied with."

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. Why not strike out the first two items?

Mr. STEVENS. I understand the engineers and officers of the Government were employed.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I move to strike out lines forty-eight and forty-nine, as follows:

For models for bronze doors, $3,940.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to inquire of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds whether I have been correctly informed that this appropriation is for doors to be put in the Senate end of the Capitol, and to correspond with the bronze doors at this end? I am informed that the estimate is for that purpose, to go on with work already planned.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I do not care where they are to be put, I will not vote one dollar for any such doors at either end of the Capitol or anywhere else. They serve no purpose but to block up the way; they are not only useless, but they are a great nuisance. If some one will take ours and put them in a museum where those who wish can go and see them, then I may consider the propriety of voting for these new specimens of the same kind, but the idea of blocking up the passages to these Halls with such things is mere nonsense.

Mr. CONKLING. Can any gentleman tell us whether this appropriation is for doors yet to be constructed, or whether it is to pay for doors already made?

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I understand that these estimates are for the construction of bronze doors to correspond with those at this end of the Capitol, and to be placed in the Senate end. I know nothing about the matter particularly myself, but I suggest that instead of appropriating this money for these new doors we let the Senate remove our bronze doors to the other end of the Capitol. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAYNARD. Have these models been prepared and submitted, and is this an appropriation to pay for them, or is it an appropriation inviting the making and presentation of such models hereafter?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It seems to be for work to be done in the future; because here immediately following this there is an appropriation "for material for, and casting and fitting the same."

I am very glad that a motion has been made to strike out this item. I agree entirely with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTFIELD] that these doors are a nuisance, and why any person should propose to erect any more of them in the Capitol I cannot understand. They only block up the way, and excite a momentary curiosity in the minds of strangers. If this money is to be appropriated we had far better spend it for pictures which will really ornament the Capitol and at the same time commemorate some of the great events of the war than for the erection of these fancy doors. These two appropriations amount to about thirty thousand dollars, to be expended for these bronze things merely to stand there and attract the gaze of the passers-by. The proposition is absurd, and I hope the appropriations will be struck out.

Mr. KASSON. I did not hear what the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds said; but unless some further light is given upon this subject, I know of no objection on the part of the committee to striking out the appropriation, and letting the Senate take care of their own brass. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. I desire to know whether there has ever been any law passed authorizing the making of these models. It is here proposed to appropriate something over thirty thousand dollars for these bronze doors. I fully concur with all that has been said about the utter uselessness of these doors, and if we desire to encourage art by paying for manufactures of this kind, we certainly had better select some place for them where they will not be an obstruction, as those are which we now have, and which stand there uselessly with their prongs sticking out to catch the clothes of those who have to pass them.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. As reference has been made to me as the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I would say to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] that so far as the committee are concerned this matter has not been before it at all. Neither do I know of any existing contract for the expenditure of this money for the construction of these doors, and I believe there is none such. The question, I say, has not been submitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; and if the Committee on Appropriations do not know anything about this matter, and if they have no sufficient data upon which we may act upon it, certainly the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have not any such data.

I desire to say to my colleague on the right, too, that in addition to the other expenditures connected with these doors we have to pay $1,200 a year to a watchman to keep people from stealing the stealable portions of them. For these reasons I think it very bad policy to pay out the public money for the erection of any more of them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For material for, and casting and fitting the same, [bronze doors,] $20,860.

Mr. STEVENS. As the other item has been stricken out this ought also to be stricken out. I therefore move to strike out the clause just read.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For eight additional monolithic columns, $11,200.

Mr. CONKLING. I would like to hear some explanation of monolithic columns.

Mr. STEVENS. I merely desire to say that this item is necessary, in order that all these columns may be monolithic, or each of a single piece. It has been deemed by the architect of the Capitol extension to be best that all these columns should be in one piece each. That is all the explanation I have to make.

Mr. CONKLING. I have not been able to hear the explanation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] and I think no one else about me has been able to hear it. I want to understand what these magnificent columns are to be for. Monolithic columns, I understand, are columns made of a single stone each.

Mr. MAYNARD. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] will recollect the contest we had some years ago, in relation to the Capitol extension, over monolithic columns, or columns of a single piece each, and columns of two or more pieces each. We finally decided to adopt the monolithic system. The number for which this item of appropriation is to provide is a deficiency caused by breakage or some other cause; there are eight more needed to complete the full number.

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to a question of order. Is there any proposition before the House to amend? If not, then I make the point of order that this debate is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. As general debate upon this bill has not yet been closed, it is in order to debate the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Is there any proposition before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is before the committee.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

For ventilating, $9,000.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to make an inquiry in regard to this item. At the last session of Congress a resolution was adopted directing the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, or some other committee, to examine and report in reference to some system of ventilating this Capitol which would be successful. I desire to inquire whether anything has been done by that committee, and if so, whether this amount of $9,000 for ventilating is at all connected with that report.

Mr. STEVENS. There was a joint committee appointed on the subject; but I believe the committee has never met, and nothing has been done under the resolution to which the gentleman refers.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

Census Office:

For the purpose of paying the amount due to certain United States marshals and their assistants for services rendered in taking the eighth census, in the year 1860, in the following States, namely: In the State of California, $9,460 48; in the State of Maine, $33 06; in the State of Ohio, $49 69; in the State of Oregon, $3,160 20; in the State of Kansas, $68 40; in the State of Kentucky, $9,311 50; in the State of Maryland, $4,781 40; in the State of Missouri, $3,343; in the State of Tennessee, $29,842 18; in the Territory of New Mexico, $784 60; in the Territory of Washington, $99 09.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend this paragraph by adding to it the total of the sums contained in it, namely, "$56,933 69."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANLER. I move further to amend this paragraph by adding the following:

That no portion of the money provided to be paid by this act, or by any other future act for making appropriations, or any act to supply deficiencies for the service of the Government, shall be paid to any person or persons in the employment of any Department of the United States Government who during the time or term of being so employed shall belong to any political club or partisan organization.

Mr. Chairman, my object in offering this amendment is to try and assimilate the character and position of the civil employés of the Government with the military and naval officers, who ever since the establishment of this Government have been forbidden to take any active part in the political affairs of this country. There can be nothing derogatory in requiring of the civil employés of the Government the same course of conduct in this respect as is required of the heroes of our Army and Navy, who have maintained the integrity of the Government against all attacks on land and sea.

We all know that the present system of controlling Government employés is an Augean stable of political corruption and filth, which has been organized in connection with every Department of this Government. It is a fruitful source of the cancers which are eating out the purity and vitality of our representative form of government. The propositions which have been offered here by gentlemen on all sides of this House prove that this proposition of mine cannot be regarded as a partisan measure in any sense. And I can conceive of no more appropriate time for beginning this reform in that direction than this present appropriation bill for supplying deficiencies. Deficiencies in appropriations of money for carrying on the different Departments of our Government should be put under the severest restrictions. The different Departments are required by law to lay before Congress at the commencement of its sessions their various estimates for the necessary expenses of the Government.

On the contrary, instead of obeying the law, the gentlemen who surround the executive department as Secretaries and clerks retain in their own possession, and to the latest moment hold back from the people and their representatives here, all information relative to the condition of the Government, especially its financial affairs.

Now, sir, the paragraph to which I propose to append this proviso proposes to pay large sums of money for traveling through the country; and it will afford great facilities to certain persons in keeping up political organizations, thereby wasting, in political maneuvering, time for which they are paid on the presumption that it is spent in collecting returns for the census. I make no direct charge against the persons employed in this particular instance. I am not acquainted with any of them; I have nothing to say against them individually.

But it is an established fact, known to every one who has studied the movements of the political organizations of this country, that the first effort made by a successful political engineer is to secure for himself a permanent salary under the protection of the Representative who may be sent here by his assistance at primary elections. I do not say that under the pure and admirable system of political organization established by the loyal leagues of the country such things are done. My ignorance in regard to such organizations forces me to admit that in their particular instance there may or may not be corruption. But, sir, the history of political organizations shows that when exerting for partisan purposes the machinery of the Government, they are antagonistic to the free exercise of the ballot by the citizen, who is thus debarred from his proper influence in changing the tone of the Government or directing its policy. Sir, these men enrolled in the service of the body-politic, are like the Swiss Guard, who in the last century entered the service of the French monarchy, and who being hired for that specific purpose, although citizens of the only republic in Europe, shed their blood in defense of the greatest tyranny and most corrupt Government of Europe. Sir, it is time that this Swiss Guard and corrupt corps of political janizaries and dishonest denizens within the body-politic of our Government should be driven away. The whole system should be changed. I hope that this Congress may take into consideration the public interests involved in this question, and that this amendment will encounter no partisan opposition.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend by adding the following proviso to the amendment just adopted on my motion:

Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid to or on account of any claimant who participated in the late rebellion or gave to it aid and comfort.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Indian Bureau:

For this amount, to carry out the act of Congress approved May 5, 1864, entitled "An act to vacate and sell the present Indian reservations in Utah Territory, and to settle the Indians of said Territory in the Uintah valley," $15,000.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend by striking out the paragraph just read, which has already been included in another bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For this amount, to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for incidental expenses of the Indian service in Utah, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864, $12,000.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend by striking out the paragraph just read. It has already been included in another bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the indebtedness incurred for the Indian service in the State of Oregon and Territory of Washington, in the years 1860, 1861, and 1862, $40,000.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend by striking out the paragraph just read.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose this amendment. I do not know why the gentleman from Iowa should move to strike out this paragraph. The Committee on Appropriations had before them letters from the Secretary of the Interior and the head of the Indian Bureau, stating that there were vouchers on file in that Department which had been there for years, showing that industrious mechanics had claims against the Government for services performed for the Indians in Oregon and Washington Territory in 1861 and 1862—claims which ought to be paid, but for which no appropriations had been made. Last year the Senate made an appropriation of $40,000 for this very purpose, but in the House that appropriation was stricken out because it was claimed that it ought to be inserted in a deficiency bill. That was the only objection.

There is no doubt in regard to the justice of these claims. The vouchers are all in the Department, and they simply want an appropriation to pay these laborers, many of whom are in necessitous circumstances. My attention was called to the matter by one of my constituents, a carpenter and joiner, who performed service for the Indian reservation to the amount of $1,300. It was in this way my attention was called to it. I called upon the Department and all the vouchers were upon file. I hope my friend will not object to it.

Mr. KASSON. My recollection of the action of the committee is substantially the same as that of my friend except in one particular. There was one claim in reference to which special attention was called. The voucher was submitted to the committee and they approved it. The evidence submitted to the committee was sufficient in this case, but I was not aware the committee had agreed to the appropriation of this entire sum to cover cases where the vouchers had not been submitted.

Mr. SPALDING. Let me refresh the memory of the gentleman from Iowa. They did first object to any other than this individual claim, but they agreed if the Department would furnish items for the other claims, with vouchers, they would make an appropriation to cover them all. Those items were sent in and this appropriation was made accordingly. That is the fact about it. I went to the Department and procured those items.

Mr. STEVENS. The action of the committee was distinct. We did agree to appropriate enough to pay $1,300 to the person mentioned by the gentleman from Ohio. We never examined any other vouchers, and in my judgment the committee never ordered this appropriation to be inserted. I move to strike out the section and insert a provision to pay the amount of $1,300 which we did agree to.

Mr. SPALDING. I cannot be mistaken about this. I can have no interest in any other person than the one named, but I want to do justice to all concerned as well as to my constituent.

Mr. STEVENS. To the claim of his constituent we do not object, but to the others we do.

Mr. KASSON. We have become aware that an unlimited number of claims come from Oregon and the amount has never been investigated by any committee of Congress. I believe that this amount was inserted one or two years ago, but it was stricken out upon the ground that it ought not to be included in an appropriation bill without having been investigated by a committee before whom all the papers and vouchers should be presented. It was further objected that the appropriation did not belong to a deficiency bill.

I do not deny the fact as stated by the gentleman from Ohio, but I was not present when the subsequent action took place. I hope the section will not be retained.

Mr. STEVENS. What was the amount of the claim of the gentleman's constituent?

Mr. SPALDING. His name is O. W. Barnes, and the amount is $1,300.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to insert that.

Mr. SPALDING. I am thankful to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for taking care of my constituent, but really I think the other claims for which the items have been submitted are equally just, and we should vote for them with as much cheerfulness.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the iron-clad bill.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1166) to authorize the building of light-houses therein mentioned, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 588) for the relief of Richard Chenery;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 268) to pay Lieutenant John H. Hamlin for military services;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 222) prohibiting payment by any officer of the Government to any person not known to have been opposed to the rebellion and in favor of its suppression; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 205) for the erection of an equestrian statue to the memory of Brevet Lieutenant General Winfield Scott.

SUSPENSION OF JOINT RULES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair reminds the House that by the joint rules no appropriation bill or any other can be sent to the Senate to-day or any subsequent day of this session nor to the President on the last day of the session. The Clerk will read the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

"No bill that shall have passed one House shall be sent for concurrence to the other on either of the three last days of the session."

"No joint resolution that shall have passed the House of Representatives or the Senate shall be presented to the President of the United States for his approbation on the last day of the session."

Mr. STEVENS. I move that those two rules be suspended.

No objection being made, the foregoing rules were suspended.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I cannot see the justice or propriety of striking out a part of this claim from the simple fact that there is a friend here to advocate the claim of one party. I understand the Interior Department has produced the vouchers of the whole amount of indebtedness that this is intended to cover, and why a part of the debt shall be paid and the balance rejected is a matter that I cannot comprehend. I understand that one part of the claim is just as good as the other, and I hope we will pass it as it came from the Interior Department.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I am opposed to this whole clause. It is inserted in violation of the rules of the House. I know it is too late to take exception to it now, because exception is required to be made before the bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole. I know the chairman of the committee holds the rules very firmly, because I went to him last session with a very meritorious case, and although feeling as kindly toward me as perhaps toward anybody he refused to put the appropriation in, though it was put in afterward by the committee. Now, I think the rules ought to be sustained, not only by the chairman of the committee, but by the whole committee. It is well known that we do not ask these bills to be read before they are referred to the Committee of the Whole, and then it is too late to raise objection. Therefore it is the more important that the committee should enforce the rule so as to prevent mere claims being inserted in this bill and insist that they should go where other claims have to go, namely, to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. STEVENS. Will my colleague allow me to say that the committee were doubtful whether this came within the rule.

Mr. DENNY. I hope the committee will not strike this out. I happen to know something of the justice and necessity of it. I find that vouchers are on file in the Department, and I know, so far as the Territory of Washington is concerned, that the claim is just and proper. I hope, therefore, this House will not deny this appropriation. I do not propose to say anything more on the subject, but simply to appeal to the good sense and justice of the committee to allow the appropriation.

Mr. KASSON. There is no disposition on the part of the committee to refuse an appropriation which they are satisfied is due. The only objection they have to this is that there is no testimony on which they could act showing that these expenditures, which previous appropriations did not provide for, were necessary and that the amounts claimed were justly due.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not see why we should make an exception of this kind, and I hope the precedent will not prevail here of doing justice to a man who happens to have a special friend on the floor and of doing injustice to one who does not happen to have that good fortune. I hope the idea will be established: that the man who is at home, and has no special friend here, will get justice as well as if he were present or were represented here. It is agreed, I believe, on all hands that the recommendation of the Department covers the whole $40,000.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman says that this party has an advocate here. It is no such thing—only this, that he produced vouchers for the claim which left us beyond all doubt as to the propriety of the claim. I move that the committee rise to close debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALLISON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 1227, making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that when the House resolve itself again into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order all debate on the pending paragraph be closed in two minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I now move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to take up the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ALLISON in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the amendment of the Senate in the nature of a substitute to House bill No. 1227, making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes.

Mr. SPALDING. I think the committee had better allow this appropriation of $40,000. I have satisfied myself at the Interior Department that these claims are justly due. They have the vouchers there and want the appropriation. Now, if we strike out this clause and simply put in the claim which I advocate, I am satisfied that the Senate will strike it out in consequence of the violation of the rule alluded to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOFIELD.]

Again, I do not like to put an individual claim in the bill to the exclusion of others equally meritorious, and if this appropriation of $40,000 is stricken out I do not wish this claim inserted.

Mr. STEVENS. I withdraw my amendment, and concur in the motion of my colleague, [Mr. SCOFIELD,] to strike out the whole paragraph.

The question being on Mr. SCOFIELD's motion,

Mr. SCOFIELD demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SCOFIELD and HENDERSON were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 57.

So the motion was disagreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNER, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on bill of the Senate No. 220, for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels-of-war and steam machinery.

The message further announced that the Senate had adopted a resolution providing that the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules of the two Houses be suspended for the residue of the session.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate No. 501, amendatory of an act to provide temporary government for the Territory of Montana, approved May 26, 1864.

The message further announced that the Senate had receded from its first amendment, disagreed to by the House, to the bill of the House No. 1154, making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate No. 204, to inquire for an annual inspection of Indian affairs, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DOOLITTLE, Mr. POMEROY, and Mr. CATTELL conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted on its amendment to the bill of the House (No. 1220,) to provide ways and means for the payment of the compound-interest notes, disagreed to by the House, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. SPRAGUE, and Mr. JOHNSON conferees on the part of the House.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union then resumed its session.

Mr. SCHENCK. I propose to add at the end of the paragraph the following proviso:

Provided, That such payments shall be made only to the persons severally who rendered the services.

I will briefly state my reasons for offering this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate has been closed by order of the House upon this paragraph.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then I cannot explain my reasons for offering it.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I move to add the words "and twenty per cent. as extra compensation," so as to put them on a par with the clerks here, for whom we appropriated $2,000,000 the other day.

Mr. SCHENCK. The gentleman's amendment is not appropriate to my amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I suggest to the gentleman this modification: "Such payment shall be made only to the original owner of the claim."

Mr. SCOFIELD. Insert also "and upon satisfactory proof to the accounting officers."

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. Is debate in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I wish to say that many of the clerks in this city sold their claims in large amounts.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. SCHENCK. I accept the modifications suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOFIELD.]

Mr. SCHENCK's amendment, as modified, was read as follows:

Provided, That such payments shall be made only to the original owner of the claim, and upon satisfactory proof furnished the accounting officers.

The question was taken on the amendment; and it was agreed to—ayes 53, noes 50.

Mr. KASSON. I move to strike out the following clauses:

For this amount to enable the Secretary of the Interior to purchase thirty copies of the first nine volumes of the United States Statutes-at-Large, $540.
For the compensation of eight extra clerks in the office of Indian affairs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, $11,200.

I will state that these items are included in another bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to insert in place of the paragraphs which have just been stricken out the following:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be required to pay the necessary expenses of the commission appointed by the President to visit the Indian country, near Fort Phil. Kearney, for the purpose of ascertaining the facts relative to the Indian massacre near that place on the 21st of December, 1866, including pay of commissioners, traveling expenses, presents, and rations for the Indians when necessary, and pay of guides and interpreters, $20,000.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I would inquire if this commission has already been appointed and started.

Mr. WINDOM. The President has already appointed the members of the commission, a number of whom I know.

Mr. SPALDING. I would ask the gentleman if any of these commissioners were members of Congress?

Mr. WINDOM. Not that I am aware of. I believe it is important that this commission should be appointed. One of two policies must be pursued in reference to the Indians of this country. Either a commission of this kind must be appointed and sent out there to ascertain if possible and separate the friendly from the unfriendly Indians, and thus prevent a general war by conciliating them in some way, or we must pursue the other policy suggested by General Sherman. I am in favor of the more humane policy, which will attempt to settle our differences there by making this investigation. If this be not done, then I will say to the House that I believe the policy proposed by General Sherman must be adopted by this Government in reference to these Indians. I will read what General Sherman says in a dispatch to General Grant. The dispatch is as follows:

St. Louis, December 28, 1866.

GENERAL: Just arrived in time to attend the funeral of my adjutant general, Sawyer. I have given general instructions to General Cooke about the Sioux. I do not yet understand how the massacre of Colonel Fetterman's party could have been so complete. We must act with vindictive earnestness.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I rise to a point of order. I endeavored to get the floor for that purpose, when the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] first began to speak upon this subject, but failed to obtain the recognition of the Chair. I have been told that if I delay making my point of order until the gentleman gets through it will be too late. I now make the point of order that this amendment includes additional legislation, which is not appropriate to this bill.

Mr. WINDOM. I think the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] is made too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must decide that the point of order is made too late, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] having already occupied the floor for some time.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I rose in time, but the Chair recognized the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not observe the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] seeking to obtain the floor.

Mr. SCOFIELD. That may be; but I certainly tried to obtain it.

Mr. WINDOM. At all events the point of order was not made in time.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was not made until it was too late.

Mr. WINDOM. I was proceeding to say that we must pursue the course I have advocated, or some such course as that suggested by General Sherman, whose dispatch I was reading, and which concludes as follows:

We must act with vindictive earnestness against the Sioux, even to their extermination, men, women, and children. Nothing less will reach the root of this case.

W. T. SHERMAN,

Lieutenant General.

For one, although I have as little affection for the Sioux Indians as any man in this House may have, I am not prepared to adopt the policy proposed by General Sherman, who is in command of all this Indian country. I was told by a gentleman yesterday that he was taught by myself a few years ago to treat the Indians with vindictiveness. That may be so; I am aware that some years ago, after the bloody Indian massacres in the State of Minnesota, I did insist upon the hanging of thirty-nine guilty men. But I never said on this floor or anywhere else that the Government of the United States should put its heavy hand on the throats of little Indian babies and crush them. I have never asked here or elsewhere that these Indians should be ruthlessly murdered. I am not in favor of that policy at all. I am in favor of a policy which will prevent an Indian war in this country, and not the policy of making an indiscriminate slaughter of women and children, thus making us a disgrace to the whole civilized world. I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. We have been sending out commission after commission to make treaties with nations and tribes of Indians and individual Indians. I never knew any one of these negotiators who did not come back richer than he went. I think if there is any propriety in this item it ought to be inserted in another bill. I hope we shall not encumber this bill by the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. Chairman, may we understand of whom this commission consists, how many persons constitute it, who they are, and what they are? In the absence of any statement on this point I hope this amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. WINDOM. I have heard the names of all those composing this commission, but I recollect only two or three. One is General Sully, another General Sanborn. Some of them are civilians.

Mr. CONKLING. I think we had better take this matter up at some time when we can have some information as to who these men are and what they are. I do not like to vote blindly upon a proposition of this sort.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to inquire whether one of the commissioners named is not a general officer in the military service. I understand that to be the fact.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I am unwilling to vote for the amendment without some clearer comprehension of it. In the first place, I understand from the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, [Mr. WINDOM,] confirmed in part by the statement of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DAVIS,] that several of these commissioners—I believe the chairman has said all—are officers in the military service of the Government. If so, they are liable to be sent upon this service in the discharge of their duties as officers, and will receive mileage in addition to their regular pay. Hence there is no need of any appropriation for their compensation. If this commission were composed of civilians there might be some necessity for such an appropriation.

Mr. WINDOM. I said that some of the commissioners were civilians. General Sanborn has been in the Army.

Mr. SCHENCK. Well, sir, we are left in the dark in regard to this matter. Some members of this commission are known to be military officers. If so, they will during their service on this commission draw their regular pay as well as an allowance for traveling expenses, unless transportation be furnished to them. Hence there is no need, so far as they are concerned, for this appropriation.

Mr. WINDOM. I presume that no part of this appropriation would go to pay those already subject to the orders of the President as military officers; it would be applied to the payment of the civilians, and also for presents and rations for the Indians, and other expenses, as specified in the amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. That may be; but we do not know who those other members of the commission are.

Another thing strikes me as very peculiar, considering the discussion we had here recently in reference to Indian affairs. It has been contended that whatever is done with regard to the supervision or inspection of Indian affairs must be done through the civil administration; that only civilians are competent to deal fairly and justly with the Indians and to prevent depredations and murders by them. Yet here is a proposition for a commission, the appointment of which is vested in the President, without our knowing who are to constitute this commission, except that it is to consist in great part, if not altogether, of military men; and the proposition comes from the gentleman who denied the propriety of putting the inspection and supervision of Indian affairs in the hands of military men.

Mr. WINDOM. As the gentleman alludes to me, I presume he will yield for an explanation.

Mr. SCHENCK. Oh, yes.

Mr. WINDOM. I am somewhat astonished that the intelligent gentleman from Ohio should make an assertion of this kind. I have stated within the last five minutes that although I do not remember the names of all these commissioners, some of them are civilians. The gentleman is now astonished that I should propose that military officers should have anything to do with the supervision of Indian affairs. The very bill to which the gentleman has alluded, and which I reported to the House some weeks ago, contained a provision that one third of the supervisory committee should be military men. The gentleman now asserts that I am inconsistent. Sir, I proposed here a mixed commission.

Let me say further, Mr. Chairman, if I were certain of the passage of the bill, which ought to pass the House, but which failed last night again, I would not deem it necessary to make this appropriation; but as that question will be settled before this in the Senate it is necessary. If that bill should fail then we desire this supervision.

Let me add a word in reference to the expense. It will be far less expensive to keep this commission in the field than to keep armies.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have no disposition to do the honorable gentleman injustice, or put a wrong construction on what he says; but this is so far a concession that only military men should have this supervision of the Indians.

But waiving all that, what is the difference between us? I have desired this military supervision should be entire, and that the selections for it should be made in the usual way, under the authority of the Secretary of War. It seems he is opposed to that, and prefers to trust the President with the selection of the officers and civilians who are to go upon these commissions; and I should like all the more to know who is to constitute this commission before I vote on the question, if this is to be the mode of appointment.

Mr. Chairman, there have been a good many committees and commissions at one time and another sent out upon the plains. I will not pretend to deny it may be an agreeable recreation to take such a trip, and if he were in the House I would suggest to the Speaker I should like to take the trip across the plains myself, and that when he comes to make up these committees hereafter he will think of me, or if he has not the appointment himself he will use his influence in my behalf. [Laughter.] I should like to go myself across the plains.

Now, sir, how many of these commissions have resulted in the prevention of Indian wars? How many more shall we have before we get to the root of the evil?

I contend some supervision of the Indians, where there shall be force and power as well as the exercise of justice by competent authority, is far better than the patch-work of occasional temporary expedients of committees of members of Congress or mixed commissions of military men and civilians; and this proposition fails like all others to the point to which we must come if we design to produce a successful reform. I hope this appropriation for the payment of these expenses will not become a part of the law.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move at the end of line eighty-four to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Isaac Strohm for additional services as a clerk in the Treasury Department from the 1st of January, 1864, to March 1, 1865, at the same rate paid for similar additional services prior to that date, $466 67.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I rise to the point of order that this is not germane to an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. It is a contingency for carrying on one of the Departments of the Government.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say that this clerk was employed by the Government, and did considerable amount of extra duty, which is acknowledged by the Secretary in his letter in which I shall have read. Payment was not made owing to the want of a specific appropriation. I ask the Clerk to read the Secretary's letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 2, 1865.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of yesterday relative to a claim of Mr. Strohm, late clerk in this Department, for payment for services rendered in connection with the coast survey.

A reference to the records shows that the services were rendered as claimed by Mr. Strohm. It also further appears that for similar services rendered for many years prior to the period during which Mr. Strohm performed the duties alluded to, compensation had been provided by Congress. Such provision did not cover the period of Mr. Strohm's service, and his claim therefor was consequently disallowed.

Very respectfully,

W. P. FESSENDEN,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. R. C. SCHENCK, House of Representatives.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I move the following as an amendment to the amendment:

And such other clerks of the Department as have been removed for political opinions in the year 1867.

Mr. GARFIELD. I raise the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the amendment pending, and not according to any law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. Is it germane to make an appropriation for one clerk and not for another?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I rise to a point of order. I have the floor and the gentleman cannot take it from me.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is well taken; the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] is entitled to the floor. The Chair will state that the gentleman's amendment though not germane to the pending amendment is germane to the bill.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I will waive all objection to the decision of the Chair; I think it is correct. But I wish to remark, if I have the privilege of the floor and it does not distress gentlemen too much, that I approve of this amendment in comparison with the provisions of the bill which this House has passed giving twenty per cent. additional compensation to all the clerks in the civil service in and around Washington. I think in principle it is no more objectionable than that bill which took out of the Treasury about two million dollars, or as it has been stated to me, a little in excess of that amount, not to pay the debts of this Government, but to pay employes, all of whom, I believe, were receiving not less than $1,000 a year. Now, sir, the principle having been established, it does not lie against me that I design to prevent an honest clerk in this House from getting what is justly due him, or of making an exception of him. Such was not the object of my amendment. But I did wish to present to the House the consideration that an appropriation of twenty per cent. additional compensation was made under the lead of the gallant member of the Committee of Ways and Means, which was so managed as to deprive of all benefit of it those clerks who had been removed for political opinions, and it was given to those who took their places. I shall never consent that that decision was right.

Mr. STEVENS. We have been two hours on this bill, and I now move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing all general debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALLISON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the Senate amendment to House bill No. 1227, making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, and come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. STEVENS. I now move that when the House resolves itself again into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order all general debate shall terminate in one minute.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had concurred in the resolution of the House providing for the suspension of the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules of the two Houses for the remainder of the session of Congress.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendment, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. No. 746) for the organization of land districts in the Territories of Arizona, Idaho, Utah, and Montana, had agreed to the conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Messrs. STEWART, EDMUNDS, and PATTERSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

Also, that the Senate insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 534) to provide for the allotment of members of the Supreme Court among the circuits, and for the appointment of a marshal for the Supreme Court; had agreed to the conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Messrs. TRUMBULL, HARRIS, and HENDRICKS conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 220) for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels-of-war and steam-machinery; and

An act (S. No. 501) amendatory of an act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Montana, approved May 26, 1864.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. STEVENS moved that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to take up the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ALLISON in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 1227, making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. GARFIELD.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend pro forma, that I may make a brief explanation.

The letter which has been produced in support of this claim was addressed to me in March, 1865. I remember it very well. The claimant has been for several years and is now our principal engrossing clerk. In the year 1855 he was discharged from the Treasury Department on account of his political opinions, previous to which time he had been employed in that Department in addition to his regularly assigned duties in attending to the correspondence connected with the Coast Survey. For that work he was not paid.

When my attention was called to the matter I addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Fessenden, about it. He replied to that letter, and in his reply he says:

"A reference to the records shows that the services were rendered as claimed by Mr. Strohm, and it also further appears that for similar services rendered for many years prior to the period during which Mr. Strohm performed the duties alluded to compensation had been provided by Congress. But such provision did not cover the period of Strohm's services, and his claim, therefore, was consequently disallowed."

That is, every other man who did such work was paid for it except Mr. Strohm, who got nothing because there was no appropriation covering his case. His claim has been examined by my colleague, the chairman of the Committee of Claims, [Mr. DELANO,] and he also is satisfied that it is a correct claim. I withdraw my formal motion to amend.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of line one hundred and five:

To enable the joint Committee on the Library of Congress to purchase the painting of the first reading of the emancipation proclamation by President Lincoln, executed by Francis B. Carpenter, $25,000.

I want to say but a word upon this amendment. Without pretending to any ability to judge critically of pictures—

Mr. SCOFIELD. I rise to a point of order. I find that in this auction it is "quick or gone."

[Laughter.]

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Has the point of order been decided?

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope that no point of order will be raised upon this amendment.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. But there will be.

Mr. CONKLING. I shall most certainly make a point of order upon it even if nobody else does. I think we can find some better way of throwing away $25,000 than this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the point of order was made too late, because the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] had begun to debate the proposition.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Not before the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] had risen to make the point of order.

Mr. UPSON. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Will the Chair allow me to say that the moment the Clerk had finished reading, before the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] opened his mouth or could have opened it, I rose to my feet and addressed the Chair; but probably the heavier voice of the gentleman from Ohio drowned mine.

Mr. CONKLING. That is my recollection of it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think there will be two sentences of mine found in the Globe of tomorrow, before the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] opened his mouth.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the statements of gentlemen, the Chair must decide that the point of order was made in time, and that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is not in order.

Mr. UPSON. I withdraw my appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill. Mr. PRICE. I move to amend this bill by striking out the following:

To pay for completing the repairs and furnishing the Executive Mansion, $35,000.

I do not know that I need say anything in support of my amendment. It is very well known to every member of this House that at the last session of Congress we appropriated $30,000 for this very purpose, which money I presume has all been expended, or this would not now be called for. Now, if it requires $30,000 to furnish one dwelling-house, and then $25,000 to pay for the trimmings, I for one will not record my vote in favor of such wastefulness and wickedness; and I do not think the Representatives of the people ought to indorse any such wasteful and wicked expenditures.

Mr. CONKLING. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] will allow me, I will state that my recollection is that we have appropriated for this Executive Mansion about seventy-six thousand dollars in all.

Mr. PRICE. So much the worse then. I am obliged to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] for giving me that information. And now we are asked to appropriate $35,000 more.

Mr. CONKLING. A member near me says that the amount we have appropriated is twice the sum I have named.

Mr. PRICE. That is worse yet.

Mr. CONKLING. And not only that, but in order that this Executive Mansion may be made sound from roof to foundation, there is another item here which reads as follows:

To thoroughly repair the roof of the Executive Mansion, $2,500.

Now, if any gentleman on the Committee of Appropriations, or upon any other committee, will invent any mode, whatever may be its cost, of reforming this Executive Mansion, putting it in order outside and inside, making it decently wholesome, I should feel that I was discharging my duty by voting for almost any sum that I can think of now, to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. HOTCHKISS, (in his seat.) That can be done by "cleaning out" the occupant.

Mr. CONKLING. A friend behind me suggests that that can be done by "cleaning out" the occupant. But you cannot do that by continuing to make appropriations; that is the difficulty. If you could, I would be very willing for one to vote for an appropriation for that purpose.

I concur with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] in expressing the hope that neither this nor any other appropriation will be made for the Executive Mansion, until we can ascertain that it is necessary for expenditures that cannot be made out of the excessive sums which have been heretofore appropriated.

Mr. KASSON. I suppose I have felt as sincere a regret as any gentleman in this House respecting the amount of appropriations that have seemed to be rendered necessary for the Executive Mansion. As a matter of truth and justice, I am compelled to say that a large portion of the appropriations heretofore made have been necessary to satisfy preëxisting claims under a management of the Executive Mansion which, to say the least of it, was unfortunate. Many gentlemen will understand to what I allude.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not.

Mr. KASSON. At the close of the Administration of our late President, there was an interregnum, during which a good deal of the property in the Executive Mansion disappeared by reason of the absence of a proper custodian of the property. The house was left almost naked of available furniture. And it was necessary to make, and we did make, I think with a liberality which, to say the least of it, was just, if not more than just, the appropriation which at that time was deemed necessary.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state what amount was appropriated in two or three bills pretty early in the last session for furniture in and decorations of the Executive Mansion?

Mr. KASSON. I am unable to state what all the appropriations would amount to if added together; I can only make the general statement that the whole amount is very large. I now make the additional statement that the appropriation here asked for is not to pay for future expenditures. I am compelled to say that a member of the Committee of Appropriations, who has taken no part in this debate, made an examination of the Executive Mansion at the request of the committee, and reported to us upon the facts as he found them to exist there. This appropriation is, in point of fact, to pay for property that is to-day in the possession of the United States, and is now in the Executive Mansion. I regret that the gentleman who made the examination does not state himself the result of that examination as reported to the committee. All I have to say upon the subject is, that if the property now in the Executive Mansion be not paid for, we must return that property.

Mr. CONKLING. Is there an opportunity to do that?

Mr. KASSON. My friend from New York understands of course the only way in which it can be done. It is to take down the furnishings in part, so far as it can be done, and return them.

I wish to add one other statement, which is, that I sincerely believe there has not been for several years so excellent a management of this department of the Executive Mansion as exist there to-day in respect to the care of the property. Formerly, owing to a deficiency in the attendance at that Mansion a great deal of property was destroyed. Casual visitors coming in cut out pieces of the lace curtains and in other similar ways mutilated the furniture for the purpose of carrying away mementos—acting on a belief, which unfortunately is largely practiced upon by many, that as the public property is the property of the people, a minute portion of it belongs of right to each individual. In this way the Executive Mansion became more dilapidated about a year or eighteen months ago than it probably ever was before during the existence of the Government.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will the gentleman permit me to ask whether the recent change proposed in reference to the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings will have a tendency to relieve us against any such trouble in the future?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] has expired.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to amend by striking out the last word of the paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, if my recollection serves me truly, the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON], sometime during the last session, speaking more or less in behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, assured the House that there had been substantially no improper carrying away of property from the Presidential Mansion; that some bijouteries and matters of that sort had been removed, and that to some extent curtains and other things of that sort had been mutilated by people taking away fragments as mementos.

Mr. KASSON. Will my friend allow me to correct his recollection in that particular?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. KASSON. So far as concerned one person touching whom the public prints had made charges I made a statement that the responsibility did not rest there, but that the damage and loss of the public property resulted as I have stated to-day from a species of interregnum, at a time when nobody was in active and honest charge of that property. The statement I made simply exculpated one person touching whom the public prints had made charges.

Mr. CONKLING. I recollect the zeal with which the gentleman wiped away the stain of which he speaks. I think I remember also that he gave the House to understand that beyond the carrying away of gifts and ornaments and certain things which might properly be taken, and the disposition made of a couple of vases, if I remember correctly, there had been very little of the furniture of that house taken away.

But I will admit for the purpose of the present argument that it was all taken away, that the house was stripped of curtains, carpets, furniture, and decorations. And then I want to remind the committee that not less than $76,000—I state this sum because it was afterward ciphered up and thrust in the faces of myself and others as the extravagant sum which we had voted for this purpose—not less than $76,000 I say was appropriated—

Mr. STEVENS. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him? I think if he will look at the various sums appropriated for this purpose since Mr. Lincoln's death he will find that they amount to double the sum he has named.

Mr. CONKLING. Very well, sir; then I will add a hundred per cent. to my statement, on the responsibility of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and will endeavor to double the force of the proposition when I submit to the committee that if twice $76,000 has been spent at a time like this in the ornamentation of that house it is high time that we should resolve to spend no more.

Now, I pass over all that rumor says, what carpets have come here and not gone down upon the floor, and what has been done otherwise that is very unwholesome, on this subject. And I say if there be furniture in that House which twice $70,000 has not paid for and which can be returned to those who furnished it, let it be returned in the name of common honesty and ordinary decorum, and do not let us in addition to everything that affronts the public sense, in addition to everything that affronts common decency concerning this White House, do not let us become particeps criminis in lavishing enormous sums loosely and improperly on the decoration of this private and official residence.

Mr. PRICE. I have moved to strike out this paragraph for the reasons so well given by the gentleman from New York. I was not aware at the time we had spent $152,000 on this White House if the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] be correct. I submit to this House whether $152,000 is not amply sufficient to furnish and decorate any dwelling of the size of the Executive Mansion in the land? As my friend from Minnesota says it is enough to build the house and furnish it. In the Committee of the Whole there is no laying upon the table and no ordering of the yeas and nays; but if by any possibility my motion to strike out should not prevail, I hope by some parliamentary tactics we will be able to get a vote in the House, so that the country may know who is for and who is against this extravagant appropriation.

One hundred and fifty-two thousand dollars to furnish and paint one man's house in this country! We are Republicans, are we? and yet we are going to tax the people to the extent of $152,000 to paint and furnish the President's House. Let us see whether the people are willing to be taxed for this purpose or whether they will permit those to remain here who vote for such an extravagant appropriation.

Mr. RADFORD. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the amount of $152,000 which he names does or does not include the items of appropriation in this bill? I am told that it does. I want to ask further whether the $152,000 does not include all the appropriations for a series of years as well as the appropriations contained in this bill?

Mr. PRICE. I want to say to the gentleman from New York, right here and now, that this $152,000 has been expended since the death of Mr. Lincoln.

Mr. RADFORD. It is for a series of years and includes the present amount asked for.

Mr. PRICE. Not according to the testimony.

Mr. RADFORD. It is a fact whatever the gentleman's testimony may be.

Mr. PRICE. We are dealing with the facts and figures before the committee, and if these facts are correct we have expended $152,000 for finishing and furnishing the Executive Mansion. Yet we are now asked for $35,000 additional. For one, while I have a seat upon this floor, I will protest in the name of common honesty to the people who are the taxpayers in this country against any such appropriation.

Mr. RADFORD. I would like to know whether appropriation has not been required to replace the furniture which it took ninety and odd trunks to carry away when the previous occupants left the White House. I know from the steward that ninety and odd trunks of goods were then taken away.

Mr. PRICE. I will say that it depends on the size of the trunks and the quality of the material packed in them so far as their value is concerned. Then we should know who placed them there and who carried them away.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to amend by reducing it $5,000, for the purpose of saying that in the exercise of the feeling in which most of us participate, that there has been a gross misuse of the public money in this instance, it is possible we may be doing injustice to some meritorious people by striking out the entire appropriation. In order that I may vote intelligently, therefore, on this matter, I ask the Committee on Appropriations, as this is a deficiency, whether this or any portion of it goes to pay the operatives, laborers, or artisans who have been employed by the Superintendent of Public Buildings, who have carried on their work there innocently and in good faith, who have rendered honest and meritorious service, and who have not been paid? In this aspect we must necessarily do justice to these men, whether we can hold responsible our own agents afterward or not. I ask the chairman whether any portion of this is for that purpose or not?

Mr. CONKLING. If the gentleman will allow me I wish to say that I do not understand that this question presents itself at all; on the contrary, one of the oldest maxims of the law is that if a party assuming to be an agent, but not being such, makes an agreement in which he does not charge his principal, he charges himself. If the occupant of the White House, or anybody in his interest, has employed an artisan to do that which he is not authorized to do, to him, and not to the Government which he attempted illegally to represent, must that artisan look, and the law will aid him in enforcing his claim.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to say that that principle does not apply to this case. In the first place the occupant had nothing to do with making these repairs; they are made by the Superintendent of Public Buildings. He is an officer of the Government, and if in the exercise of his duties within the scope of his authority he has employed A, B, and C as common laborers, I should be very sorry to be placed in the attitude of sending them to this agent, who, though acting in the general scope of his authority, had exceeded the limitation fixed by the appropriation, and making them depend for their compensation upon the solvency of such a person as might happen to be their employer.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire to say simply this: that the subject of repairing the White House and furnishing it was thoroughly examined by the Committee on Appropriations last session. No thorough repair or refurnishing of it has taken place for a number of years. It was very much dilapidated, a great deal of the furniture destroyed, pieces of carpet cut, many valuable things carried away, portions of table furniture lost and sets broken up. Large appropriations have been made, I do not know how much, probably $150,000 in all, for repairing the building and refurnishing it, and it now seems to be in a very good condition. The appropriation asked for is the deficiency, to pay for furnishing and work done upon and in the house already as I understand it, and not to purchase additional material or to do additional work. I suppose there is no other way than to vote it. I dislike this way of half doing business, and it is high time the House of Representatives rebuked those officers of the Government who go on from time to time and run the Government in debt which they are not in advance authorized to do by act of Congress.

I desire to say another word in reply to a remark of the gentleman from New York [Mr.

RADFORD] in reference to the ninety trunks or boxes which he says were carried away from the White House. That whole matter was explained last session. The newspaper reports and rumors with which the air was filled at that time were shown to be false and without any foundation whatever. The principal part of these boxes were mere bouquet-boxes sent to officers of the Army, as was shown. The newspapers picked up the rumor and said that the occupants of the White House were sending away furniture in boxes.

Mr. RADFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. RADFORD. I do not make the statement upon any newspaper report, but upon the authority of the steward who packed the trunks with the different kinds of goods at the time they were carried away; and I wish now to say, in addition to what I said, that an amount equal, I think, to $30,000 of this appropriation is for back indebtedness, to pay for the goods that were carried away in those trunks.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Not by any manner of means.

Mr. RADFORD. I assert it and defy contradiction.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I ask the gentleman where he saw the testimony of the steward to that effect.

Mr. RADFORD. I got it from his own mouth.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. We had him before our committee.

Mr. RADFORD. And he swore to that fact before the committee.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. There never was a greater mistake, unless the gentleman alludes to some other committee. Did he appear before a committee of which I am a member and swear to that?

Mr. RADFORD. I do not know what committee; but a committee of this House.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The gentleman did not hear him swear and I did. He appeared before the Committee on Appropriations, of which I am a member, and was there examined, and he neither swore to it nor stated it.

Mr. RADFORD. He is in town.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. There is not a word of truth in it.

Mr. RADFORD. Does the gentleman deny that $30,000 of the appropriations is to cover that amount which was taken away?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I do. These appropriations were made for the purpose of refurnishing the White House because it was in a dilapidated condition, no thorough refurnishing of it having taken place during the entire period of the war, when Washington city was more full of men than ever before or since; when everybody, soldiers and all, who flocked to Washington flocked also to the White House to see it and its inmates. The doors were open, and during those four years there must necessarily have been large dilapidations, wearing out of carpets, and destroying of furniture. The building as well as the furniture had gone into decay generally.

Mr. MAYNARD. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I renew the amendment for the purpose of making a statement to the House in answer to the intimation of the gentleman from Tennessee, and some of the facts stated here. First, let me say I concur with the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] as a member of the Committee on Appropriations; and secondly, let me state in answer to the gentleman from Tennessee that we did find that the Executive Mansion was greatly worn and the furniture very much dilapidated in consequence of the extraordinary influx of visitors during the war, and that large appropriations were necessary to fit it up for occupancy with the decency and propriety that belonged to the Executive Mansion of a great Republic.

And again, I wish to say that a portion of the expenditure now provided for I understand to be exclusively for the articles now contained in the White House, and for the work done in putting them in a proper condition, and that this appropriation is reported by the committee because the simple alternative is presented to the committee of either refusing to pay for the property that we have received, to pay the laborers for putting it in its place, or else to abandon it and leave them without any pay whatever. That is the whole question as presented by the committee, and all I desire is that the Committee of the Whole shall understand the facts.

It will be observed that the language of the appropriation is "for completing the repairs and furnishing the Executive Mansion." It is intended to close the whole account, and I have only to say that while Congress did appropriate for the subject proposed, namely, the repairs and furnishing, the amount required to complete the work has been in excess of the amount appropriated; and I think the only question really before the committee is whether they will allow the property to be returned, or so much of it as can be returned, or whether they will allow Congress to place the United States in a position of failing to pay the bills that have been incurred by authority of the persons in charge, but in excess of the appropriations heretofore made. I believe that to be the whole question, and if the committee understand it I shall very cheerfully accord with their decision, whatever it may be.

Mr. HILL. I do not understand that it is the Congress of the United States that is placing the country in this attitude. At the last session we appropriated, if I recollect right, $30,000 for repairs upon the White House. Now, that was as much as to say to those who had that matter in charge that when they had expended that sum they had gone to the extent of the authority conferred upon them by Congress; that they should not expend one dollar beyond it. The course they should have pursued then was to have expended that amount of money, and there stopped, instead of going on as they did with the general system of improving the White House under their own idea of how it ought to be improved. After expending the money they should have waited until Congress appropriated a further sum. But they have gone on and expended, not only the $30,000 appropriated, but $35,000 more.

Now, sir, if we are to abandon the principle that Congress is to appropriate the money that is to be expended by the Government we ought to vote this down, and we ought expressly to declare that we do it because we do not any longer adhere to the principle that Congress must make appropriations before the money can be expended. If we recognize the principle that money may be expended without authority in this case we may as well recognize it in any other case. Now I am not disposed to be niggardly in regard to the expenditures of the White House merely because it happens to be occupied as it is now under peculiar circumstances of the case by the present incumbent. Whatever is fair, right, and liberal I am in favor of. But whatever we give let us give it in accordance with law.

Mr. BIDWELL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Will the gentleman withdraw it?

Mr. BIDWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. KASSON. I should be glad to close debate on the subject, for there is a great deal of business back of this. I withdraw my amendment, but unless the debate closes very soon I shall make the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I renew the amendment for the purpose of saying that so far as is shown by what Congress has done upon this subject the intimation made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] that these expenses have been incurred in consequence of the extravagance or misconduct of anybody connected with Mr. Lincoln's Administration is not sustained, if the Committee on Appropriations have dealt ingenuously with the House and with the country.

I find that on the 19th of December, 1865, Congress passed an act containing an appropriation of $30,000 for the furnishing and repairing of the Executive Mansion. It does not appear to have been a deficiency appropriation. But it has since appeared, if the Committee on Appropriations have diligently inquired into this matter, that the expenditures by Mr. Lincoln's Administration, which had then for eight months ceased to exist, had not amounted to more than $30,000.

Subsequently to that, and on the 7th of April, 1866, Congress appropriated $46,000, which upon the statute appears to be an appropriation for prospective expenditures; for it is distinctly stated that the appropriation is made in conformity to estimates. Therefore, in the nature of the case, if the language employed by the Committee on Appropriations was intended to express the truth the appropriation was for an expenditure thereafter to be made.

Subsequently, on the 28th of July, 1866, we appropriated $20,000 more, which by the language of the statute was also for an expenditure not then made.

Therefore if you charge to Mr. Lincoln's Administration the sum of $30,000 appropriated in December, 1865, it still appears that for expenditures at the Executive Mansion under the present Administration we have appropriated $66,000. And now we are asked to appropriate $35,000 more upon the ground of expenditures already incurred. If that money has been already expended, then it has been expended for some extravagant purpose, if for nothing more, and it has been expended without authority of law. It is no disgrace to this House or to the country that we refuse to ratify and approve that expenditure. But it is a disgrace to the country if public servants, of whatever grade or rank, by incurring expenditures without authority of law may lay an obligation upon us to meet them. The only way in which we can rebuke these people, and the only way in which we can put a stop to such expenditures in the future, is to throw upon wasteful or extravagant or dishonest public servants the necessity of paying for or returning these articles which they have purchased without authority of law. Let them also suffer the disgrace, which is only too slight a punishment for their conduct.

Mr. RADFORD. I desire to correct a slight mistake made by myself when I was last upon the floor. I then stated that of the amount appropriated for the Executive Mansion, $30,000 was for past indebtedness. I am now informed, and I believe correctly, that the amount of past indebtedness was $29,000; and the bill for that amount presented by a Mr. Alexander, of this city, was signed by Mr. Lincoln. I make that correction, adding that what I now state I believe to be the exact truth.

Mr. SPALDING. I beg leave to state for the information of this committee, that before the Committee on Appropriations consented to insert this last item in this appropriation bill, they sent a member of their committee, the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. Blow,] to the White House to examine into the correctness of every item included in this sum. He reported to the committee that this item of appropriation was necessary. Am I right in that? I think I am correct. The member of the committee, the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. Blow,] went to the White House, and with a lady there he went over all the rooms, examined the articles included in the bill, and reported to the committee that this appropriation was necessary.

Mr. KASSON. I ask for two or three minutes only, to express my regret that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Boutwell,] has seen proper to revive again the scandals that pertained to the recent session, not the present session, but the last session of this Congress. I regret it, sir; and I distinctly state now—for I will adhere to the truth at whatever cost—that the sums to which the gentleman has referred were in large part appropriated to pay prior expenditures in excess of the appropriations, and I wish now to say that it was done simply for the reason that those appropriations were insufficient to accomplish the purpose that had been previously authorized, and that the officers of the Government who were in charge of the matter, instead of stopping the work when the amount appropriated had been exhausted, went on to complete the work authorized, without awaiting the additional appropriations. I say again that the same question arises here to-day upon this appropriation; but I will not go further into that subject, which was discussed on a former occasion; for I do not believe in washing (to use the phrase of a certain newspaper) the dirty linen of the Republic in the eyes of the world; and I will not do it.

I desire simply that the committee shall understand that the object of this appropriation was authorized, but that the expenditures exceeded the amount of the appropriation; and the only question is whether we shall now foot the bills or leave the parties who furnished the property and did the work unpaid.

For the purpose of closing debate on this section, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALLISON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 1227) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, had directed him to report that the committee had come to no resolution thereon.

MAIL CONTRACTS, ETC.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Postmaster General, transmitting in compliance with the twenty-second and twenty-fifth sections of the act of July 2, 1836, the annual report of that Department on contracts, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

REPRESENTATION OF GEORGIA.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I rise to a question of privilege and present the credentials of Mr. J. H. Christy, claiming a seat in this House as a Representative from the sixth district of Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The credentials will be referred under the rule to the joint Committee on Reconstruction.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. KASSON. I move that when the House shall again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the deficiency appropriation bill all debate on the pending section terminate in one minute.

Mr. NIBLACK. I hope the gentleman will allow a little longer time for debate. I desire to occupy five or ten minutes.

Mr. KASSON. Very well; for the purpose of accommodating my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations I will modify my motion so as to terminate debate on the pending section in five minutes.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. The last two paragraphs of this section are important and should not be disposed of without any debate. One of them contains an appropriation of $50,000 for the American Colonization Society.

Mr. KASSON. Very well; I modify my motion so as to terminate debate only on the pending paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to resume the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ALLISON in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1227) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes.

Mr. NIBLACK. I move to amend the pending amendment by striking out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I have given some attention to this subject, and I confess that I should feel very much mortified if the House should refuse to vote the amount of money which the committee propose to appropriate. Twenty-nine thousand dollars of the first appropriation went, as I am informed, to pay previous indebtedness, therefore the present occupants of the Executive Mansion can only be charged with the expenditure of the remainder of the appropriation. I also ascertained on inquiry that the Executive Mansion had never been thoroughly refurnished and in good condition since the days of the administration of President Pierce. We know that the family which now occupies it when they first went in found it almost entirely stripped of many things which were necessary for their comfort and convenience, and that they had to go upon the streets and purchase table linen and articles necessary for furnishing the beds in that establishment. We know that the carpets were all faded and soiled, and that the East room was in no condition to be exposed to the inspection of visitors.

The committee reported an additional appropriation last spring, which has already been referred to. The Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds—not the President, for he gives it no especial attention—proceeded to institute a thorough renovation of the White House. After going on for awhile he informed the committee that the amount appropriated was insufficient, and at the close of the last session we made an additional appropriation to complete the object in view.

When it was found that the appropriation was insufficient to restore the White House from the dilapidation into which it had fallen, the Commissioner and the President's family were in this dilemma: should they proceed to put it in a condition in which it could be thrown open to visitors, or should they allow it to remain as it was and exclude all visitors during the coming winter season. After taking the advice, I am informed, of some members of this House and of some of the officers of the Government, and on being advised that it was their duty to prepare for visitors, that the people expected that it would be thrown open, and that they would run no risk in throwing themselves upon the generosity of Congress in this respect, the work was proceeded with.

It was evidently the intention of the Committee on Appropriations that the Executive Mansion should be placed in a good condition, so that the present occupants could make themselves and their guests comfortable and leave it in an inhabitable condition for the occupants who should come after them. The committee were satisfied that $35,000 in addition was necessary for that purpose. This money has been expended, and the only thing now is, will Congress ratify that expenditure and pay for what has been furnished for the Executive Mansion? Any gentleman who will examine it will find that it is only enough to make it decent and comfortable for those who occupy it. Some of the rooms are still poorly carpeted and very cheaply furnished. Sir, this is a matter in which the President and his family have but very little interest comparatively. They are but the temporary occupants, and ought to be only expected to take reasonable care of the house and furniture while they occupy it. The best and most expensive rooms are only used by them when thrown open for the reception of company. We ought to feel as much interest as they in seeing that the establishment is in a fit condition for the reception of company and the inspection of the public.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend the text by adding the following:

Provided, That no further payment shall be made on any account for repairs and furnishing the Executive Mansion until such accounts shall have been submitted to a joint committee of Congress and approved by such committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred on Mr. PRICE's motion to strike out.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 50.

Mr. PRICE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PRICE and Mr. NIBLACK were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 63.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To supply a deficiency in fuel for the President's House and for the Capitol, $2,000.

Mr. CONKLING. If we can have an understanding that we shall be allowed once in the House, on the yeas and nays, to vote on these propositions I will be satisfied.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman does not make any motion.

Mr. CONKLING. I refrain from making any motion in order to have such an understanding.

Mr. KASSON. I refer the gentleman to the chairman of the committee. I am not in charge of the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HILL. I rise to a question of order. I understand debate is not in order by an order of the House. I shall be glad to know, however, I am mistaken.

The SPEAKER. Debate was only closed on the previous paragraph.

Mr. CONKLING. The gentleman has taken up three minutes of my time, and if he will only sit down I will go on with my remarks.

If necessary to get a vote on the yeas and nays in the House we should skirmish in Committee of the Whole on these appropriations I am ready to do it.

Mr. ROSS. What is the question before the House?

Mr. CONKLING. I move to strike out the paragraph just read by the Clerk. I do not know what this fuel has been expended for, but I do know the convictions of the people have burned at the stake for a good while at the White House. I am opposed to it for the reasons which have been assigned in reference to these other amendments, and I wish the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, would be kind enough to say whether we may have a vote in the House on these amendments without spending any more time here, or upon some one of them.

Mr. STEVENS. We shall have a vote upon the amendments which are adopted by the committee.

Mr. CONKLING. The gentleman will understand that I mean simply the amendments in reference to these paragraphs making appropriations for the President's House. We have passed upon one of them, and I have moved to strike out the second.

Mr. STEVENS. I will agree not to call the previous question, but will give the gentleman an opportunity to offer an amendment to strike out this paragraph.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HILL. I renew the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] merely to say that if he desires to celebrate his withdrawal from this House by a display of insolence and impudence toward his fellow-members, he is certainly welcome to all the honor he can reap in that way.

I raised a question of order in good faith; one that had heretofore been ruled upon by the Chair. I desired myself to make a motion in regard to a subsequent portion of the bill. I intended nothing derogatory to the gentleman's right to be heard in this House, and I think his remarks were very unbecoming.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not know what remarks the gentleman from Indiana refers to. If he is talking merely for the pleasure of hearing the sound of his own voice I understand it entirely; but I was not aware that I made any remark to him or about him at which he could take offense. The only remark that I can recall is, that having spent two or three minutes in settling the question of order we should go on with business. If that was any offense to the gentleman from Indiana, if he is so thin skinned as that, I am sorry for it. That is all I have to say.

Mr. LE BLOND. If I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] aright, his proposition was that a vote should be taken in the House upon the paragraph that we have just passed upon as well as upon other paragraphs. Did I understand him correctly?

Mr. CONKLING. I think not, if I now understand the gentleman from Ohio. There is no understanding that I have except the promise of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that when we get into the House he will allow me there to move this and the two corresponding amendments.

Mr. LE BLOND. Exactly; and I wish merely to say this in reply: it seems to me that every member of this committee has quite as much power in settling this question as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and when this committee has passed upon and rejected a proposition, it is out of the power of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations or of anybody else to consent that a vote shall be taken upon it in the House, and I for one protest against any such arrangement.

The committee has already passed upon this proposition, and I do not propose to go back and give the Opposition an advantage in the House, and an opportunity to renew their attacks upon the Executive Mansion.

Mr. HILL. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend by striking out lines one hundred and twenty-seven and one hundred and twenty-eight, as follows: To thoroughly repair the roof of the Executive Mansion, $2,500.

I submit this motion for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to this mode of making appropriations. We have already appropriated $35,000 for completing the repairs of and furnishing the Executive Mansion. This is an appropriation "to thoroughly repair the roof." With the same propriety we might appropriate money for thoroughly repairing the floors and the walls, and thus we might go over the whole matter again.

It appears to me that the Committee on Appropriations permit themselves to be deceived by the estimates; and in following the estimates, it seems to me that they fall into traps.

We had before us the other day a bill which provided in four different places for the same manure for the public reservations. In one place it was called "top-dressing," in another "manure," in another place it came under the designation of "hauling," and in another place an appropriation was made for the "cartage" of it. I tried to get at the matter then, but all debate had had been cut off. These items were included in the estimates of the Commissioner on Public Buildings and Grounds. I do not trust him or his estimates. I do not believe in his efficiency, and I am sorry to say I do not believe in his honesty.

Mr. KELLEY. Amen!

Mr. PIKE. How about his poetry?

Mr. SCHENCK. I think he is about as good an officer as he is a poet; but of that gentlemen can judge for themselves.

I merely wished to call attention to the fact now, so that when we vote in the House without debate, we may know that here, as in the other bill to which I have referred, the same thing is provided for over and over again.

This, I believe, is one of the amendments on which it is conceded a separate vote shall be taken in the House.

Mr. STEVENS. It is not conceded.

Mr. CONKLING. This is one of the paragraphs to which I referred.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then I insist on the motion to strike out.

Mr. STEVENS. My friend from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] has reflected upon the Committee on Appropriations for making four different appropriations in a former bill for the same manure. Let me say that those appropriations were for manure for four different lots, the one in front of the Capitol, the one in the rear, and two others. We did not specify them by name; but there were four lots to be provided for.

Mr. SCHENCK. The gentleman is thoroughly mistaken. I looked at the estimates, and also at the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. Well, I do not care much about the matter one way or the other.

The question was taken on Mr. SCHENCK's motion; and there were—ayes 39, noes 46; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SCHENCK and MARSHALL were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 58.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. SLOAN. I move to strike out lines one hundred and twenty-nine and one hundred and thirty, which are as follows:

To pay for a sewer on Third street and Missouri avenue, $696.

I would like to know upon what principle or for what reason the Government is to pay for building sewers on streets which are not in front of public reservations or of public property. I would inquire of the Committee on Appropriations whether this sewer is to be built in front of any reservation or public property? I know of no reason why we should build a sewer on these streets. It is a matter that should be provided for by the city government of Washington unless these streets are in front of some public reservation or public office.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman must know that Congress takes care of all the avenues and the city takes care of all the streets. This item is for a sewer on one of those avenues.

Mr. SLOAN. The law as it now stands does not provide that the United States Government shall take care of all the avenues of the city. It only provides that where those avenues pass by the public reservations and the public property a charge shall be made against the Government for their improvement.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the gentleman allow me to say that the old law required what I claim? The law to which the gentleman refers is a late law.

Mr. SLOAN. I have had occasion to look into this question of what the law requires the Government to do in this regard. I find that there was a law upon the statute-book providing that the Government should defray the expense of improvements so long as there was any fund derived from the sale of certain lots. Since that fund has become exhausted there has been no law requiring the Government to pay anything, although a bill was presented on the part of the city and paid, amounting to $40,000, for money expended for work for which there was no law; there was no law until 1864, when a law was passed defining what portion of this expense the Government should pay. That definition is this: that the Government shall pay for improvements on the avenues only where they are in front of the public reservations.

As I understand it, there has been no practice requiring the Government to pay for these expenses since the fund to which I have referred was exhausted, and we now have a law upon the statute-book expressly defining what improvements we shall pay for. And this appropriation is asked in direct violation of that law, and I hope it will not be granted.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. SLOAN; and being taken, there were—ayes 48, noes 44; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SLOAN and Mr. KASSON were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 52, noes 48. So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent to turn back to the item of $10,000 for new hydrants along Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. ROSS. I object. I would rather go ahead than turn back.

No further amendment being offered, The Clerk read as follows:

To pay for cutting down and repairing Pennsylvania avenue, between Seventh and Eighth streets east, in consequence of the lowering of the city railroad tracks, $2,000.

Mr. PAINE. I move to strike out the paragraph just read. It is manifest to me that this is an expenditure that ought to be made by the railway company. I can see no reason why Congress should allow this railroad company to lower its track in the street and then compel Congress to pay for the expenditure necessary to cut down and repair Pennsylvania avenue. If this expense results from the lowering of the track of the railroad company it seems to me that the company itself should meet the expense. I am therefore opposed to voting $2,000 for this purpose.

Mr. STEVENS. The Committee on Appropriations had some difficulty about this item and sent one of their number to examine into it. It was found that there was a point where the railroad company was obliged to lower its track in consequence of improvements in the street ordered by the authorities.

Mr. DARLING. I move to amend by striking out the last word, for the purpose of saying that I do not know the particular merits of this appropriation. But if I am correctly informed, the railroad company was compelled to lower its track. The grade of the street was altered, and in consequence of the alteration of the grade the company was compelled to lower its track. They did so at a very great expense, an entirely unnecessary expense to them.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Were they compelled by the Government of the United States to do so?

Mr. DARLING. I do not know whether the United States Government or the city authorities altered the grade of the street; but I know they were compelled to lower their track because the grade of the street was altered. I only mention this in vindication of the railroad company. I now withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

On the amendment, there were—ayes 31, noes 32; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN, under the rule, ordered tellers, and appointed Messrs. PAINE and NICHOLSON.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 37.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to move an amendment, striking out lines one hundred and nineteen and one hundred and twenty which have been passed.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move to amend by striking out the following, being lines one hundred and nineteen and one hundred and twenty:

To place new hydrants along Pennsylvania avenue, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay three additional laborers, one at reservation No. 2, one at La Fayette square, and one at Franklin square, whose appointment is hereby authorized, $2,160, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend by striking out the paragraph just read. I believe there is no necessity for these additional laborers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For defraying the expenses of the House of Correction for Boys, in the District of Columbia, for the current year, $25,000.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move to amend by striking out this paragraph. I do not see why we should support this house of correction. I may withdraw the amendment if any gentleman can explain the propriety of the appropriation.

Mr. STEVENS. Last year Congress incorporated this institution for the correction of juvenile offenders, and made an appropriation to aid it. It now appears that the institution is organized and in operation, but has no funds to pay its expenses for the present year.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I withdraw my amendment. I do not know but that the appropriation is right.

Mr. GRINNELL. I move to amend by striking out "twenty-five" and inserting "fifteen," so as to make the appropriation for this house of correction $15,000. It seems to me that with a population in this city of one hundred and twenty-five thousand, $25,000 is a large appropriation for an institution of this kind. This is more than it costs to sustain a State prison in a State with nine hundred thousand people.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of aiding the American Colonization Society by furnishing conveyance and support to such parties as may desire to emigrate to the Republic of Liberia, $50,000.

Mr. THAYER. I move to strike out the paragraph just read.

The day has been when the scheme of African colonization enlisted, as we all know, the sympathies and active coöperation of many of the best and most illustrious men, whose names appear upon the pages of our history. But, sir, time, which tries in its severe crucible the opinions and the acts of men, if it has ever demonstrated anything, has, in my opinion, demonstrated the total impracticability of that scheme and its entire fruitlessness of results, so far as those results are connected with the idea upon which the scheme was originally framed, namely, the translation of the African race from this country to the continent of Africa. Sir, I cannot better illustrate this remark, perhaps, than by a short anecdote. A friend of mine, who not long since returned from Liberia, informed me lately that he had the honor to be present at a state dinner given by the President of Liberia, at which were present all the high officers of that republic. In the banquet-room where this dinner was given was displayed the Liberian flag, upon which was inscribed the noble sentiment, "Love of liberty brought us here." A high officer of the Liberian Government seated at the table, when this inscription was commented upon, added, "Yes, and want of money keeps us here." [Laughter.]

For one I do not wish to be put in the catalogue of those who cannot be taught anything by the lessons of experience. I will not be among those who vainly endeavor to refute the demonstrations of history, and who are ready to vote away large sums of money raised by severe taxation of the people for the purpose of expending them on a chimerical experiment, already demonstrated to be incapable of producing the results for which it was originally undertaken.

Sir, I do not intend by what I have said any reflection upon the motives, the character, or the conduct of the gentlemen who are associated in the African colonization enterprise. I know this society embraces many good and many great men among its members, and I speak not now of the missionary phase of the enterprise or of its religious or philanthropic results; but, sir, it is impossible at this late day that we should shut our eyes to the fact that the scheme as a scheme for the transfer of the colored race from the United States to the African continent, or as a solution of the great question of different races occupying the same country, has been a failure. The day of that idea has passed away forever. Then, sir, if this be true, by what authority do we propose to expend $50,000, wrung by hard taxation from the people, upon an exploded idea and a defunct enterprise?

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand the facts either in the particular or in the general as they have been stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Perhaps I am not as competent to speak in reference to this matter as he is. Some facts are, however, within my personal knowledge. From the part of Tennessee where I reside a large number of colored people have gone first to the colony and next to the republic of Liberia. Several have returned, and they have returned giving such accounts of the condition of themselves and others there that when they went back they were followed by a large number who were attracted by the representations they had made.

There was in the portion of the State of Tennessee in which I live always a very strong anti-slavery feeling, and that sentiment developed itself in deeds and other acts of emancipation, followed by emigration to Liberia. It was my destiny as a member of the bar to assist in perfecting the emancipation and personal freedom of many of these persons. The accounts we have of their condition in Liberia are eminently favorable. Among those who returned I may instance among the most recent is the present attorney general of Liberia. He is a native of East Tennessee. He went there forty years ago, but came back to revisit his kindred by blood and race. He went from the town I live in to Liberia, and from his statements I undertake to say that the scheme of settling a civilized colony on the coast of Africa is not a failure.

Mr. THAYER. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MAYNARD. I have only five minutes, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. THAYER. I ask the gentleman whether he thinks it is competent for us to vote sums of money out of the public Treasury for mere missionary purposes?

Mr. MAYNARD. That is another question.

Mr. THAYER. That is the ground on which it is advocated.

Mr. MAYNARD. I am answering what the gentleman has said. I undertake to say there has been no colonization of which we have accounts that has succeeded as this has within the period of fifty years in establishing a free republic, respected and acknowledged by the civilized world, and which has made such advancement as this has.

I could give various individual instances of persons who have emigrated there and are now there. In 1862 we passed a law recognizing the Republic of Liberia, which I supported by such remarks as I was able to make. It was planting there a friendly republic, whose commerce would be important to us.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to add to the paragraph the following proviso:

Provided, however, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended or drawn from the Treasury until after existing laws of the republic of Liberia excluding white men from the right of suffrage shall be repealed, and official evidence of such repeal shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State of the United States. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, had I the power and the position where I could exercise that power, I would have our country represented in that Government by men of color. They have very wisely ordained this feature in their constitution; for I ask gentlemen what nation of the world has ever admitted those of the dominating, conquering, land-stealing white race to which we belong to positions of power that it did not suffer in consequence of it? These people have realized by bitter and dear-bought experience that the white race are not to be trusted, and I commend their wisdom in excluding them from the ballot-box.

During the last year there emigrated to Liberia between six and seven hundred persons, and already there are something like a thousand applicants. Gentlemen will please to remember that none ever go except those who go by their own choice and preference. The practice of the society is to furnish them transportation and give them support there for six months; and the colony now give them twenty-five acres of land; formerly they gave them but ten. And I say further, that those who have gone there send back to their kindred in this country favorable reports and invite them to emigrate thither.

I call the attention of the House to the annual message of President Warner to the Congress of Liberia in December, 1865, a document which would do no dishonor to the present occupant of the Presidential Mansion or to any of his predecessors, in which he expresses the hope that is to be built upon the disenfranchisement of their race in this country. It is not only policy that there should be established upon the coast of Africa a nation with which we can always be in commercial accord, where we can establish coaling depots for our Navy, and obtain every other advantage which can be derived from such association, but it is a matter of supreme justice, it is a matter that presents itself to us upon the highest possible grounds on which any moral demand can be made upon a people. How did these men come here? Not as your ancestors and mine came, flying from oppression and seeking here an asylum. They were brought here by wrong, by crime, which we have been expiating during the last five years; and if there are thousands who desire to return to the continent where their fathers lived, and where the great body of the race will and must live, it is but just and right that we extend them aid so to do. I would not by any act of legislation do anything to compel or constrain these men to leave this country; I would simply extend to them an opportunity to go if they so desire.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The Committee informally rose, and the Speaker resumed the Chair, to receive a message from the Senate, informing the House that the Senate had appointed Mr. WILLIAMS a member of the conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House (No. 1039) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1868, in place of Mr. SHERMAN, excused.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to strike out the last words of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am against this appropriation, and hope it will be stricken out. I do not oppose it because I accept the views of my distinguished colleague [Mr. THAYER] as to the results of Liberian colonization, but because the one great want of our country at this time is labor, to develop and convert into utilities our vast and varied resources. It would be a double folly to apply the money gathered by excessive taxation unwisely imposed on industry to aid in the expatriation of laborers from our country. I am also opposed to making any appropriation which would even by the most remote implication indicate that this Congress regards a man of less value to his country because his complexion is darker, his nose flatter, or his hair more curly than that of another man. So much for my reasons for opposing this appropriation.

But, sir, were we in possession of ample funds, I would gladly vote for such a provision in aid of a successful scheme for the civilization and Christianization of the more than a hundred millions of the people of Africa, and bringing them into commercial relations with us. I would gladly vote $50,000, year by year, from a full Treasury, for this purpose. No experiment since civilization dawned has produced results equal to this benevolent effort to settle our poor freed slaves upon the pestiferous coast of Africa. They have, in less than one generation, penetrated from the pestilential coast to the high and healthy lands of that continent. Less than fifteen thousand emigrants have brought within the fold of laws like our own, enacted and administered by a Government modeled after ours, more than three hundred thousand barbarous heathen, who listen to the teachings of Christian ministers and imbibe their convictions from our literature and our history.

When the commissioners of the Colonization Society of New Jersey sought to contract for territory on which to found a new colony, the chiefs having observed the influence of other settlements made a stipulation, paramount to all others, that their adults should have free access to any church that might be established, and their then naked children, clothed by the colonists, should have free access to any schools that might be established in the territory. The commerce of the colony is growing, and gentlemen, when they talk of want of salubrity, speak of the early traditions of the colony when settlements were confined to the coast and the low lands upon the mouths of rivers near the sea.

Mr. GRINNELL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it is too late to call in question the motives and purposes of those who have been engaged in the work of the Colonization Society. I do not. I give them credit for their motives, and for much good accomplished. But, sir, the times have changed; we are living in a new era. We now have no money to spend in this direction. I am opposed to the appropriation of $50,000 for this purpose in the first place, because we have no money to spare; and secondly, because I believe that those who have heretofore desired to leave our country will desire now to remain with us.

The proviso offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIS] has some force in it, for it is true that these people in Liberia have denied to the white men there the privilege of voting. I do not wonder at that. They have had for the last fifty years a very poor example of the magnanimity of their white brethren; and I do not wonder that when they found themselves expatriated, driven from their own country, they chose to set up a Government where their oppressors should have nothing to do with the molding of their laws.

But, sir, I wish to refer to the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee, and to say, that the colored people who have emigrated to Liberia would not desire to go there now, in this year 1867, if they were living in this country, when his own State has wiped out the institution of slavery. Ay, sir, when they shall learn in Liberia of the passage of the reconstruction bill, which places the negro, from a slave and the servant of a master for fifty years, upon an equality with the proud oppressor, they will rather throw up their hands and thank God, and wait for the vessel that shall bring them back to their native land. Sir, the time has come when it should be decreed by the world that the white man is just as good as the negro if he behaves himself. I am willing as an Abolitionist of twenty years' standing to subscribe to the doctrine that a white man now is as good as a black man, if he only behaves himself as well. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I withdraw it.

Mr. SPALDING. I renew the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to state one or two facts here with regard to the propriety of appropriating the public money for this purpose. I differ from some gentlemen in regard to the success of this colony on the coast of Africa. I believe the experiment is a success. If I can believe the reports which come annually from the colony, it is a success. Now, sir, I do not ask for money from the public Treasury for the purpose of compelling the free blacks to go to the coast of Africa. No such thing. There are now eleven hundred men and women, who have been recently made free, who ask for the privilege of going to the coast of Africa and settling within the colony of Liberia. They ask for the means of transportation, and it is to enable the Colonization Society to transport these eleven hundred souls, who are now pressing their application, that this item has been placed in the bill, by virtue of a resolution passed by this House at the instance of the member from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD.] I have now explained to the committee what is wanted. The decision in regard to the propriety of the measure of course rests with them.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope that will not be done until Oregon can have an opportunity to express her sentiments upon this important subject.

The motion that the committee rise was then agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALLISON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1227, making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that when the House again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order all debate on the pending paragraph be closed in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEVENS. As several gentlemen have notified me that they have prepared amendments which they propose to offer to the deficiency appropriation bill, I will not move to go into Committee of the Whole until the evening session; but will yield now to allow the morning hour to transpire.

Mr. BIDWELL. I now ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Public Lands have the half hour for reports which they asked for last night.

Mr. SPALDING and others objected.

Mr. BIDWELL. I move that the rules be suspended for that purpose.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. I move that the rules be suspended, in order to dispense with the morning hour, and proceed to the consideration of business upon the Speaker's table.

The question was taken; and upon a division, there were—ayes 66, noes 30.

So (two thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended.

The SPEAKER. The first business upon the Speaker's table are bills from the Senate in which the concurrence of the House is requested.

PACIFIC COAST RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER. The first business on the Speaker's table is the bill (S. No. 133) entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the waters of the bay of San Francisco to Humboldt bay, in the State of California." This bill was under consideration on Saturday, the 16th of February last, and has been displaced since that time by other business.

The pending question was upon the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That S. G. Whipple, George Noble, James W. Henderson, Charles Minturn, Daniel Lobdel, George Yost, T. W. Miller, Benjamin Schenk, Joseph Woods, E. L. Gould, Samuel F. Butterworth, L. L. Robinson, J. P. Robinson, George A. Youle, John M. Carter, George

Field, C. N. Kenny, Frederick Graffe, Lewis Cooper, Robert Grant, J. B. Watson, and all such persons who shall or may be associated with them, and their successors or assigns, are hereby created and appointed a board of commissioners for the purposes and objects in this bill set forth. Within six months after the passage of this act they shall form a corporation, under the laws of the State of California authorizing the formation of corporations, for the purpose of constructing and maintaining railroads in said State; said corporation to be called the Pacific Coast Railroad Company. That said Pacific Coast Railroad Company, when duly formed under the laws of California, shall become the owners of all the rights, properties, and privileges conferred by this act, and the office of said board of commissioners shall thereupon cease and determine: Provided, That the Legislature of the State of California shall first designate and approve of said company, so formed, as the proper company to receive the grant herein made for the purpose of aiding the construction of said road. The said corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to lay out, locate and construct, furnish, equip, maintain, and enjoy a continuous railroad and telegraph line, with the appurtenances, from a point in Sonoma or Marin counties on the waters of the bay of San Francisco, by the most feasible route, to be selected by the said corporation, to Humboldt bay, in the State of California, and maintain a ferry from the point of termination to the city of San Francisco, and is hereby vested with all the powers and privileges and immunities necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this act.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby, granted to said Pacific Coast Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, for the construction of a railroad and telegraph line as proposed; and the right is hereby given to said corporation to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road material for the construction thereof. Said way is granted to said railroad to the extent of one hundred feet in width on each side of said road where it may pass through the public domain; also, all necessary ground for station buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and water-stations.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, granted to the Pacific Coast Railroad Company, subject to the conditions heretofore recited, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, and to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores over the route of said line of railway, every alternate section of public land, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of ten alternate sections per mile on each side of said railroad line, whenever on the line thereof the United States have a full title, not reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, and free from preemption or other claims or rights at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed and a plot thereof filed in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and whenever, prior to said time, any of said sections or parts of sections shall have been granted, sold, reserved, or covered by private land-grants, or occupied by homestead settlers, or preempted, or otherwise disposed of, other lands shall be selected by said company in lieu thereof, on the line of said road within thirty miles of the same, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in alternate sections, and designated by odd numbers: Provided, That the word mineral, when it occurs in this act, shall not be held to include iron or coal.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That whenever said Pacific Coast Railroad Company shall have ten consecutive miles of any portion of said railroad and telegraph line ready for the service contemplated, the President of the United States shall appoint three commissioners, whose compensation shall be paid by said company, to examine the same, and if it shall appear that ten miles of said road and telegraph line have been completed in a good and substantial manner, and in all respects as required by this act, the commissioners shall so report to the Secretary of the Interior, and patents of land, as aforesaid, shall be issued to said company, confirming to said company the right and title to said lands, situated opposite to and continuous with said completed section of said road, unless said lands are covered by the exceptions and reservations of this act, upon the final completion of said road and telegraph. And from time to time, whenever ten additional miles shall have been constructed, completed, and in readiness as aforesaid, and verified by the commissioners to the President of the United States, then patents shall be issued to said company, conveying the additional sections of land as aforesaid; and so on as fast as every ten miles of said road is completed as aforesaid.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That said Pacific Coast Railroad shall be constructed in a substantial and workmanlike manner, with all the necessary draws, culverts, bridges, viaducts, crossings, turn-outs, stations, and watering-places, and all other appurtenances, including furniture and rolling stock, equal in all respects to railroads of the first class, when prepared for business, with rails of the best quality, manufactured from American iron. And a uniform gauge shall be established the entire length of the road; and there shall be constructed a telegraph line, of the most substantial and approved description, to be operated on the entire route: Provided, That said company shall not charge higher rates to the Government of the United States or their authorized officers or agents than they do individuals for like telegraphic service. And the said railroad shall be and remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States free of all toll or other charges upon the transportation of any property or troops of the United States, and the same shall be transported over said road at the cost charge and expense of the corporation or company owning or operating the same when so required by the Government of the United States.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States shall cause the lands to be surveyed for twenty miles in width on both sides of the entire line of said road, after the general route shall be fixed, and as fast as may be required by the construction of said railroad; and the odd sections of land hereby granted shall not be liable to sale or entry or preemption after said line is located; except by said company, as provided in this act; and the reserved alternate sections shall not be sold by the Government at a price less than $2 50 per acre when offered for sale.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to and accepted by said Pacific Coast Railroad Company upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: that the said company shall, within two years from the approval of this act, survey said route, and file with the Secretary of the Interior a plot showing the location of the road from the waters of the bay of San Francisco to Humboldt bay; and that the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from the approval of this act by the President, and shall, within three years, complete not less than ten miles, and not less than ten miles each succeeding year, and shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1876: Provided, That the construction of any thirty miles within three years shall be construed to conform to the above condition.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the United States make the several conditional grants herein, and that the said Pacific Coast Railroad Company accept the same, upon the further condition that if the said company make any breach of the conditions thereof, and allow the same to continue for upward of one year, then in such case the grant hereby made and all rights and franchises created by this act shall vest in the State of California and be disposed of by the Legislature of the said State to such company or association as it may designate, and upon such terms and conditions, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, as may, in the judgment of the said Legislature, insure the speedy construction of said road.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That all the people of the United States shall have the right to subscribe to the stock of the Pacific Coast Railroad Company until the whole capital is taken up, by complying with the terms of subscription.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the acceptance of the terms, conditions, and impositions of this act by the said Pacific Coast Railroad Company shall be signified in writing, under the corporate seal of the said company, duly executed pursuant to the direction of its board of directors first had and obtained, which acceptance shall be made within one year after the passage of this act and not afterward, and shall be deposited in the office of the Secretary of the Interior.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That the said company is authorized to accept to its own use any grant, donation or loan, power, franchise, aid or assistance which may be granted to or conferred upon said company by the Congress of the United States, by the Legislature of any State, county, or municipal corporation, or by any corporation, person, or persons, and said corporation is authorized to hold and enjoy any such grant, donation, loan or power, franchise, aid or assistance to its own use for the purpose aforesaid.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That unless the Pacific Coast Railroad Company shall obtain bona fide subscriptions to the stock of said company to the amount of $400,000, with ten per cent. paid within two years after the passage and approval of this act, it shall be null and void.

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That Congress may at any time, having due regard for the rights of said Pacific Coast Railroad Company, add to, alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That lots in villages, towns, and cities shall not be subject to the provisions of this act.

Mr. McRUER. As this bill has already been read twice, I presume no further reading will be required.

Mr. RADFORD. I shall ask that it be read again before the vote is taken upon its passage.

Mr. ROSS. Has this bill been considered by any committee of this House?

The SPEAKER. It has not been formally referred to any committee. But the gentleman from California [Mr. McRUER] has stated that it has been informally considered by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. McRUER. This bill was before the Committee on Public Lands at the last session of Congress, and was reported by that committee. It was called up for action during the evening before the last day of the session; but the pressure of business was such that the House concluded to postpone it until this session. And this session the bill has been postponed from time to time until now. It is a Senate bill, which has received the approval of the Committee on Public Lands. It is to construct a road from the bay of San Francisco to Humboldt bay, on the coast of California. It provides for a road about two hundred and forty miles in length, and grants the same amount of land that is granted to the overland road or to the California and Oregon railroad, that is, ten alternate sections per mile on each side of the road. For the most part the road runs through a wild and unsettled country, which will remain for an indefinite period of time in that condition unless there is some artificial means of communication with the markets of California.

Mr. COOK. Does the bill make any other grant than of land?

Mr. McRUER. Nothing but land.

Mr. COOK. No money?

Mr. McRUER. No, sir.

Mr. COOK. No bonds?

Mr. McRUER. No bonds.

Mr. CHANLER. I understood the gentleman to state the other day that this bill included the usual grant of coal and iron. I understand the gentleman now to say that there is nothing but land granted. I would like the gentleman to explain.

Mr. McRUER. This is in the usual form of a railroad grant. It grants the land, with the exception of mineral lands; and a proviso is added that coal and iron shall not be considered as minerals under the provisions of the bill. If the company should find a coal or iron mine upon any of the alternate sections of land they would be entitled to it under the bill.

Mr. CHANLER. Have the Committee on Public Lands ever had under consideration a grant of land in a section of country where quicksilver or cinnabar was to be found? And have they so guarded this grant as to preserve such minerals to the Government?

Mr. McRUER. They have.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I modify my substitute by inserting among the names of the corporators the names of Henry Wetherbee, A. W. Mackpherson, and Charles L. Low; and also by striking out the following proviso at the end of section seven:

Provided, That the construction of any thirty miles within three years shall be construed to conform to the above condition.

It is thought that this proviso grants a little too much latitude to the company. I will now call the previous question unless some gentleman desires to discuss the matter further.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask my colleague to yield to me.

Mr. McRUER. I will do so, of course.

Mr. HIGBY. Mr. Speaker, I have no particular interest in this bill. The proposed route of the road is not in my district, but several hundred miles from it. The route of the road is from the northern waters of San Pablo bay, commencing about thirty miles north of San Francisco; thence along in the vicinity of the Pacific coast to Humboldt bay; the length of which will be between two hundred and two hundred and fifty miles. As a member of a committee whose duty it was to make investigation into Indian affairs, I traveled over that country, and I am satisfied that there is not a member of this House who, if he had the experience which I have had, would not readily sanction a measure of this character to give land to any company that would construct a railroad through that region. If this company make that improvement, the benefit which it will be to that section of country will amply repay the Government for the grant which it makes. There is no wagon-road leading to the county of Humboldt from any other county in the State, although it has some very fine lands and quite a business population, and although there are very good roads when you get into the county. It will be a great advantage, not only to the people of that section, but to the Government, to have the road built.

Mr. JULIAN. This bill was examined at the last session of Congress by the Committee on Public Lands, and a majority of that committee reported in favor of it. But, sir, I owe it to myself as chairman of the committee to say that such facts have come to my knowledge since the last session of Congress as to make it incumbent upon me to vote against the measure. The grant itself is an extraordinary one. I know personally large landholders along the line of this road have been here urging the passage of this bill for the enhancement of their own private fortunes. While I do not impute wrong motives to any gentleman, still I cannot vote for this bill.

Mr. BIDWELL. What are the facts to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. JULIAN. A very strong remonstrance has been made and is now in the committee-room against the passage of the bill on account of the extent of land granted. The other is the fact I have already stated in the gentleman's hearing, that individuals owning large quantities of land along the line of the road have been urging its passage upon the ground that their private interests would be seriously injured unless it was passed.

Mr. BIDWELL. That is a most extraordinary statement. I have heard nothing of these individuals.

Mr. JULIAN. I say to my personal knowledge gentlemen have been here claiming to own large tracts of land and urging the passage of this bill.

Mr. McRUER. I desire to say if there are individuals owning large tracts of land along this line, that land will not be included in this grant, and so much the less will inure to the company. We propose if this company will construct this road, which will be a great public benefit, they shall have a certain amount of land. It will not only enhance the remainder of the public land, but will make it all inhabitable.

Now, sir, this bill has been printed for more than a year; copies have been sent to California, and the people there know what are its provisions. I have never heard a word of disapproval from any portion of the State where this road is to run. The gentleman from Indiana says a remonstrance has been sent here against it. I well know a remonstrance has come from some parties in Detroit, Michigan, who do not know anything about it. I have not seen the remonstrance, but I am sure no regard should be paid to a remonstrance from people who are three thousand miles away.

Mr. JULIAN. There is one in the committee-room.

Mr. McRUER. Is there any sent from California? I have not heard of any opposition from that State to this bill. It is not in my district. I have no interest in it, and I have not a single friend I am aware of who is. I know if this road can be constructed under this bill it will be a great public benefit. I know that the Government never will sell this land unless some such road be constructed; that no timber will ever be taken from it unless some artificial means be made to facilitate its transportation.

The lands granted are to be continuous. The road goes for the first sixty miles through a fertile and settled district, and they will get no land until it strikes the wild uninhabited mountain land, and they only get the land according as the road is built. I am sure for everything we grant we get a corresponding good in return. I demand the previous question.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Is this given to private individuals or to a corporation?

Mr. McRUER. The corporation is to be with the approval of the State of California. The Northern Pacific railroad was incorporated in the same way.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ROSS moved to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SCOFIELD demanded the previous question.

Mr. DELANO moved to lay it on the table.

Mr. McRUER demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. McRUER and Mr. ROSS were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 36.

So the bill was laid on the table.

Mr. DELANO moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMUTATION OF SENTENCE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was bill of the Senate No. 460, in relation to persons imprisoned under sentence for offenses against the laws of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WILSON. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was read. It provides that all prisoners who have been or shall hereafter be convicted of any offense against the laws of the United States and confined in any State prison or penitentiary, in execution of the judgment or sentence upon such conviction, who shall so conduct themselves that no charge for misconduct shall be sustained against them, shall have a deduction of one month in each year made from the term of their sentences, and shall be entitled to their discharge so much sooner, upon the certificate of the warden or keeper of such prison or penitentiary, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAIL IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was bill of the Senate No. 55, to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a jail in and for the District of Columbia," approved June 25, 1866; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WELKER. I move that the bill be put on its passage.

The bill was read. The first section repeals so much of the former act as specifies the amounts to be raised and paid into the Treasury of the United States by the cities of Washington and Georgetown, respectively, before the completion of the jail.

The second section provides that it shall be the duty of the corporate authorities of Washington and Georgetown to raise, by tax or otherwise, and to pay into the Treasury of the United States at or before the completion of the jail the sum of $78,000, and also a further sum of $12,000.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WELKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ABSENCE OF TERRITORIAL OFFICERS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was bill of the Senate No. 32, to prevent the absence of territorial officers from their official duties; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF WASHINGTON STREETS.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was bill of the Senate No. 272, to authorize the corporation of Washington to reduce the width of and improve the avenues and streets of that city; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I ask that this bill be put on its passage.

The bill was read. The first section authorizes the corporation of the city of Washington, subject to such limitations and restrictions as Congress may from time to time prescribe, to regulate the width and method of improvement of the carriage-ways and foot-ways, and of all that portion of the surface not included in carriage-ways or foot-ways, of all streets or avenues in the city which exceed one hundred feet in width, excepting Pennsylvania avenue and the portion of Louisiana avenue between Fourth and Fifth streets west. It provides also that such streets or avenues as are now occupied by railroads shall have a paved carriage-way in their center and a width of one hundred feet between the curbs; that the pavements on each side shall be fifteen feet wide; that the steps shall not extend more than seven feet beyond the building lines; and that the residue of each street or avenue between the points already designated shall be reserved for trees and shrubbery; one row of trees to be planted in the pavements two feet within the lines of the curbs, and another row, parallel to the first, on the residue of each street or avenue.

By the second section, all acts inconsistent with this act are repealed.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CONKLING. I am very glad of it, for I want to know from the gentleman from Illinois what necessity there is for this bill?

Mr. INGERSOLL. I will state it to the gentleman.

The expense attending the paving and improving of the wide streets and avenues of this city is very great, and it has to be borne by the property-holders who own property lying contiguous to those streets and avenues. This bill authorizes the reduction of the width of the streets by increasing the width of the sidewalks to some extent, and by taking portions of the streets and avenues and putting them into parks. It allows no interference, however, with any street not exceeding one hundred feet in width, and it allows no interference whatever with Pennsylvania avenue, nor with the portion of Louisiana avenue between Fourth and Fifth streets west.

Mr. MAYNARD. This is a new bill, to which my attention has not been called until now, and it does not strike me very favorably. This city was laid out after much consideration, looking not merely to the temporary convenience of its then inhabitants, nor even to the number that it now has, but looking forward to a time not far distant when it should be the capital of a great nation, numbering its population by the hundred millions; and I can readily conceive why property-holders who live upon these streets would be very glad to see these streets narrowed and their lots enlarged, so as to give them that much additional private property and also diminish their public liabilities to that extent. It does seem to me, with all deference to my distinguished chief upon the Committee for the District of Columbia, [Mr. INGERSOLL]—and I defer to no man more profoundly than I do to him—that we had better not pass this bill until it has gone through the sifting processes that bills go through in that committee. I therefore suggest to him the propriety of allowing this bill to go over until the next Congress, when it can be considered with more deliberation.

Mr. DAWES. I hope this bill will arrest the attention of the House, for I am very confident that if they once come to understand what there is in this bill that will be pretty much the last of it. It means, if it means anything, the destruction of the symmetry and beauty of this city and the abandonment of the original plan upon which it was laid out and upon which it has been built. If it means anything and is to have any effect at all, it is to permit the corporation of Washington to narrow these streets, to pave such portions of them as they please, to make sidewalks at first, and then incorporate a portion of them into building lots, according as may be suggested by the owners of the lots adjoining those streets; it is to destroy the symmetry of that city which was laid out originally, as has been stated, by George Washington, and which is, as a whole, beautiful in itself and worthy of the capital of the nation. In the last moments of this session it is proposed, without arresting the attention of anybody, to abandon the whole plan and system upon which this city has been laid out. I hope if that is done at all it will only be done after all the members of the House fully understand what lies under this bill.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I am quite as glad as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] that the attention of the House has been directed to this subject. The gentleman from Massachusetts, and also my distinguished colleague upon the committee, [Mr. MAYNARD,] have taken the right position upon the great question in regard to preserving the symmetry of this city and beautifying and adorning it. Congress has heretofore, to a great extent, neglected the original plan of the founders of this city, and has left it to the corporate authorities to do the best they could with these extremely wide avenues. That best has not amounted to much, so that there is not to-day a single avenue in this city that would be considered respectable in one of the meanest incorporated towns in the country.

Mr. DAWES. Do not charge that upon Congress!

Mr. INGERSOLL. Yes, sir; Congress is responsible for it.

Mr. DAWES. Then it is because Congress did not clean out the whole city organization here and take the government of the city into its own hands.

Mr. INGERSOLL. That may be. Congress has the authority to clean out this city organization and to place the government in the hands of a commission, as has already been once done. But Congress has also exclusive jurisdiction, and has always exercised it, over the avenues of the city. If in the exercise of that jurisdiction it will improve them, beautify them, and relieve the property-holders of this enormous expense, the property-holders and inhabitants of the city will be only too glad.

Mr. DAWES. I would ask the gentleman if anybody has become a property-holder upon any one of these avenues by compulsion? I would inquire if each one has not, with his eyes open, and with a full knowledge of the width of the avenues and the enormous expense necessary to beautify them and adorn them, chosen of his own will to become a property-holder upon them?

Mr. INGERSOLL. Yes, sir; he has done it of his own accord, but under the implied promise on the part of the Government that the Government would improve the avenues and keep them paved and in good order. Having said this much, and having directed the attention of the House, at least, to the extent of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] and my colleague on the committee, [Mr. MAYNARD,] to the subject, I am willing that it shall be referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, with the hope that Congress, at its next session, will do its duty in this matter.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 547, to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the time for the reversion of the lands granted by Congress to aid in the construction of a railroad from Amboy, by Hillsdale and Lansing, to some point on or near Traverse bay, in the State of Michigan, and for the completion of said road," approved July 3, 1866; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. UPSON. I will state to the House that this is a bill providing merely for an extension of the time, from February until July, for the completion of twenty miles of road. The bill contains nothing else. As the company find themselves unable to complete the road within the specified time they ask for this extension.

Mr. JULIAN. The Committee on the Public Lands have considered the bill and approve it.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. UPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPRESENTATION OF TEXAS.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I rise to a question of privilege, and present the credentials of George W. Chilton, claiming a seat upon this floor as a Representative from Texas.

The SPEAKER. The credentials will be referred, under the rule, to the joint Committee on Reconstruction.

HENRY GREATHOUSE AND SAMUEL KELLY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 338) entitled "An act for the relief of Henry Greathouse and Samuel Kelly;" which was read a first and second time, and, on motion of Mr. ALLEY, referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

RAILROADS IN CALIFORNIA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 461) entitled "An act for a grant of land to the State of California to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State;" which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BIDWELL. I wish to say in reference to this bill that the grant of land which it calls for comprises about one hundred thousand acres, which is all the land there is to grant. Sir, this bill is as meritorious as any that has been or can be presented to Congress asking for a donation of land. I believe that the grant conflicts with the interests of no other road. The construction of the proposed railroad would be a great benefit to the State of California. These parties deserve this grant as much as any private enterprise can deserve aid from the Government. But, sir, I understand that there is to be an onslaught made against this bill; that parties have written from New York in opposition to it, saying that it must be defeated at all hazards. I do not wish to consume the time of the House, but I do say that, in my judgment, no reason can be advanced against this grant that would not apply with equal force against every other grant. I object to unjust discrimination against the Pacific coast.

Mr. DARLING. Will the gentleman be good enough to state the reasons which the opponents of the bill urge?

Mr. BIDWELL. The reasons are transparent. The State of California is already falling into the grasp of monopolies, and some of those interests in these monopolies reside in New York. They have power enough to influence the New York delegation here. But I hope it will not be the disposition of this House to place California entirely at the mercy of a monopoly. I say, give every interest and every enterprise an equal chance.

Mr. JULIAN. I wish to state for the information of the House that the Committee on Public Lands have examined this measure, entirely uninfluenced by any agencies from New York or elsewhere. Looking at it upon its merits, the committee have reported upon it adversely. At the proper time I shall, if no one else makes the motion, move that the bill be laid on the table. It is an extraordinary bill, and cannot be justified by any precedent in our past legislation.

Mr. BIDWELL. I understand that the committee reported adversely upon the ground that the road would be built without this aid from the Government. If that be the ground of the objection it is altogether without foundation. I do not believe that the road can be built without aid from the Government. The route passes over a swampy country where it will be necessary to drive piles for miles. It will be necessary also to expend large amounts of money to make embankments that will stand the floods of the Sacramento river. This is a measure that ought to be carried through without delay; without the aid of the Government I do not believe that it can be. The defeat of the bill is to postpone this necessary measure and to place it practically in the hands of another company. There can be no good reason why the end asked for in this bill in the shape of a small quantity of rejected land, from which all the available land has been culled out and settled upon, should not be granted.

Mr. ROSS. Let me ask a question. I ask whether it would not be more to the interest of California to keep some of these lands for actual settlers under the homestead law than to give them to these corporations?

Mr. BIDWELL. I do not believe that in many years a single acre of this land will be taken up and settled upon unless something like this be done. Actual settlers are not so badly off even in California as to be compelled to take this waste land.

Mr. ROSS. If the land is good for nothing, why, then, does this company want it?

Mr. BIDWELL. I will answer the gentleman. Perhaps eventually it may be worth something. The company have to borrow money, and the very name of a grant of land will give them some credit.

Mr. MAYNARD. If they use it when it is acknowledged to be worth nothing to go into the market to borrow money, will we not then enable this company to practice a discreditable maneuver?

Mr. BIDWELL. I will not suppose that the company will misrepresent the quality of the land; I would not do so nor advise or aid others to do so. The small value of the land would be the true measure of the benefit to the company.

Mr. CONKLING. I am from New York, and therefore I suppose one of those to whom the gentleman refers as opposed to this bill; and I think in a few words I can justify the faith that is in me. It is an extraordinary grant in various respects. It gives away a great deal of land; it provides that lands rich in iron and coal shall not be included in the mineral lands reserved by the United States. It is also provided that none of the lands remaining to the United States not granted by the bill shall ever be sold for less than double the minimum of the usual price of the public land when sold, thus giving to the grantee virtually a monopoly in the sale of lands.

Worse than all, it proposes to aid a corporation to construct a road in competition with another road about to be built without any grant of land or any aid whatever from the Government or from anybody except those embarked in a private enterprise.

Mr. BRANDEGEE, (in his seat.) That is enough.

Mr. CONKLING. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] says "that is enough," and I yield to his suggestion.

Mr. BIDWELL. What assurance is there that road will be built without any aid from the Government?

Mr. CONKLING. I will answer. The company referred to is engaged in building a road which has thus far been hard to build because it cuts through or clambers over mountains, terminating at or near Sacramento. The proposition before us is to enable another company to build a road from Sacramento to Benicia, a place near navigable waters communicating with San Francisco. The builders already at work have built a road with its western terminus at Sacramento. They will be forced by the gravitation of trade, and so by their own interest, to connect their road with San Francisco unless, pending their effort so to connect, Congress shall step in and give to another company a premium for contracting a road to occupy the most easy and profitable portion of the route.

Mr. BIDWELL. That is one of the most extraordinary statements I have ever heard. I demand the previous question.

Mr. CONKLING moved that the bill be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIGHTS OF VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I submit the following privileged report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. No. 1134) declaring and fixing the rights of volunteers as a part of the Army, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from their amendments to the first and second sections of the bill, and that the House recede from their disagreement to the additional section of the Senate and agree to the same.

ROBERT C. SCHENCK,

H. E. PAINE,

Managers on the part of the House.

HENRY WILSON,

J. M. HOWARD,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

I will merely say that we have got all we want. [Laughter.]

The report was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CITIES AND TOWNS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 532, for the relief of the inhabitants of cities and towns upon the public lands.

Mr. JULIAN. This is a bill which has been before the Committee on the Public Lands, and we have agreed to a substitute, which I now move.

The substitute of the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That whenever any portion of the public lands of the United States have been or shall be settled upon and occupied as a town site, and therefore not subject to entry under the agricultural preemption laws, it shall be lawful, in case such town shall be incorporated, for the corporate authorities thereof, and if not incorporated, for the judge of the county court for the county in which such town may be situated, to enter at the proper land office, and at the minimum price, the land so settled and occupied in trust for the several use and benefit of the occupants thereof, according to their respective interests; the execution of which trust, as to the disposal of the lots in such town and the proceeds of the sales thereof, to be conducted under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the legislative authority of the State or Territory in which the same may be situated: Provided, That the entry of the land intended by this act to be made, shall be made, or a declaratory statement of the purpose of the inhabitants to enter it as a town site under this act, shall be filed with the register of the proper land office prior to the commencement of the public sale of the body of land in which it is included, and that the entry or declaratory statement shall include only such lands as is actually occupied by the town and the title to which is in the United States. If upon surveyed lands the entry shall in its exterior limits be made in conformity to the legal subdivisions of the public lands authorized by the act of 24th April, 1820, and where the inhabitants are in number one hundred and less than two hundred shall embrace not exceeding three hundred and twenty acres; and in cases where the inhabitants of such town are more than two hundred and less than one thousand, shall embrace not exceeding six hundred and forty acres; and where the number of inhabitants is one thousand and over one thousand, shall embrace not exceeding twelve hundred and eighty acres: Provided further, That for each additional one thousand inhabitants, not five thousand in all, a further grant of three hundred and twenty acres shall be allowed: And provided further, That in Territory in which a land office may not have been established, declaratory statements as hereinbefore provided may be filed with the surveyor general of the surveying district in which the lands are situated, who shall transmit said declaratory statements to the General Land Office: And provided further, That any act of said trustees not made in conformity to the rules and regulations herein alluded to shall be void; effect to be given to the foregoing provisions according to such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further,

That the provisions of this act shall not apply to military or other reservations heretofore made by the United States, nor to reservations heretofore for light-houses, custom-houses, mints, or such other public purposes as the interests of the United States may require, whether held under reservations through the Land Office by title derived from the Crown of Spain, or otherwise.

Mr. JULIAN. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the substitute of the committee was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JULIAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The hour of half past four having arrived, the House took a recess till half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. HILL, the Committee on Military Affairs were discharged from the consideration of the papers in the case of Rice M. Brown; and the same were withdrawn.

On motion of Mr. HILL, the papers in the case of Charles McCarthy were withdrawn from the files of the House.

INDIAN SUPERINTENDENCE.

Mr. BURLEIGH, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which, being a call for executive information, was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, instructed to lay before the House all the reports and correspondence of Indian superintendents and agents that were omitted in the report of the late Commissioner of Indian Affairs, D. N. Cooley, published October, 1866.

Mr. BURLEIGH moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTERNAL REVENUE FRAUDS.

Mr. LAFLIN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That six thousand extra copies of the report of the Committee on Internal Revenue Frauds, with the testimony, be printed for the use of the House, and six thousand copies of the report without the testimony.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING.

Mr. LAFLIN. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the memorial of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Union of Washington, District of Columbia, asking for an investigation into the affairs of the Government printing, ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it lie on the table.

The memorial referred to in this report calls for an investigation into the affairs of the Public Printing Office. It was charged in that memorial that political favoritism had been exhibited to the exclusion of loyal soldiers and to the introduction of men who had been civilians, and in some cases disloyal. That memorial was submitted to the joint Committee on Printing of both Houses, and has been by them most carefully examined. Witnesses touching these charges have been brought before the committee, and the report, which has just been made, is of a character similar to that which has been reported and adopted by the Senate. So far as the motives of the gentlemen presenting this memorial are concerned, the Committee on Printing have no charge to make. They were creditable to them, but on the contrary they are compelled from what they know to say that there is no just or proper foundation upon which to rest the charges made. So far from having proved these charges, they have shown to the entire satisfaction of every member of the committee of both Houses that in all matters referred to in this memorial the present superintendent was highly worthy of the post which he has filled.

And in this connection, inasmuch as he yesterday closed his official connection with the Government Printing Office, it is due to him to say that in courtesy of deportment, in energy, in efficiency, in fidelity to public trust, he has met the highest favor with all of the committee who have been brought in connection with him.

The committee were accordingly discharged from the further consideration of the memorial, and it was laid on the table.

BLANK-BOOKS FOR COMMITTEES.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the same committee, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That no blank-books be hereafter printed or furnished for the different committees of Congress until those now in possession of said committees are exhausted; and that hereafter such books be printed at the Government Printing Office with the number of the Congress left blank.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would ask the chairman of the committee why he finds it necessary to interfere with committees of this House in respect to the stationery, blank-books, &c., which they may deem necessary for their use; whether there is any abuse of their power which calls for interference? I trust unless there is some abuse we shall not have our committees embarrassed in this respect. Every committee must be the judge of what stationery it wants and what blanks it requires.

Mr. LAFLIN. I am very glad the gentleman from Tennessee has called my attention to the fact, for I am quite well assured from what I know of the character of that gentleman that there is nothing in this resolution which can meet his opposition or the opposition of any member of the House. It in no way relates to stationery; it in no way conflicts with the rights of any committee. But every chairman of every committee understands that it has been the practice of the Government at the commencement of each session to furnish each committee of Congress with an entire new set of books.

Now, almost every chairman of a committee knows that but a very small part of these books is used for each Congress. And it is simply in the interest of economy, simply for the purpose of using up the books which each committee has, and not with any view of interfering in the slightest degree with the committees that this resolution was introduced. Suffice it to say that the committee over which I have the honor to preside, and which I venture to say has had as much business before it as a majority of the other committees of the House, find that one book which was furnished to us is amply sufficient for us for two, three, four, or perhaps five sessions of Congress.

Mr. MAYNARD. It is morally certain that on Monday next, or as soon thereafter as practicable, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAFLIN] will be appointed the chairman of the same committee. If the facts are as he has stated, then he can retain the book he now has, and not make a requisition for another. And so with other committees.

Now, I think it would be better to leave this matter of books to the discretion of the committees. The adoption of this resolution would be an imputation upon the chairman of the committees of this House, by intimating that they would abuse the trust which we place in them, and for one I am not willing to put my name on record in favor of any such resolution.

Mr. DAWES. I do not think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] fully understands this resolution.

Mr. MAYNARD. Perhaps not. I understand it to refer to the record-books of committees.

Mr. LAFLIN. If the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] were correct, if they were in accordance with the experiences of past Congresses, there might be some force in them. When I came upon the Committee on Printing as a new member and was appointed its chairman, I never gave any orders for any books for my committee, and yet I found placed upon my desk an entire set of new books, and I also found among the archives of the committee books that were amply sufficient to have supplied the committee for one, two, or three sessions. Now, there is nothing in the resolution I have offered which will interfere with the right of any committee to order any books they may need. It certainly was not intended to accomplish any such purpose. But I do not desire to discuss this subject any further, and I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF THE TARIFF.

Mr. ALLEY. I again ask consent of the House to offer a joint resolution which was objected to this morning. The gentlemen who objected, not understanding the case then, have withdrawn their objections. I will say that it meets the approbation of the Committee of Ways and Means; it is reported not only with their consent, but with their desire. It is merely to correct a defect in the tariff.

Mr. ROSS. Let the joint resolution be read, and then I will state whether I object to it or not.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

A joint resolution to amend section five of an act entitled "An act to increase duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the paragraph of section five of an act entitled "An act to increase duties on imports and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, as follows, to wit: "On lastings, mohair cloth, silk twist, or other manufactured cloth, woven or made in patterns of such size, shape, and form, or cut in such manner as to be fit for shoes, slippers, boots, booties, gaiters, and buttons exclusively, not combined with India-rubber, ten per cent. ad valorem," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. ROSS. I guess that bill must go over.

Mr. ALLEY. If the House will hear me for two minutes, I think there will be no objection to this resolution.

Mr. ROSS. I object.

CANAL IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. BIDWELL. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Public Lands House bill No. 906, granting lands to aid in the construction of a canal in the State of California.

Mr. ROSS. I object.

Mr. BIDWELL. Let me make one word of explanation. This bill has been agreed upon in the Committee of Public Lands.

Mr. ROSS. I object. I insist upon the regular order of business.

WILLIAM PIERCE.

Mr. LYNCH. I rise to a privileged question, and call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House laid upon the table Senate bill No. 231, for the relief of William Pierce. This is a bill providing for the issue of duplicate bonds to the amount of $350, of what are known as Oregon war bonds. These bonds were sent by mail on board the steamer Golden Gate from San Francisco to Panama, in July, 1862. The steamer, with nearly all the mails, was lost on the passage, and that portion of the mails which was returned to the post office in San Francisco did not contain these bonds, as is certified to by the postmaster of San Francisco. These bonds were coupon bonds, and, as appears by the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, neither the bonds nor the coupons had been presented for redemption at the Treasury up to February 26, 1866, the date of the letter, nearly four years after the loss. An accurate description of the bonds, with their numbers, accompanies the petition. Upon the proof submitted to the Committee on Claims of the Senate this bill was passed by that body.

Mr. Speaker, unless there is a rule of the Committee of Claims of this House which precludes them from reporting any bill contemplating the issue of duplicate bonds, I do not understand why they have reported against this bill. The proof in this case is as strong as it could be in any case. There is no doubt that the bonds were mailed. The bill provides that a satisfactory bond of indemnity shall be given by the party to whom the duplicate bonds are to be issued, and who is responsible for a hundred times the amount of the bonds.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported upon adversely by the Committee of Claims, and the committee were unanimous in that report.

Now, sir, in reference to bills proposing the issue of duplicate coupon bonds, some fault has been found with the committee by members of this House because in some instances the committee have reported in favor of claims where money and bonds were lost, while in other cases they have reported adversely. But I confess I am surprised that any member understanding the facts of this case should hesitate for one moment to approve the action of the committee upon it.

I can state in a few words the facts of the case. The allegation of the party asking a duplication of these bonds is that he took some coupon bonds of the State of Oregon—Oregon war bonds, as they are called—to the amount of $350, and deposited them in the mail, to be sent to his brother in the State of Maine. The only evidence that those bonds were ever deposited in the mail is the testimony of this individual himself; so that the case depends upon his testimony alone.

Mr. BLAINE. I rise to a point of order: I ask whether a motion to reconsider the vote by which a bill has been laid on the table is debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not, if any gentleman objects.

Mr. BLAINE. Well, sir, I do not like to appear ill-natured, but at this period of the session time is very precious, and as, by the rules, this motion is not debatable, I think I must insist upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. As members were explaining the bill the Chair did not feel it to be his duty to check debate until some member should raise the point of order; but as the point of order has now been raised the Chair must sustain it. A motion to reconsider a vote laying a bill on the table is not debatable, as the original motion is not debatable.

The motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. I call for the regular order. The House resumed the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

NATHAN SARGENT DUSTIN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 470) entitled "An act to authorize the change of a name; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BALDWIN. This is a bill to which no one can object, and I hope that it will now be put on its passage.

The bill, which was read, provides that Nathan Sargent Dustin be authorized to change his name by dropping therefrom the word "Dustin;" the act to take effect from January 1, 1867.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BALDWIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOWARD UNIVERSITY OF THE DISTRICT.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 529, to incorporate the Howard University of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move that the bill be put on its passage.

The bill was read in extenso.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PHARMACEUTICAL ASSOCIATION.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 175, to incorporate the Pharmaceutical Association of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ROSS moved that it be referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 493, supplemental to an act to establish the Treasury Department, approved the 2d of September, 1789; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall have power, by an appointment under his hand and official seal, to delegate to one of the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury authority to sign in his stead all warrants for the payment of money into the public Treasury, and all warrants for the disbursement from the public Treasury of money certified by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to be due upon accounts duly audited and settled by them; and such warrants so signed shall be in all cases of the same validity as if they had been signed by the Secretary of the Treasury himself.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the bill be put on its passage.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEMPSEY REECE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 160, for the relief of Dempsey Reece, of Indiana; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution provides that the Postmaster General be required to receive proposals for carrying the United States mail on route No. 12068, between Newcastle and Mechanicsburg, in the State of Indiana; and when such bid shall be accepted, Dempsey Reece, the present contractor, shall be discharged from any further performance of his contract; and that the joint resolution shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. ROSS. I would like to know what this joint resolution is for?

Mr. FARQUHAR. It is to relieve a contractor on a small mail route in the State of Indiana, where the party instructed the postmaster to make his bid, directing it to be made at $500, but the postmaster made it at $200. The evidence amply proves this fact, and the joint resolution only provides for releasing the contractor on the reletting of the contract.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FARQUHAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AGENCIES OF INSURANCE COMPANIES.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 477, to amend an act entitled "An act to continue, alter, and amend the charter of the city of Washington," approved May 17, 1848; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that the second section of the act to continue, alter, and amend the charter of the city of Washington, approved May 17, 1848, shall be so amended as to read, "To license, tax, and regulate agencies of all kinds of insurance companies: Provided, That the tax or license shall not exceed one per cent. upon the cash premiums received;" and that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act be repealed.

Mr. WELKER. I am instructed by the Committee for the District of Columbia to move the following amendment:

Insert after section one the following:
Provided, further, That each company deposits $300 in United States bonds with the bank of Washington, as a guarantee that the one per cent. shall be paid to the corporation of Washington upon the cash premiums received semi-annually, the depositor to draw interest upon said bonds and to receive them back when all arrears are paid and the company desires to close business.

Mr. ROSS. I offer the following amendment to the amendment:

Provided further, That hereafter no license shall be granted for the sale of ardent spirits. [Laughter.]

Mr. INGERSOLL. I rise to a question of order. I submit that that amendment is not germane to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is not germane to the bill, which relates to the tax on insurance companies.

The amendment was then agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WELKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STREET RAILWAYS IN THE DISTRICT.

The next business in order on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 570, extending the time for the completion of certain street railways; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that section seventeen of the act to incorporate the Metropolitan Railroad Company in the District of Columbia, approved July 1, 1864, shall be further amended so as to extend the time for the completion of their railroad lines, except that part thereof between Seventeenth street and the Capitol, for three years from the 1st day of January, 1866.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I offer the following as an additional section to the bill:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said Metropolitan Railroad Company be, and is hereby, authorized to occupy and use, for the conveyance of passengers, such portions of the railway of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, and upon such terms as may be mutually agreed upon between the said companies; and in pursuance of such agreement the trips made by the cars of the Metropolitan Railroad Company shall be deemed to be in lieu of an equal number of trips required of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company under its charter: Provided, That this section shall not be construed as conferring any right or franchise whatever upon said Metropolitan Railroad Company, except upon the full consent and agreement of said Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company.

Amend the title by substituting therefor "An act relating to certain street railways in the District of Columbia."

Mr. ALLISON. I would like to have some explanation of that provision from the gentleman who offers it. It seems to me to be a very important provision to be thrust in here at this late hour of the session.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I will explain in a few words the object of the amendment which I offer. The corporation known as the Metropolitan Railroad Company now has authority to run its cars from Seventeenth street up here by the north side of the Capitol. If this amendment should be adopted, it will authorize the two companies, the Washington and Georgetown Company and the Metropolitan Railroad Company, to make a contract whereby the Metropolitan Railroad Company may extend their road by switches, so as to connect with the Washington and Georgetown Railroad, and make through trips on the road of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company. But, in order to protect the rights of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, there is a proviso to the amendment that there shall be no right conferred on the railroad company known as the F Street Company except by the consent and mutual agreement of the two companies, and upon such terms as the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company may see fit to agree to.

I cannot see any objection to the amendment. It leaves it entirely at the will of the two companies as a matter of contract.

Mr. ALLISON. If I understand the amendment correctly from the reading of it, it releases the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company from the necessity of making certain trips which they are now required by law to make. Am I mistaken in that?

Mr. INGERSOLL. Allow me to say that the trips to be made under the provisions of this amendment by the Metropolitan Railroad Company are to be made, if such is the agreement with the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, in lieu of trips which are now imposed by law on the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company. It will be a matter of contract, and this provision will only allow the new company to do the service instead of the old company.

Mr. DARLING. The Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company have not asked for this, and do not want it. It is an invasion of their franchise, and, in my judgment, will ultimately lead to a fraud upon the people of this District by attempting to collect on the cars of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, and under their charter, fares which cannot be collected from the people under the charter of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company. They are limited to six cents as the fare at which they must carry passengers from Georgetown to the navy-yard. The Metropolitan Company are entitled to charge seven cents; and if this provision shall be adopted, and if by any arrangement they can connect their track with that of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company and run their cars over its track to the navy-yard or, at the other end, to Georgetown, they can exact from every passenger the sum of seven cents.

Now, the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company do not ask this and do not want it. They are ready and willing to fulfill all their obligations to the people of the District under the charter which they have obtained from Congress.

Mr. MAYNARD. This proposition was submitted to me the other day. I had no conference in regard to it with the chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia, [Mr. INGERSOLL,] but I conferred with the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DARLING,] who has just spoken, and who is personally very largely interested in the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, as I understand, and he said then, as he says now, that he was opposed to this legislation. It seems to me, without stopping to inquire into any reasons, that, taking into consideration the mere fact that it is legislation not desired by, but distasteful to that company, we ought not to engage in it. I promised the gentleman from New York on that occasion, as one of the members of the committee, that no such legislation should be attempted by me, and that if brought up it would receive my opposition in the House.

I am satisfied from the examination we have made of the affairs of these companies during this winter that we ought not to engage in any legislation which, in the opinion of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, is derogatory to their rights and interests.

I hope this amendment will not be pressed by my friend and colleague on the Committee for the District of Columbia from Illinois. We have had no examination of this provision before our committee; we have had no discussion upon it here; and I hope the bill will be permitted to pass in its present shape, as there is no objection to it, and the next Congress can legislate on the subject if anything of this kind shall be agreed to by the two companies.

Mr. DARLING. There is no possible objection to extending the time for the construction of this road ad infinitum.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope my friend from Illinois will consent to let his amendment lie over until the next Congress, and let the bill pass in its present shape.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I have heard from no quarter whatever, except from the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DARLING,] to-night, any objection to the passage of this bill with this amendment attached to it. I cannot imagine how it can be detrimental to the interests of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, for there can be no right exercised under the amendment except by the consent of that company. I do not desire to infringe upon their rights, but if this is an infringement in any sense of the word they have only to object to it.

Mr. ALLISON. Will not the effect of this provision be a consolidation sooner or later of these two railroad companies, making them one corporation?

Mr. INGERSOLL. Well, that is more than I can answer. This bill does no such thing. I cannot say what some future bill may do.

Mr. ALLISON. I mean under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I think not. Under the provisions of this bill there could be no consolidation of the two companies.

Mr. DARLING. It will relieve the Metropolitan Railroad Company from the conditions of their charter, and enable them to make trips between Georgetown and the navy-yard by passing over the tracks of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company on that part of the route over which their own road is not constructed, if they can get leave to do it.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to Senate bill No. 534, to provide for the allotment of the members of the Supreme Court among the circuits, and for the appointment of a marshal for the Supreme Court.

STREET RAILWAYS IN THE DISTRICT—AGAIN.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I entertain the highest respect for the opinions, not only of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DARLING,] but of my distinguished colleague from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD,] I would be glad if I could feel at liberty to withdraw this amendment and allow this bill to pass as it comes to us from the Senate. But I prefer that the House shall take the responsibility of disposing of my amendment rather than to withdraw it.

Mr. DARLING. I am opposed to this amendment on any ground. When Congress gives a franchise to a corporation I hold that that corporation should be held to a strict accountability in all the respects contained in their charter, and that they should be required faithfully to carry out all those provisions. The Georgetown and Alexandria Railroad Company was the pioneer enterprise in this city, and it was built for the accommodation of the people of this city by capital brought here from other cities. It was built within six months, comprising eighteen miles of track, because the charter of the company required that to be done, and the road has been run ever since faithfully in conformity with the provisions of its charter. The Metropolitan Railroad Company has had its time for building its road extended from time to time, and it now comes here and asks for a still further extension of time. There is no objection to that, because its completion is not necessary to the convenience and wants of the people of the District.

And nobody will object to having the time extended in which this company shall construct its road.

But I take it that Congress will object to allowing the Metropolitan Railroad Company a privilege by which it will escape forever from the requirements of their charter, by tacking on at the ends of their already constructed road such arrangements as will enable them to run their cars on the rails of another company and take from them the rights which Congress has already given them.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The first question was upon the amendment of Mr. INGERSOLL; and being taken, there were—ayes thirteen, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The bill was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL THEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 589, to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Theological Institute," and to define and extend the powers of the same; which was read a first and second time.

The first section changes the name of the corporation to "The National Theological Institute and University."

The second section provides that the corporation may hold property in real estate, in value not exceeding $250,000 at any one time.

The third section provides that the corporation shall be authorized to extend its privileges and facilities of instruction to others than those connected with the Christian ministry, to confer degrees, and to do all other acts and things which pertain to universities in the United States, the terms of admission to such privileges being the same as those usual to such universities.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WELKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALLOTMENT OF SUPREME JUDGES.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, made the following report from a committee of conference:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to Senate bill No. 534, to provide for the allotment of the members of the Supreme Court among the circuits, and for the appointment of a marshal for the Supreme Court, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments and agree to the bill as passed by the Senate.

JAMES F. WILSON,

W. RADFORD,

THOMAS WILLIAMS,

Managers on the part of the House.

LYMAN TRUMBULL,

IRA HARRIS,

THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON, ALEXANDRIA, ETC., RAILROAD.

The House resumed the consideration of business on the Speaker's table; and the first business was a bill (S. No. 264) to grant certain privileges to the Alexandria, Washington, and Georgetown Railroad Company, in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read at length, proposes to grant to the Alexandria, Washington, and Georgetown Railroad Company the consent of Congress to use steam power in drawing the cars of the company on the structure across the Potomac river erected by the company under the provisions of the act to extend the charter of the Alexandria and Washington Railroad Company, and for other purposes, approved March 8, 1863, and along the railway now laid by the company, or which may be hereafter laid, under the provisions of that act, along Maryland avenue and First street west, in the city of Washington, to the present depot of the Washington branch of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, subject always and in all particulars to such restrictions and regulations concerning the use of such steam power as the corporation of Washington may by its ordinances at any time impose upon or at any time require of the railroad company.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIMITED PARTNERSHIP IN THE DISTRICT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill entitled "An act authorizing limited partnerships in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I desire that this bill shall be put upon its passage now.

Mr. ROSS. I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I do not yield for that motion. There can be no good reason for such a motion. This bill is almost an exact copy of a New York statute concerning limited partnerships. It has been thoroughly examined and matured by the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, and there can be no objection to it. It is a measure much needed in this District, as there is no law of this kind now applicable here.

Mr. DAVIS. From the reading of this bill, so far as I have been able to hear it, it appears to correspond closely with the New York statute on the same subject. I believe that it will be useful and beneficent in its operation, and I hope it may be passed.

Mr. PAINE. I wish to call attention to one clause of this bill which provides for a limited partnership consisting of a single individual. I think this is without parallel in Federal or State legislation. I cannot vote for any such provision.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I think that my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] will find on a more careful examination of the bill that it is not liable to the objection which he suggests. The bill does not authorize such a partnership as he mentions. It simply allows the business of a firm to be done in the name of one man.

Mr. DAVIS. The statute of New York allows a man, on the publication of a suitable notice as to the extent of his interest, to embark his capital in a special partnership without any liability beyond the amount which he contributes, the only consideration being that he shall not engage in directing the business of the partnership. The general partners in the concern attend to the business of the firm. The world knows full well the condition on which capital is embarked. Every man feels the relation existing between general and special partners. No one is deceived unless he desires to be deceived. Therefore I say there is nothing wrong in such a firm. That provision is in this bill, and I see no objection to it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I submit to my friend over the way that the bill does not present to my mind the same objection that it does to his, and I refer him to the language of the second section.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 460) in relation to persons imprisoned under sentence for offenses against the laws of the United States;

An act (S. No. 547) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the time for the reversion to the United States of the lands granted by Congress to aid in the construction of a railroad from Amboy, by Hillsdale and Lansing, to some point on or near Traverse Bay, in the State of Michigan, and for the completion of said road," approved July 8, 1866; and

An act (S. No. 550) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a jail in and for the District of Columbia," approved June 25, 1866.

SPECIAL COMMISSIONER OF REVENUE.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution providing that section sixty-six of the act approved July 13, 1866, entitled "An act to amend an act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, and for other purposes, approved June 13, 1864," authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a special commissioner of the revenue, be hereby repealed, and that said office of special commissioner be abolished.

Mr. ROSS. I object.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 1126, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, and moved to suspend the rules in order to consider them in the House without reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The House then proceeded to consider the amendments of the Senate seriatim, as follows:

First amendment:

Page 2, after line eleven insert the following: For the erection of a bridge at Rock Island, Illinois, as recommended by the chief of Ordnance, $250,000.

Mr. STEVENS. The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence in this amendment.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move to non-concur. This is a matter we have already once defeated.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. PRICE. I hope it will be adopted. It is made on the recommendation of the Secretary of War and the chief of Ordnance.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 34.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I demand the yeas and nays and also the previous question.

Mr. PRICE. I hope the gentleman will not insist on the previous question until a brief explanation has been made of this matter.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I will withdraw the demand for the previous question for the present.

Mr. Speaker, this Congress has embarked in almost everything during this session, but I believe this is the first time that it has gone into the bridge business. I recollect that an old gentleman, writing to me once a letter of advice and instruction, told me to "beware of bridges." [Laughter.] I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. PRICE. I am obliged to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for yielding to me. I hope I will have the attention of the House while I make a brief explanation of this matter. It will be remembered in the Committee of the Whole the other day this appropriation was put into this bill, and I then stated to the House the report from the Secretary of War and the chief of Ordnance had come in so late that the Committee on Appropriations did not have time to examine it. We have received recommendations from the proper Departments saying it was necessary that the Government should have communication between the main land and the property belonging to it on Rock Island. That committee put the appropriation into the bill, but when it came to be considered in the House, under the operation of the previous question it was stricken out. The bill went to the Senate in that shape. When there the chief of Ordnance and the Secretary of War did write these letters explaining why the appropriation should be made, asking and urging that it should be done, and the Senate in accordance with the recommendation of these officers placed that appropriation in the bill.

Now, I want to say to gentlemen of the House that the only effect of this thing is to put a bridge across the Mississippi so as to enable the Government to use the property that it now owns, and for which it has paid several hundred thousand dollars, to advantage. And in addition to that, the bridge built in accordance with the law passed at the last session will have to be paid for in part by the railroad company. Now, when gentlemen consider that the railroad company have already a bridge there, and need not add one dollar to the expense, so far as they are concerned, if it is allowed to remain there, but that this arrangement compels them to take that bridge away, and thereby remove an obstacle in the Mississippi river, which was the object of the law in part, and compels the railroad company to pay for one half of the cost of the bridge, which would otherwise have to be paid for in whole by the Government, I think there can be no doubt of the propriety of this measure. If this bridge was not needed by the Government for its own use the Secretary of War and the chief of Ordnance would not have recommended it. It is so plain a case that any gentleman acquainted with the fact need not hesitate for a moment how to vote in regard to it.

Mr. MORRIS. I would be pleased to have the gentleman explain under what circumstances the Government located this arsenal without providing any practical means of access to it.

Mr. PRICE. I thank the gentleman for his question, because it gives me an opportunity to say what otherwise I might have forgotten. The Government owns all that island, and there is no other place in the Northwest so well calculated for an army and arsenal as that. Now, as the island belongs to the Government and therefore costs nothing, is it not worth while to pay the expense of a roadway to it so as to be able to use it to advantage?

Mr. SLOAN. Is there not already a bridge there which the Government can use?

Mr. PRICE. I have tried to make the House understand that the bridge belongs to the railroad company, and is an obstruction to the navigation of the Mississippi, and that under the law of the last session the company are compelled to remove it; and now we compel the company to build a part of the new bridge. The present bridge is of no kind of use to the Government, because there is no wagon-road over it. The law passed last session provides that there shall be a wagon-road from the main land to the island to enable the Government to get to its property, and it compels the railroad company to pay part of the expense.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DAVIS. I believe I know something about the location of this bridge, and something about the necessity of the Government incurring this appropriation. The present bridge, built by the Rock Island Railroad Company, is at a point in the river situated, in regard to the channel, as to prevent its being used permanently for a bridge. Since its construction the United States Government has appropriated money for an armory and arsenal, and now it is necessary for the Government to have communication from the Iowa shore to the island. At that point it is convenient and proper that a bridge should be built. It may be built in connection with the Rock Island railroad, crossing the river from the island to the western shore; and if the Government contributes $250,000 for that purpose it will be the most economical arrangement which can be made, both for the Government and the company. It will, moreover, accommodate the commerce of the Mississippi; because at that point a bridge may be constructed for railroad purposes far more convenient for navigation than at any other point within ten miles of that spot. Therefore I submit that, inasmuch as communication cannot be made between the Iowa shore and the island on which the armory is situated at a less cost than $250,000, it is right, proper, and just that the Government should contribute toward the erection of a railroad bridge from that shore to Rock Island.

Mr. SLOAN. I simply desire to state that I am informed that the present bridge would answer every purpose except that it has been built at right angles with the stream, so that it obstructs vessels in passing through, and that the railroad company would be compelled for that reason to take it down and build one that would not obstruct navigation. The people of Iowa and Illinois were very anxious to have the arsenal located upon this island. Now, I think if that is the fact, that it is a little unfair for them, after they have induced the Government to locate the arsenal there, to call upon it to build a part of this bridge, especially when this railroad company would be compelled to build the bridge themselves in order to avoid ruinous litigation.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman from Wisconsin is entirely mistaken. If he will yield to me for a moment I will show him—

Mr. SLOAN. If I had time I would be very glad to yield to the gentleman, but I have not. All I desire to say is, that if the statement that I have mentioned is true, we ought not to vote away this appropriation. But if it is not true, I think the Government ought to make an appropriation to help to build this bridge, and I am willing to give my vote in favor of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTFIELD] is again entitled to the floor.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.]

Mr. SCHENCK. It strikes me that some of these gentlemen have not yet hit the point in this case. It was an absolute necessity, in order that the Government might occupy Rock Island for military purposes, that the location of the railroad should be changed. The whole matter was before the Military Committee at the last session of this Congress. It was thoroughly investigated; all the maps, estimates, and everything connected with it were before that committee. The committee made a report on the subject, and, upon a full explanation of the whole matter a bill was passed by the House, and afterward by the Senate, and is now a law upon the statute-book. The first two sections of that law show why the railroad track had to be changed, and why changes had to be made in the bridges connecting either with the Iowa or the Illinois shore. I ask, therefore, to have those two sections of that law read; merely remarking before they are read that this island, belonging to the United States, and being entirely occupied and needed for the uses of the Government, is yet so limited in extent as to have made necessary the purchase of another adjacent small island. Communication has to be kept up also by bridges with both shores. But the two portions of this main island on either side of the railroad which crosses it were disconnected from each other so that you could not go from one part of the arsenal grounds to the other without passing circuitously and at great inconvenience under archways and along the shore under the railroad. It was deemed essentially necessary, therefore, to change the track of the railway and to throw it across the lower point of the island; and there was equal necessity for changing the position of the bridges on either side, connecting with the Illinois and Iowa shores.

I ask that these two sections of this law may now be read, in order to show what Congress did in reference to this matter, what authority they gave for the change, and what pledge they gave in regard to it.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. The House is impatient to reach a vote. I have yielded all my time to the friends of this bill; and having heard what they had to say, I am satisfied that we might just as well be asked to contribute to build a bridge anywhere else in the country where the Government owns adjacent property.

Now, if this were a proposition to build a bridge across the Alleghany river at or near Warren in my district, and where I live, I suppose I should feel in regard to it just as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] feels in regard to this project; but that is no good reason why this appropriation should be made.

Mr. SCHENCK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I cannot yield. I have only to say further that when the United States are asked to undertake a system of internal improvement, and none of the improvements come in my district, I do not think that I am bound to vote for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHENCK. Has the gentleman ever read the second section of the bill passed by this Congress at its last session, pledging the Government to this project and showing the necessity for it?

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I heard it discussed by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.] We had this question up a few days ago, and we had the same extraordinary zeal manifested by certain gentlemen in favor of this bill that we have now, and we had also the same intimation that we have had to-night—an intimation which we always have whenever there is any project before us for wasting the funds of the United States—that somebody who favors it knows a great deal more about it than those who oppose it. The prodigals are always learned in their own estimation, and they always consider the economists very ignorant.

Mr. DELANO. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTFIELD] a question. I desire to know whether the present bridge is such an obstruction to the navigation of the river at that point as to require that it should be rebuilt, and whether this is an effort on the part of those who are compelled to rebuild this bridge to get the Government to aid them?

Mr. SCOTFIELD. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] has heard the debate upon this subject and can answer that question as well as I can. I now call the previous question.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether, if the call for the previous question should not be seconded, there would be time for explanation or answer to the remarks made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOTFIELD.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore, [Mr. DONNELLY.] If the call for the previous question should not be seconded, debate would continue.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I hope the previous question will not be seconded.

Mr. GRINNELL. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTFIELD] to allow his colleague [Mr. STEVENS] to have read a few lines from a document to show the necessity for this bridge.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I insist upon my call for the previous question.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask the reporters of the Globe to insert in their report the two sections I asked to have read.

[The two sections are as follows:

An act making further provisions for the establishment of an armory and arsenal of construction, deposit, and repair on Rock Island, in the State of Illinois.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to change, fix, and establish the position of the railroad across Rock Island and the bridge across the Mississippi river, at and on the island of Rock Island, so as best to accord with the purposes of the Government in its occupancy of said island for military purposes; and, in order to effect this, he is authorized to grant to the railroad company a permanent location and right of way on and across Rock Island, to be fixed and designated by him, with such quantity of land, to be occupied and held by the company for railroad purposes, as may be necessary therefor; and that the said grant and change be made on such terms and conditions, previously arranged between the Secretary of War and the companies and parties in interest, as will best effect and secure the purposes of the Government in occupying the island.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to grant to the companies and parties in interest such other aid, pecuniary or otherwise, toward effecting the change in the present location of their road and bridge, and establishing thereon a wagon-road for the use of the Government of the United States to connect said island with the cities of Davenport and Rock Island, to be so constructed as not materially to interfere with, obstruct, or impair the navigation of the Mississippi river, as may be adjudged to be fair and equitable by the board of commissioners authorized under the act of April 19, 1864, entitled "An act in addition to an act for the establishment of certain arsenals," and may be approved by him.]

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question was on concurring in the amendment of the Senate appropriating $250,000 for the purpose of building a bridge at Rock Island.

Mr. SCOFIELD. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 40, nays 108, not voting 42; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, James M. Ashley, Baker, Barkor, Bidwell, Bingham, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Davis, Dodge, Dumont, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Hill, Hooper, Ingersoll, Knysendall, Lynch, McIndoe, Moorhead, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Perham, Pike, Price, John H. Rice, Ross, Sawyer, Schenck, Sloan, Stevens, Henry D. Washburn, James F. Wilson, and Windom—40.

NAYS—Messrs. Acona, Anderson, Arnoll, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bergen, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Campbell, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cooper, Darling, Dawes, Dawson, Delano, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Donnelly, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hawkins, Hayes, Hise, Hogan, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Hunter, Jencks, Jones, Julian, Kelley, Kerr, Ketcham, Kootz, Ladin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Loan, Longyear, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McKee, Mercur, Miller, Morrill, Niblack, Nicholson, Paine, Patterson, Radford, William H. Randall, Ritter, Rollins, Scofield, Shinklin, Shellabarger, Stokes, Strouse, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Upton, Burt Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Hamilton Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Winfield, and Wright—108.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, Delos R. Ashley, Blaine, Bundy, Conkling, Culver, DeFrees, Driggs, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Henderson, Higby, Asabel W. Hubbard, Kasson, Kelso, Leftwich, McCullough, McKuer, Morris, Neell, Phelps, Plants, Pomeroy, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Rousseau, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Starr, Stilwell, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—42.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. SCOFIELD moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same: An act (H. R. No. 1134) declaring and fixing the rights of volunteers as a part of the Army; and

An act (H. R. No. 1154) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

The House resumed the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the Army appropriation bill.

Second amendment:

On page 3, line twenty-one, after "dollars" insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Third amendment:

On page 3, after line twenty-five insert: To enable the Secretary of War to pay the expenses of making and completing the survey of a national park in Washington, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate passed on the 18th of July 1866, $2,500.

The committee recommend concurrence.

Mr. WILSON of Iowa. I move that this amendment of the Senate be non-concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The question will be upon concurring in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I call the previous question on that.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was taken; and the amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Fourth amendment:

On page 5, line five, strike out "by" and insert "through."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. What difference will that make?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the clause as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

His inability through the next in rank, &c.

The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifth amendment:

On page 5, after "headquarters" in line seven insert "except at his own request."

The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixth amendment:

Add the following as a new section: SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the operation of section three of the joint resolution relative to appointments to the Military Academy, approved June 16, 1866, be, and the same is hereby, suspended for one year.

The committee recommend concurrence.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to know the provisions of the section which this amendment proposes to suspend.

Mr. STEVENS. I believe the section has reference to the appointment of cadets from the southern States. I am not quite sure. If the section is at hand, I ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"SEC. 3. And be it further resolved, That in all appointments of cadets to the Military Academy after those who enter the present year, the person authorized to nominate shall nominate not less than five candidates for each vacancy, all of whom shall be actual residents of the congressional district, Territory, or District of Columbia, entitled to the appointment; and the selection of one shall be made from the candidates according to their respective merits and qualifications, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War shall from time to time prescribe. And in like manner the President of the United States shall be authorized hereafter to nominate fifty at large each year, instead of ten as now provided by law, who shall be examined under like regulations, and of whom the ten who may be reported as most meritorious and best qualified shall be appointed: Provided, however, That not more than two of these shall be appointed in any year from one State."

Mr. ROSS. I move to amend the amendment of the Senate by striking out the words "for one year," so as to suspend the section indefinitely.

Mr. SCHENCK. I suggest to the gentleman to modify his amendment so as to strike out the words "suspended for one year" and insert "repealed." The section proposes a rather cumbersome system. It was agreed upon as a compromise in committee of conference. It has never gone into operation, and I think it never can.

Mr. ROSS. I accept the gentleman's suggestion and modify my amendment accordingly.

The amendment to the amendment of the Senate was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Seventh amendment:

Add the following as a new section: SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $150,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be disbursed by the Secretary of War in the erection of fire-proof buildings at or near the city of Jeffersonville, in the State of Indiana, to be used as store-houses for Government property.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Eighth amendment:

Add the following as a new section: SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the officers of the Army and Navy, and of the Freedmen's Bureau, to prohibit and prevent whipping or maiming of the person as a punishment of any crime, misdemeanor, or offense by any pretended civil authority in any State lately in rebellion until the civil government of such State shall have been restored and shall have been recognized by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. FINCK. I raise a point of order on that amendment. It is not germane to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain a point of order upon an amendment which has been adopted by the Senate and is sent to this House for concurrence. No such thing is recognized in the whole history of the Government. The Senate has the right to adopt such amendments as it may deem proper; and the House may concur or non-concur with amendments, as it chooses. A point of order cannot be made in this House upon a Senate amendment coming before this House for concurrence or non-concurrence.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to amend the Senate amendment by inserting after the word "civil" the words "or military;" so as to read "civil or military authority."

Mr. ROSS. I move to strike out "rebel," so that it will apply to all the States alike.

The SPEAKER. There is now an amendment to an amendment pending.

The question recurred on Mr. WRIGHT's amendment to the amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 36.

Mr. SCOFIELD called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SCOFIELD and Mr. WRIGHT were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 35.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROSS. I move to strike out "any State in rebellion" and insert "any State or Territory or the District of Columbia."

Mr. GRINNELL. I move to add "or any county."

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. ROSS's amendment was also rejected.

The question then recurred on the Senate amendment.

Mr. LE BLOND. Is it open to debate?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. LE BLOND. Mr. Speaker, I disapprove of this system of legislation. The Senate amendment is not germane to the bill, and ought not to have been put in it; but the practice has attained here of incorporating all manner of vicious and unconstitutional legislation in our appropriation bills. In this manner it is smuggled through, for the reason no one is looking for general legislation in an appropriation bill where by the rules of the House it is prohibited. But, sir, it is in keeping with much of our legislation.

Now, sir, inasmuch as we are upon the subject of universal power in Congress, I wish to carry the doctrine home to my colleagues. I wish to apply the doctrine of the majority here, and especially of my colleagues on that side of the House, to Ohio and them; and for that purpose I wish the Clerk to read the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Legislature of Ohio, on the 26th instant, by a vote of 26 to 50, refused to strike out of the constitution of said State the word "white," thereby repudiating, not only the action of the Republican party in Congress, "who are the people," but have refused to make the government of Ohio "republican in form" according to the standard established by Congress: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Reconstruction be, and are hereby, instructed to report to this House a bill establishing a military government over the people of the "so-called State" of Ohio until such times as the people thereof shall adopt a republican form of government, which shall be submitted and approved of by Congress; and that the members of Congress representing said so-called State be, and they are hereby, excluded from seats in Congress until such time as said so-called State shall be reconstructed.

[Laughter.]

Mr. LE BLOND. Now, sir, no one upon this side proposes, or could by any possibility vote for it if offered as an amendment, yet I deem it but proper, and indeed I feel it an imperative duty, to present it, to enable my universal suffrage colleagues from Ohio to take it up and have it incorporated in the bill. I now turn it over to its foster-fathers to be reared under the guardian care of the military and the Freedmen's Bureau. I hope they will act promptly and preserve their consistency.

It declares that Congress is the people. So you have affirmed repeatedly. It declares by reason of the Ohio Legislature refusing to grant suffrage "without regard to race, color, or previous condition of slavery," said State government is not republican in form. This is the standard you have fixed for ten States of this Union, and if good for ten it is good for all. It provides for a military government in Ohio, just as you provide in the South. It denies representation to the State, just as you deny it to the ten Southern States. It looks to Ohio being represented in future when she reforms her constitution and makes it republican in form according, not to the Constitution of the United States, for that would be anti-republican, but according to the congressional standard.

This you require of the South. It requires the Committee on Reconstruction to report the bill as all bills on reconstruction must come from that committee, upon the hypothesis that that committee possess all the brains of Congress. So it is not objectionable in that regard.

In drafting the preamble and resolution, I endeavored to make it conform to all your new doctrines, and think I have succeeded well. Now, what objection can you have to it? None I am sure. Now, if you wish to be consistent and believe your doctrines to be sound in principle and wholesome for the people, apply them everywhere; make all the States come under the rules. What is good for Virginia is good for Ohio.

Besides, the Republicans in the Ohio Legislature are disloyal by the congressional standard, and usurpers. They have exercised constitutional powers and set at defiance the will of Congress, and ought to be punished. To deprive them of representation would be one of the punishments Congress inflicts upon the South, and in that regard is in the spirit of our legislation. Besides, they had the audacity to affirm by solemn vote in a deliberative body that a negro was not as good as a white man after all that has been said by Congress in favor of the negro, and Congress, you know, is the people, and vox populi vox Dei. Hence, they defy the people and God, and deserve punishment.

Now, sir, having said thus much in explanation of my resolution, I turn it over to those who ought to be its true advocates, with the hope that it will not be slaughtered in the house of its friends. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENS. I am almost inclined to agree to the resolution. I do not know but what we ought to guaranty republican governments to the States both of Ohio and Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRINNELL. I hope we shall sustain this amendment, because it proposes to prohibit unusual punishments, maiming and whipping. The history of the times shows that this is necessary. The accounts come up to us from all parts of the southern country that men are being scourged daily for crime. As regards the condition of Ohio, alluded to by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LE BLOND,] I believe that the action of the State of Tennessee will make impartial suffrage easy both for his State and mine. I am anxious to see any politician in his State or mine rise, after this notorious and honorable example, and oppose impartial suffrage without regard to race or color.

A MEMBER. Or sex.

Mr. GRINNELL. Sir, I have held for years that South Carolina, while she disfranchised a majority of her people, never had a republican form of government. She never had it in the eye of the Constitution nor in the eyes of honorable men throughout the world. Now, we should allow all men to vote, unconvicted of crime. Let us adopt this principle. But in the mean time we should say that none of those old pirates and slave-drivers shall wreak their vengeance upon the unprotected black man. I call the previous question.

Mr. LE BLOND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GRINNELL. I will answer it, and then renew the call for the previous question.

Mr. LE BLOND. I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether the framers of the Constitution were wise men, or as wise as himself, when they regarded South Carolina and all the southern States as having republican forms of government?

Mr. GRINNELL. I have only to say that "the days of that ignorance God winked at," but now he calls upon "all men everywhere," including the gentleman from Ohio, "to repent" and do justice. [Laughter.]

Mr. LE BLOND. Washington and Jefferson and their compeers, I suppose, were ignorant men. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRINNELL. I am sorry the gentleman does not accept the issue of the day and vote for justice. I renew the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment of the Senate, as amended, was agreed to.

Ninth amendment:

Add the following as a new section:
SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That all militia forces now organized or in service in either of the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Texas be forthwith disbanded, and that the further organizing, arming, or calling into service of the said militia forces, or any part thereof, is hereby prohibited, under any circumstances whatever, until the same shall be authorized by Congress.

The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Tenth amendment:

Add the following as a new section:
SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be authorized to pay, under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, in addition to the amount received by them for the traveling expenses of such California and Nevada volunteers as were discharged in New Mexico, Arizona, or Utah, at points distant from the place or places of enlistment, such proportionate sums, according to the distance traveled, as have been paid to the troops of other States similarly situated; and such amount as shall be necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The committee recommend concurrence, with the following amendment:

Provided, That the provisions of this section shall only apply to the volunteers aforesaid who actually returned to their homes in the State of their enlistment upon their discharge.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROSS. I move another amendment, as follows:

Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any volunteers who were engaged in the massacre of the Indians, under Chivington.

It will be recollected that the Colorado volunteers were those who massacred the Indians under Chivington. I do not think they ought to have any extra pay.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the Senate refers only to California and Nevada. Colorado is not mentioned.

Mr. HOGAN. I move to add after the word "Nevada," "Missouri." A large number of Missouri volunteers were discharged, some of them in Texas, others in Georgia, others in Virginia. They were required to go home, receiving no compensation.

Mr. SCHENCK. My impression is that the gentleman is shooting in the wrong direction. This amendment of the Senate applies to those who were discharged in those distant Territories. If these Missouri men were discharged in Texas, the gentleman's amendment ought to read "discharged in Texas;" but by putting in the word "Missouri," it will apply only to those discharged in Missouri.

Mr. HOGAN. I do not mean that. I mean simply those who were discharged away from the State in which they were mustered into the service.

Mr. SCHENCK. As the gentleman phrases his amendment it would apply to those discharged in Missouri. He means the Missouri troops discharged in some other place.

Mr. HOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCHENCK. While up, I will say that I think the cases were not nearly so numerous as might be supposed where there was no sufficient pay or transportation given, though there were some very hard cases of discharge in Nevada and Colorado of troops belonging in California and belonging on this side. In every case they did receive transportation or allowances for it, but the difficulty was, being discharged there, they received, for instance, in going to Michigan or New York some eighty or ninety dollars, whereas it cost them from one hundred and twenty-five to three hundred dollars to return to their homes. This amendment of the Senate is but the bill that was sent to them from the Military Committee of the House, having passed this House substantially in the same form. But there ought to be some restriction confining it to the men who did not elect to remain in the Territories. We found that a great many of these men when discharged requested to be discharged there, instead of being taken home, because they desired to settle and become miners. They ought not, if a year or two afterward they choose to go home, to receive two or three hundred dollars for going home.

Mr. HIGBY. I believe the law is guarded in that respect, providing for those who did actually return home. That is the provision that is added by the committee.

Mr. BIDWELL. I wish to say that there were a few soldiers who enlisted in California and who were discharged in Arizona, New Mexico, and Texas, a thousand miles almost from where they enlisted. There has been considerable correspondence on the subject between the Governor of California and General Carlton, all of which goes to show that those cases were extremely hard, and I should regret if the gentleman from Missouri insists upon his amendment, which will destroy the whole provision. The cases of those soldiers who enlisted in California were extremely hard. They did not, perhaps, even know exactly what they were entitled to. I believe there was a want of transportation, and being discharged in Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona, they have to find their way home, thousands of miles, at an expense of two, three, or four hundred dollars apiece, whereas they received only the small amount of eighty or ninety dollars allowed them by law. I hope, therefore, the gentleman will not insist upon his amendment.

Mr. HOGAN. I do not wish to embarrass the proposition offered by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. I simply wished to make a statement. The opinion I have is that some of the Missouri troops were discharged in Texas and some of them in Georgia and South Carolina. As I have learned from them, they received no compensation nor transportation home. I have not, however, had the matter investigated, and I may have been misinformed in regard to it. Under existing circumstances, therefore, I deem it advisable to withdraw the proposition I made rather than to embarrass the amendment.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment of the Senate, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to; and Messrs. STEVENS, BANKS, and SHELLABARGER were appointed conferees on the part of the House.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. DENISON, the papers relative to the claim of Captain John Reichard were withdrawn from the files of the House.

BANKRUPT BILL.

Mr. JENCKES submitted the following report from a committee of conference:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States (H. R. No. 598) having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from their amendment No. 26 to the thirty-third section of said bill.

That the House recede from its non-concurrence with the Senate in the other amendments made to said bill by the Senate, and concur in the same.

THOMAS A. JENCKES,

HENRY L. DAVES,

Managers on the part of the House.

LUKE P. POLAND,

EDWIN D. MORGAN,

JAMES A. McDUGALL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise to make an inquiry of the Chair. Can we divide the question so as to vote for some of these propositions and against the others.

The SPEAKER. A conference report must be voted upon as a whole.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will a motion to lay the conference report on the table be in order?

The SPEAKER. Such a motion would be in order at the proper time; but the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. JENCKES] is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would inquire what would be the effect of a motion to lay this report on the table.

The SPEAKER. The effect would be, if carried, to take the bill with it, and for that reason the bill must always be present when the report of the committee of conference is considered.

Mr. JENCKES. This report is precisely the recommendation of the select committee of this House upon this subject. I now ask a vote upon it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to lay the report of the committee of conference on the table, and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONKLING. I would appeal to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] to withdraw for a moment his motion to lay the report on the table in order to enable the gentleman Rhode Island [Mr. JENCKES] to state to the House, as I suppose he is very well prepared to do, what are the points of difference and what are the points of agreement in respect to this bill between the two Houses, so that we may know precisely what we vote to lay on the table or what we vote to concur in.

Mr. MAYNARD. I have no objection. I will withdraw my motion to lay on the table for that purpose.

Mr. JENCKES. On a former occasion I explained to the House these amendments very fully, and therefore to-night I did not consider it necessary to take up the time of the House at this late hour of the session in repeating what I then said. I will state, however, that although the amendments of the Senate are somewhat numerous, yet more than nine tenths of them are formal and verbal only, correcting the text, making more clear what was supposed to be not clear enough, and excluding here and there some redundant words. In fact, there are but two essential changes involved in the Senate amendments. One is the changing of the appointment of the officers called registrars from the circuit court of the United States to the district courts of the United States, still retaining, however, the clause which provides that these officers shall be appointed upon the nomination and recommendation of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. It seemed to the committee of this House to be immaterial whether these officers were appointed by the circuit or the district courts of the United States so long as their nomination and recommendation remained where the House provided it should remain, in the control of the Chief Justice.

The only other amendment of any consequence was in relation to the restricting clause applicable to corporations, confining it to moneyed, business, and trading corporations, which has been made more definite by the amendment of the Senate. There was another clause in the House bill which provided that if bankruptcy should occur more than one year after this act should take effect the bankrupt should not receive his discharge unless he obtained a certificate of recommendation from a majority of his creditors, or paid fifty per cent. upon the claims against him. The Senate struck out that provision. The committee of conference recommend that the Senate recede from that amendment, leaving the bill in that respect as it passed the House.

These are the only material amendments which have been made to the bill. I do not consider it important to detain the House to explain the merely verbal or formal amendments. In the view of the House committee who considered the subject they were improvements upon the text of the bill, and in no instance did they make any alteration in the principle or scope of the bill. These, the only essential points of difference, having been reconciled by the agreement of the conference committee, I hope that the report will be agreed to. I demand the previous question.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to state that in making the motion to lay the report on the table, I do it in a spirit of hostility to the bill and for the purpose of defeating it. I ask for the yeas and nays on my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 71, nays 83, not voting 36; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Arnell, Deles R. Ashley, Baker, Barker, Bingham, Blaine, Bromwell, Broomall, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cooper, Culom, Deffrees, Delano, Denison, Dumont, Eckley, Eldridge, Farquhar, Finck, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hill, Hise, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kerr, Koontz, Kuykendall, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Loan, Lynch, Marshall, Marston, Maynard, McClurg, Mercer, Miller, Morrill, Moulton, Myers, Niblack, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Price, William H. Randall, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Stevens, Stokes, Andrew H. Ward, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, and James F. Wilson—71.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bergen, Bidwell, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Boyer, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Hulburt, Humphrey, Hunter, Jenckes, Jones, Kelley, Ketcham, Laffin, Longyear, Marvin, McRuer, Moorhead, Morris, Newell, Pomeroy, Radford, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rogers, Scofield, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Strouse, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, Wentworth, Woodbridge, and Wright—83.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Benjamin, Cook, Culver, Driggs, Eggleston, Grinnell, Aaron Harding, Harris, Henderson, Asahel W. Hubbard, Kasson, Kelso, Leftwich, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Nicholson, Noell, Phelps, Platts, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Rousseau, Sitgreaves, Stilwell, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Winfield—36.

So the House refused to lay the report on table.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. EGGLESTON. On this question I have paired with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. DRIGGS. If he were here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. COOK. I am paired on this question with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. KASSON. If he were here he would vote against the motion to lay on the table, and I would vote in favor of that motion.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. PLANTS, is absent from the House by reason of illness.

Mr. McKEE. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. PHELPS. If he were present he would vote against this motion, and I should vote in favor of it.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The question recurred on seconding the demand for the previous question on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. BLAINE (at half past ten o'clock p. m.) moved that the House adjourn.

On the motion, there were—ayes 58, noes 59.

Mr. BLAINE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. Before the vote is taken on this motion to adjourn, I wish to say that it is highly desirable that the House should remain in session for perhaps half an hour longer, as we expect the tax bill to be returned from the Senate with various amendments.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 57, nays 91, not voting 42; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Arnell, Deles R. Ashley, Baker, Barker, Bingham, Blaine, Boyer, Bromwell, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cooper, Deffrees, Delano, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farquhar, Finck, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hill, Hise, Ingersoll, Kerr, Koontz, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Marston, Maynard, McClurg, McKee, Mercer, Nicholson, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Price, William H. Randall, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Stokes, Andrew H. Ward, Welker, and James F. Wilson—57.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, James M. Ashley, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bergen, Bidwell, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomall, Buckland, Chanler, Conkling, Darling, Davis, Dawson, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Goodyear, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Hayes, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hulburt, Humphrey, Hunter, Jenckes, Jones, Julian, Kelley, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Laffin, Le Blond, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, McRuer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Nowell, O'Neill, Paine, Pomeroy, Radford, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rogers, Ross, Spalding, Starr, Strouse, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Wentworth, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodbridge, and Wright—91.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Baldwin, Benjamin, Bundy, Cullom, Culver, Dawes, Denison, Driggs, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Aaron Harding, Harris, Henderson, Higby, Asahel W. Hubbard, Kasson, Kelso, Leftwich, Marshall, McCullough, McIndoe, Moulton, Niblack, Noell, Phelps, Platts, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Stevens, Stilwell, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Whaley, Windom, and Winfield—42.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred on seconding the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 82, nays 64.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, demanded the yeas and nays on ordering the main question. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a privileged question. As it is evident the leaders of the House are filibustering to defeat the bankrupt bill, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Is there any public business remaining to be disposed of?

The SPEAKER. The tax bill is to come back from the Senate. If it is not acted upon to-night the Chair is of opinion the bill will be lost.

Mr. HALE. At the request of my friend from Rhode Island I withdraw the motion.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move that the House adjourn; and on that motion demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The House refused to adjourn.

The question was then taken on ordering the main question; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 86, nays 56, not voting 48; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, James M. Ashley, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bergen, Bidwell, Blow, Boyer, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Durling, Davis, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Goodyear, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Hunter, Jenckes, Jones, Kelley, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Ladin, Longyear, Marshall, Marvin, McKuer, Moorhead, Morris, Myers, Newell, Nicholson, Paine, Pomeroy, Radford, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rogers, Ross, Spaulding, Starr, Strouse, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Wentworth, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodbridge, and Wright—86.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Barker, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Campbell, Cobb, Cooper, Culom, Dawson, Deftrees, Dumont, Eckley, Eldridge, Farquhar, Finck, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hayes, Hill, Hise, Chester D. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kerr, Koontz, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Loan, Marshall, Marston, Maynard, McClurg, Mercur, Miller, Morrill, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Price, William H. Randall, Rollins, Sawyer, Scofield, Shanklin, Stevens, Stokes, Andrew H. Ward, Welker, Whaley, and James F. Wilson—56.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Baldwin, Benjamin, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Culver, Dawes, Delano, Denison, Driggs, Eggleston, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Aaron Harding, Harris, Henderson, Asahel W. Hubbard, Kasson, Kelso, Lettwich, Lynch, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Moulton, Niblack, Noell, Patterson, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rousseau, Schoenck, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Stilwell, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Windom, and Winfield—48.

So the main question was ordered to be now put.

During the roll-call,

Mr. WOODBRIDGE stated that Mr. BLAINE, who was in favor of the bill, had paired off with Mr. PATTERSON, who was against it.

Mr. COOK stated he was paired with Mr. KASSON, who was in favor of the bill, while he was against it.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question then recurred on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. BINGHAM demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 73, nays 71, not voting 46; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, James M. Ashley, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bergen, Bidwell, Blow, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Darling, Davis, Dixon, Donnelly, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Goodyear, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Hogan, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. So the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

During the roll-call,

Mr. McKEE stated that he had paired with Mr. PHELPS on this question or he would have voted against the report.

Mr. DAVIS stated that Mr. Cook had paired with Mr. KASSON.

The announcement of the vote as above recorded was received with mingled applause and hisses from members.

Mr. JENCKES. I move to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was adopted; and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. ORTH. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. JENCKES. I withdraw the motion.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate (received during the above roll-call) informed the House that the Senate had passed bill of the House, No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue, with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed bill of the House No. 1184, making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of fortifications and other works of public defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

TAX BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table, the next business in order being the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to bill of the House No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I have not read the amendments of the Senate to this bill, but I understand that they are quite numerous, and I can see no mode by which we can have final action on the bill this session except by moving a non-concurrence in the amendments of the Senate and that the House ask a committee of conference. I make that motion and call the previous question upon it.

Mr. LEBLOND. What is before the House?

The SPEAKER. The amendments of the Senate to the tax bill.

Mr. LEBLOND. Is there a tariff among them?

The SPEAKER. The Chair believes there is no tariff.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I call for the reading of the amendments. I wish to know what I am to vote upon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to demand the reading.

Mr. RADFORD. If it is in order, I desire to move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move to suspend the rules, so as to dispense with the reading of the amendments.

Mr. RADFORD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman who moves to adjourn that if the House adjourns now, in the present state of the public business, this bill will probably be lost. It will depend, of course, upon whether the majority of the House desire the bill to be lost or not.

Mr. RADFORD. How long will the reading of the amendments take?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot say.

Mr. RADFORD. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withdraw the demand for the reading of the amendments.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Then, of course, I withdraw my motion.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof, Mr. MORRILL's motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. MORRILL, Mr. MOORHEAD, and Mr. HOGAN conferees on the part of the House.

And then, on motion of Mr. CONKLING, (at eleven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. MORRILL: The petition of John M. Dorsey, G. G. Hagele, David Basler, Thomas Drury, and 343 others, journeymen finishers of morocco leather, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying Congress, by a judicious adjustment of the tariff and tax laws, to protect their labor.

By Mr. ROSS: The memorial and resolutions of the River Improvement Convention.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 22, 1867.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. POLAND, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, ratifying the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed to the several States by joint resolution of Congress, passed on the 13th day of June, 1866, to be designated article fourteen of Amendments to the Constitution; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOWE presented resolutions of the State of Wisconsin, ratifying the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed to the several States by a joint resolution of Congress, passed on the 13th day of June, 1866, to be designated article fourteen of Amendments to the Constitution; which were ordered to lie on the table.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. McDUGALL presented the credentials of Hon. Cornelius Cole, elected a Senator by the Legislature of the State of California for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1867; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 297) instructing the Secretary of the Interior to order a survey for a bridge or bridges across the Potomac was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

JAMES TETLOW.

The bill (H. R. No. 1188) for the relief of James Tetlow, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, if there be no objection.

Mr. GRIMES. It is hardly necessary to refer that. There is a similar bill reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs in hæc verba, now lying on the table. It is in charge of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS,] who is not in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid upon the table if there is no objection.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILSON presented the memorial of Henry B. Carrington, colonel eighteenth regiment United States infantry, praying that Army officers may be allowed commutation for quarters, and that each regiment in the Army may be allowed a full band; which was ordered to lie upon the table, the Senate having already acted on the subject.

Mr. JOHNSON. I present the petition of William J. Blackstone, of Maryland, representing that he was appointed one of the Board of Trade for the greater part of St. Mary's county, in Maryland, during the war and was subjected to very heavy expenses, and finds now that there is no provision by which he can receive any compensation, although he was informed at the time that compensation would be allowed him. I ask its reference to the Committee on Claims.

It was so referred.

Mr. HOWE presented a memorial of members of the Chamber of Commerce of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, remonstrating against the registering of foreign-built vessels; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HENDRICKS presented the petition of Nobles & Co., praying to be allowed to enter ten thousand acres of land in the State of Alabama at the Government price; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Indiana, praying that Charles Ramsey may be allowed an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of merchants of Boston praying that the warehouse act approved March 16, 1866, may be so amended as that tea, coffee, sugar, spices, and the raw products of the East Indies may not be subjected to the additional duty of ten per cent. as therein provided; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SUMNER. I also offer a petition of citizens of Altoona, Pennsylvania, in which they ask that there shall be no legislation or enforcement of any law, rule, or regulation within the United States or the Territories against any civilized portion of the inhabitants, native-born or naturalized, on account of color, race, or birth, and they ask appropriate legislation by Congress to enforce this petition.

I also offer a similar petition from citizens of Philadelphia, and another similar one from citizens of Pennsylvania generally.

I also offer the petition of the Female Anti-Slavery Society of Philadelphia, duly authenticated by their officers, in which they ask Congress to present to the loyal States for adoption such amendment or amendments to the Constitution of the United States as may be necessary to secure to the lately emancipated slaves of this country the right of suffrage. As this petition concerns directly an amendment to the Constitution, I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Committee on the Judiciary has acted on these questions and I do not see the necessity of referring these matters to them again. The committee have reported back several just such petitions asking for similar legislation, and we have reported various bills on the subject which are on the Calendar. I think these petitions might as well go upon the table.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator has not reported any resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution securing the suffrage to everybody.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir.

Mr. SUMNER. That is the prayer of the last petition.

Mr. TRUMBULL. But the others do not relate to that.

Mr. SUMNER. The others can lie upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be entered. Does the Senator vary his motion in regard to the last petition?

Mr. SUMNER. Let them all lie on the table.

It was so ordered.

GOVERNMENT OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. YATES. I present the petition of one thousand loyal colored citizens of Charleston, South Carolina, praying for the establishment of a territorial government there, and for protection in their civil and political rights.

In presenting this petition, Mr. President, I desire to remark, as it is very important at the present time to know the real state of affairs in the rebellious States, that these petitioners state to us that since the suspension of the provost guard and provost courts and the military tribunals there, or the curtailment of the military jurisdiction in the State of South Carolina, there is no protection for the civil and political rights of the freedmen. They testify that in the interior of the State the freedmen are barbarously and inhumanly murdered for no other crime than that they assert their rights under the proclamation of emancipation and under the amendment abolishing slavery in the United States. They testify to us that the civil courts wholly fail to do them justice; that no indictments are found for the commission of the most heinous and outrageous offenses; that no convictions are found for murders of the freedmen in that State.

Mr. President, here is evidence presented to us from a loyal source, not from men engaged in the rebellion, not from men who fought against the country, but from men who under all circumstances in the past history of the country have been true to its flag and true to the Union and to liberty. Under these circumstances, these one thousand loyal colored citizens of the United States demand protection. They represent to us their condition, and we know it must be true, as being far worse than in a state of slavery, for then they had the protection of a master, now they have arrayed against them the prejudices and the persecutions of disloyal men, of rebels who are embittered against them and prejudiced against them by reason of the noble and patriotic stand they have taken in favor of the Union. In consideration of these facts, these petitioners pray for suffrage and for protection in the exercise of suffrage. They also pray that they may have the protection extended to them which is their right as American citizens, as there is now no distinction under the Constitution of the United States between citizens or between persons, whatever may be their color, race, or previous condition.

In consequence of the importance of this petition as a document showing the true state of affairs in the State of South Carolina, given to us by loyal men, I wish to present this petition as a part of the remarks which I have made upon the present occasion. It is as follows:

CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA, February 16, 1867.
To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned, colored citizens of the State of South Carolina, would respectfully represent that notwithstanding the positive recognition of the validity and justness of our claim, as an integral portion of the American people, to equality before the law by the civil rights bill, and the very ample provisions made by that and the Freedmen's Bureau for our protection, still there are many existing wrongs uncorrected, and much injustice inflicted upon us, through violence and other means, by the white citizens of the State, who are our law-makers and its administrators. The provost courts having been suspended and military supervision curtailed and the civil law permitted to resume its sway, outrages upon our people, especially in the interior of the State, are of common occurrence. They are murdered, in various ways abused, and in many instances for mere trivial offenses, owing to the deep-rooted animosity and the ancient spleen of barbarous slavery which waxed hot by their acquisition of freedom.

Having no political voice, the civil rights bill fails, and the civil courts fail to do them justice. Those courts do not inflict punishment on white men that outrage our people, and we, the recipients of wrong and abuse, have to submit powerless to these wicked decisions of the civil tribunal, where justice is mockery and injustice is clothed in the garb of righteousness.

ness, and life itself is imperiled. In many places they dare not even now assert the liberty secured them by the emancipation proclamation; if they do, they are outraged, threatened with death, and driven from their homes, poor, homeless, naked, hungry, and without shelter. Their wives and their children, the old, enfeebled, and decrepit, who have been worn out under the task-master, and the tender infant at the bosom, and the sick—all, all alike, are now compelled to seek refuge in temporary huts in the woods or along the public highways. Upon many plantations they are compelled either to contract for wages, by which they could not support their families, or be driven off—being their only refuge from tyranny and abuse. Thus our people are meanly ignored, made suffering outcasts, and their interests willfully neglected.

Permit us, under these circumstances, to express our deep gratitude for the liberal and gracious provisions of "homestead" by the Government, a provision now necessary to our safety, if not to our very existence. In addition to the above-mentioned wrongs and abuses, we are taxed to support schools and other public institutions, whose doors are barred against us. These taxes and burdens are imposed without our consent—for we are allowed no voice in representation. Slavery no longer holds us in its galling clutches, but we have dropped from its cruel shackles into the no less wicked grasp of a powerful prejudice, which would contrive for us a more ruinous fate than brutal slavery. It would make our liberty a curse instead of a blessing, and its every advocate a dangerous enemy to mankind, the glorious emancipation proclamation an edict of ruin and wretchedness, and the great triumph of Federal arms a most inglorious failure. We would state, however, that the loyal whites of the State would pray you to make the elective franchise impartial and irrespective of race or color, believing its enjoyment to be our just right, as well as for their own safety, the growth and perpetuity of free institutions, of republicanism, and the safety of the Government.

As a remedy for these, our grievances, your humble servants would most respectfully petition and humbly pray your honorable bodies to change the present State government to a territorial government, or such form that in the reorganization of civil authority in the State preparatory to its representation in Congress every man accounted a citizen of the United States and residing in South Carolina shall be authorized to have an equal voice, whereby the people of the State may be secured a republican form of government. We ask this because—

1. It is our inalienable right to enjoy every privilege secured by law to any other class of American citizens.

2. We ask it because we are vastly in the majority in South Carolina, consequently we are unwilling to be entirely legislated for and ruled by the minority, who are our enemies and unmindful of our interest. Should not the majority rule? If not, may they not be permitted to participate in ruling?

3. We ask it because when the white citizens of the State rebelled against the Government, and attempted its destruction, "when the flame that lit the battle wreck," was fanned and fed by the hot rage of a rebellious people, whose furious passions, wicked and mad designs had hurled upon the land a disastrous war, we remained loyal and true, and with heroic patriotism our brave men suffered, fought, and bled upon numerous battle-fields for union, liberty, and the preservation of the Government.

4. We ask it because we took no part in filling the land with rage and strife, war and bloodshed, with the mourning and distress of poor widows and orphans, nor did we burden the nation with its great debt, but we were the ministers of relief and comfort to our oppressors and enemies even; but more especially to insulted and barbarously-treated Union prisoners so far as safety permitted. When we found them in their prison-pens sick, languishing, and dying from hunger, thirst, and neglect, we divided with them our last morsel.

5. We ask it in accordance with, and in the name of, the Declaration of American Independence, which declares "that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

6. We ask it that loyalty may become supreme, and be no longer considered a crime. Then will republican liberty be safe and we ourselves be protected from outrage and wrong.

Finally, we ask it, in the sacred name of justice, of liberty, of suffering humanity for the sake of social and political harmony, and as being for the best interest of the whole people of South Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition does the Senator ask be made of the petition?

Mr. YATES. I move its reference to the joint Committee on Reconstruction.

It was so referred.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 196) to construe an act further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes, to report the joint resolution back with the expression of the opinion that the same ought not to pass. I am directed to say in this connection—I have not had time to make another report—that the committee learned with surprise that the Treasury Department has in a degree nullified the act passed last year on this subject, by its construction, and that this joint resolution was intended to make that nullification legal by limiting the operation of the act within certain boundaries which the act by itself already included. The Department has undertaken, in respect to the pressure of steam upon boilers, although the language of the act is perfectly explicit and perfectly general, to declare that there is a certain class of boilers to which the law does not apply, and they have reached that conclusion by looking to the title of the law and by, having looked to the title of the law, only taking one half of the title instead of the whole in order to base such an argument upon. I do not think it very creditable to the law officers of the Treasury Department that that method of administering law is adopted there; and unless it shall be corrected by the action of the Department itself I shall, with the approbation of the committee, take some early occasion to provide by further law for the execution of the laws that we already have.

Mr. POMEROY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 530) amendatory of the homestead law, and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to:

A bill (S. No. 391) to aid in the development of the mineral and agricultural resources of Montana;

A bill (S. No. 597) to amend an act entitled "An act for the disposal of the public lands for homestead actual settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida;"

A bill (S. No. 615) for the sale of the Hot Springs reservation, in the State of Arkansas; and

A bill (H. R. No. 855) to authorize departures from the established mode of surveying in certain cases.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the memorial of the University at Burlington, Iowa, and the memorial of the city council of Burlington, Iowa, in relation to the grant of a certain lot of public land in that city for educational purposes, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 733) for the discontinuance of land offices, and authorizing modifications in the limits of land districts, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 218) to extend the provisions of the act in regard to agricultural colleges to the State of Tennessee, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the bill (H. R. No. 899) in relation to the revenue-cutter service, and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 284) authorizing examinations of improvements in vessels, and for other purposes, in aid of navigation and for the protection of life and property at sea, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1154) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, to whom were referred resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas in favor of a grant of aid to the Union Pacific railway, southern branch, equal to that granted to the Union Pacific railway and its several northern branches, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

BOSTON POST OFFICE.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 176) relative to the post office and sub-Treasury of the city of Boston, have directed me to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage. This is a resolution simply for the appointment of a commission similar to the one appointed in the case of the post office site in the city of New York, for the selection of a site in Boston.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask the action of the Senate upon it now.

Mr. RAMSEY. It involves no liability, no money. It simply provides for a report upon the sites that may be offered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes to appoint the mayor and postmaster of the city of Boston, the assistant Treasurer of the United States at the city of Boston, the president of the Board of Trade of the city of Boston, Alpheus Hardy, Daniel Davies, and John A. Andrew, of Boston, a commission to select a proper site for a post office and the accommodation of the sub-Treasury in the city of Boston, and report to the Postmaster General and the Secretary of the Treasury, at their earliest convenience, the selection upon which they or the majority of them may agree, and the price at which such site can be purchased by the Government for the purposes contemplated in this resolution, if a new site should be selected; and if the report shall meet the approbation of the Postmaster General and the Secretary of the Treasury, they are to communicate it, with such additional suggestions as they may think proper, to Congress.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. HENDRICKS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 621) for the relief of Charles Ramsey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

HENRY S. DAVIS.

Mr. POLAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 820.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 820) for the relief of Henry S. Davis.

Mr. POLAND. This is a bill to pay a mechanic for work on the Patent Office building. It is a bill that has twice passed the House; been reported upon three times in the House favorably, and three times in the Senate favorably. It was during the last session before the Committee of the Senate on Public Buildings and Grounds, and a majority of the committee reported in favor of the claim. A very lengthy minority report was submitted by a portion of the committee. I do not know whether it is necessary that that should be read, or whether it is desired that it should be. I will state in substance what it is.

There is no dispute in reference to the performance of the labor by Mr. Davis. The only dispute was in reference to the price that he was entitled to receive as to the quality, the class of the work. This minority report is made up of long letters and correspondence from the public measurer, who claimed that Mr. Davis was not entitled to receive any more than he was paid, and a lengthy report made by the Commissioner of Patents, to whom it was once referred, no statement of facts, but a lengthy argument on the subject. I do not know whether the gentleman who made that report desires to have it read, or whether he will make a statement to the Senate verbally. It was nearly all read the other day, not wholly.

I will state further in reference to this claim that during the last session this matter was before the Senate committee and also the House committee, and a very lengthy hearing was had before the House committee in reference to it, and the evidence was taken in writing, which was laid before the committee of the Senate, and that evidence I have here. In addition to this, the committee of the House took the trouble to go up and examine the work themselves and see it.

Without taking any more time in reference to this, I have merely to say that it has once been arbitrated. The matter was left, by direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to three skilled mechanics of his own choice, who decided unanimously in favor of this claim. He has had the award of arbitrators; he has had the report of three committees in the House; he has had the report of three committees in the Senate, and the bill has passed the House. It seems to me it is time this matter was finally settled.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I have no desire to embarrass the passage of this bill by any unnecessary delays in its consideration. It is perhaps right that it should have a hearing. The bill was referred to the Committee, on which I serve, on Public Buildings, for investigation, and in looking at it I became satisfied that the claim was an unjust one. In consequence, I took a great deal of pains in making an examination into its merits and into its history; and the more I examined it the more thoroughly I became satisfied that there was no earthly title or shadow of justice in the claim. It is a claim for work done some eight or nine years ago that was then settled for. It is a claim founded upon a bill of prices for which anterior work had been done and settled for without any controversy. It is a claim which has been passed upon under Mr. Holt when he was Commissioner of Patents, and also under the succeeding Commissioner of Patents, Mr. Bishop, and under the investigation of the Finance Committee of this body, and on each and every occasion has been disallowed.

Mr. McDUGALL. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me, the Finance Committee did not disallow the claim. They declined to put it on the appropriation bill, admitting, though, that the claim was a just one unquestionably.

Mr. BROWN. That is not my information of the facts.

Mr. McDUGALL. I was there myself.

Mr. BROWN. That is not the information I have in regard to it.

It is proper that I should state somewhat the character of this claim, and I shall do so as briefly as I may. It is for work done on the west wing of the Patent Office, the greater portion of which was shelving. This Mr. Davis had a contract previously for work done on the east wing of the Patent Office of the same kind and character for shelving. He called upon the Government measurer to know the prices that would be allowed, and was referred to the Builders' Guide as the standard of prices understood here in the District. He went ahead and completed his contract on the east wing of this kind of work. It was settled for in accordance with that standard of measurement and prices. There then came up a contract to be let for the west wing, the shelving, and other articles. He made application for that and received it, knowing that the same measurer was there, and knowing that the same standard of prices would be applied to the work. When it came to be settled for, however, he asked to have the price increased some two hundred per cent. over and above the amount which was allowed by the Builders' Guide. This the Government measurer refused to do. Thereupon there was a controversy, and the matter was referred to Mr. Holt. The result of that was, after some little pro and con. argument, Mr. Holt ordered the account to be settled on the statement of the Government measurer, and it was so settled; this Mr. Davis entering a protest and claiming more.

Now, I will say that of the amount claimed here in addition, $4,000 and upward, is for the article of shelving. I went down to the Patent Office myself to examine the difference between the shelving in the two wings and the character of the work, and I found it to be identically the same, with this exception: that the shelving in the west wing of the Patent Office is made of narrower plank than that in the east wing of the Patent Office; but in the agreement the allowance of six cents per foot for glued joints is made in both cases, which more than compensates for the difference in the width of planking; in fact, it makes it to the interest of the mechanic to make the plank narrower and have more joints in the shelving, so that, as far as that difference is concerned, the advantage is altogether with Mr. Davis. There is no other difference that I can find, and it is so certified here, both by the measurer and by others in the employment of the Government. It is on the strength of that work that he claims to be allowed two hundred per cent. more than is allowed in the Builders' Guide.

It is said in justification of this claim that the matter was referred to an arbitration, and that that arbitration made this allowance. It is but justice, however, to the Government to say that that reference was made apparently on a mistake of this kind: Mr. Davis alleged that there had been a mistake in the measurement, and the Commissioner decided that if there had been a mistake in the measurement it was proper that the Government should reopen the case; but when the case was reopened it did not turn out to be a mistake of measurement, but the arbitration sent in a change in the price; so that there is really no foundation to justify the reopening of the case at all.

Again, in this commission, as it is called, the Government was not represented. The measurer of the United States was not present.

Mr. POLAND. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri what evidence there is that the Government was not represented in the meeting before that board of arbitrators. The three men were selected wholly by the Commissioner without the intervention of the claimant at all. I am not aware of any evidence that was before the committee or any that exists that the Government was not represented.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator asks what authority there is for the statement that the Government was not represented at that arbitration, as he calls it, the investigation. The authority that I quote is that of Mr. John C. Harkness, the United States sworn measurer, under whom this work was done, in which he says, referring to this claim, after it had been examined by Mr. Bishop, and had been pronounced wholly unfounded:

"Here I supposed the matter would rest; but after the lapse of an entire Administration, when the nation is heaving in agony, with an amount of legitimate expenses taxing her to her utmost, this unfounded claim is honored with a resurrection, and is about to be stamped with real value. I am informed that this is the result of a private examination of the case had by three gentlemen, who are contractors, and but one of them claims to be an expert in the business of measuring joinery; that Mr. Davis and his attorney were permitted to attend the committee when examining the work, while there was none to represent the United States; that Mr. Davis did on one of these occasions attempt to prejudice the interests of the Government by calling the attention of the committee to the discrepancy," &c.

Again, he says:

"Having presented a bird's-eye view of the history and facts of the case, will you permit me to inquire, Mr. Secretary—for I am sure you are well versed in such questions—

"1. If Mr. Davis, prior to the presentation of his bid, did obtain from the Government measurer a knowledge of the prices which he would apply to the several descriptions of work, and making no exceptions thereto, is he not bound, in all fairness, to abide by these prices; prices which he himself considered so liberal as to induce him to propose a large discount therefrom?

"2. If, after having executed the model cases of the east wing by measurement, he proposed to execute the same description of work at the west wing, with the knowledge that the same measurer is retained by the Government, is he not bound, in all fairness, to abide by the same prices for the same kind of work?

"3. If Mr. Davis is allowed two hundred per cent. advance upon the book price for shelving at the west wing, can he not claim, with propriety, a similar advance for the same description of shelving which he furnished at the east wing, for which he has received but the book price?"

I will only call attention to one other communication which was addressed to the committee. It is from Mr. Edward Clark, the architect of the United States Capitol extension. The question involved here is whether the shelving was of the same kind in the two wings. Mr. Clark says:

WASHINGTON, July 14, 1866.

SIR: Your letter relating to the prices allowed by the Government measurer for carpenters' work done at the shelving of the show-cases in the eastern and western saloons of the Patent Office building was referred by me to Mr. Harkness, the measurer.

That was a letter to be sent to Mr. Harkness.

In reply I have the honor to submit the letter of that gentleman, by which it will be seen that the shelving of the two wings are identical, with the exception that those in the western wing are in the average made of narrower boards, and consequently have more joints than those of the eastern. This has been compensated for in the allowance for the joints, which were paid for by the lineal foot.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
EDWARD CLARK,
Architect United States Capitol Extension, &c.
The CHAIRMAN Committee on Public Buildings, United States Senate.

Mr. President, I believe that in the examination of this case I have done my duty as a member of the committee. I have presented also the views of the minority of the committee, which have been printed and laid upon the tables of the Senators. I have no desire to protract the discussion or to insist any further upon the matter. I think the claim is a totally unjust one. It is now resurrected some nine years after it has been passed upon and pronounced unjust by the Government. I think if it is to be acted upon at all by the United States, it is simple justice to the Government itself that it should be referred to the Court of Claims, where it can have a fair and impartial hearing in view of all the facts to be elicited.

Mr. POLAND. I do not desire to occupy a moment in reference to this claim. The Senator from Missouri suggests that it should now be referred to the Court of Claims. It was referred to a board of arbitrators. There never was any dispute in relation to the quantity of the work; it was merely as to its quality. By direction of the Secretary it was referred to a board of three builders, selected by himself. They unanimously decided in favor of this claim, and it was recommended by the Secretary to be paid, and a bill was passed in the House to pay it, but in consequence of its being a private claim put on an appropriation bill it was struck out in the Senate. It came before the Committee on Claims in the Senate, of which the Senator from Kansas was chairman. That committee unanimously reported in favor of it. It has twice been reported favorably by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It has been three times reported in the House, and twice passed by the House. I trust that this suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, that it should now be sent to the Court of Claims, will not be agreed to. I think the Government has tortured this poor mechanic long enough.

Mr. BROWN. Let me call the Senator's attention to one fact. The letter of Mr. Smith says:

"After the work was completed a controversy arose in regard to the amount of the work."

Mr. POLAND. It is perfectly immaterial whether the Secretary understood what the dispute was or did not. The real dispute never was as to the quantity of the work; it was as to its quality; whether it was to be at one price or at another price; and all the builders who have examined it, the House committee who went up there during the last session to examine it for themselves, every body that ever has examined it says that it was of the quality that it is claimed it was, and he was entitled to the higher price he asks. I hope it may be determined now finally at this time.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cattell, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Morgan, Morrill, Norton, Patterson, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Riddle, Ross, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Willey, and Yates—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Lane, Sherman, Sprague, Wade, and Wilson—6.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Fessenden, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Kirkwood, McDougall, Nesmith, Nye, Saulsbury, Stewart, and Williams—18.

So the bill was passed.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 213, to extend the provisions of the act in regard to agricultural colleges to the State of Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The Committee on Public Lands reported the joint resolution with an amendment striking out the following proviso:

Provided, The grant of lands so made by the act to which this refers and is amendatory shall be held by the State of Tennessee subject to this condition, that no person shall ever be employed as a professor or teacher in the said agricultural college for the State of Tennessee who had ever held military or civil office under these so-called confederate government, or under the rebel State government of Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution of the Senate No. 90, to suspend temporarily the collection of the direct tax within the State of West Virginia.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 912, making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. R. P. SPALDING, of Ohio, Mr. J. A. KASSON, of Iowa, and Mr. C. A. ELDRIDGE, of Wisconsin, managers at the same on its part.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 904, making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1868, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. THADDEUS STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, Mr. JOHN F. FARNSWORTH, of Illinois, and Mr. F. C. LE BLOND, of Ohio, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 896, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1868; and had agreed to the forty-sixth amendment of the Senate to the bill with an amendment, asked a conference of the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. THADDEUS STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, Mr. WILLIAM E. NIBLACK, of Indiana, and Mr. ROSCOE CONKLING, of New York, managers at the same on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 421) to authorize the construction of a submerged tubular bridge across the Mississippi river at the city of St. Louis;

A bill (S. No. 515) granting a pension to Mrs. Ernestine Becker;

A bill (S. No. 581) granting a pension to Olivia W. Cannon;

A bill (S. No. 558) for the relief of Mary A. Smith, of Johnson county, Tennessee, widow of Alexander D. Smith, deceased;

A bill (S. No. 556) for the relief of Caroline McGee, of Greene county, Tennessee, widow of Lemuel McGee, deceased;

A bill (S. No. 498) granting a pension to Mrs. Josephine Slocum;

A bill (H. R. No. 910) granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon-road from Dalles City, on the Columbia river, to Fort Boisé, on the Snake river;

A bill (H. R. No. 965) declaring Clinton bridge, across the Mississippi river at Clinton, in the State of Iowa, a post route;

A bill (H. R. No. 1130) to amend section twelve, chapter two hundred and ninety-nine, of laws of the first session Thirty-Ninth Congress; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 171) for the relief of Martha McCook.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, the Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 896) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and the amendment of the House to the forty-sixth amendment of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; disagree to the amendment of the House to the forty-sixth amendment of the Senate thereto, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. FESSENDEN, Mr. WILLIAMS, and Mr. COWAN.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, the Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 912) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. DOOLITTLE.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, the Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill of the House No. 904, making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1868, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. SUMNER, Mr. FOGG, and Mr. JOHNSON.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. FOWLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 557.

Mr. DOOLITTLE rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour is on the point of expiring, and the unfinished business of yesterday will be in order.

Mr. FOWLER. It will take but a few minutes to pass this bill. I do not desire to discuss it at all.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I hope the Senator from Tennessee will let the regular order come up, and then, informally, I shall have no objection to his occupying a few moments in the passage of that bill; but I wish to go on with the regular order at one o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the order of the day, and is now before the Senate, being the bill (S. No. 204) to provide for an annual inspection into Indian Affairs, and for other purposes, the amendment of the House of Representatives thereto being the pending question.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, I deem this bill one of the most important, aside from the great question of reconstruction, which has been presented to the present Congress. I believe that it involves the character of the Government. I believe that it involves more money, and if properly considered and acted upon by Congress can save to this Government more money, than any other legislation that is now pending. I believe that our character as a nation is involved in it; and therefore Senators will excuse me if I speak with earnestness, for I confess I feel very deeply the importance of this measure.

For nearly ten years, by the pleasure of the Senate, the responsibility of Indian affairs has to a considerable extent been thrown upon me. It has been a thankless task; a responsibility which has brought labor without any compensation. In the course of this long period I think I have obtained some information in relation to Indian affairs which I should not have obtained as a matter of course had I been engaged in the business mainly which comes from the other committees of the Senate.

In the views which are entertained by myself on this subject I am sustained unanimously by the Committee on Indian Affairs of this body, unanimously also by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, and unanimously sustained by the special committee raised by the two Houses, who were instructed to inquire into and to report to Congress what legislation was necessary to bring about, if possible, a better administration of Indian affairs.

Mr. President, in the examination of this question I am not unaware of the difficulties which exist in the proper administration of Indian affairs. I agree with the honorable Senator from Oregon, who is not now in his seat, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] that there are difficulties in relation to the administration of Indian affairs which no law of Congress, no administration of the laws of Congress can entirely remove. They are difficulties which grow out of the nature of the disease itself, irremediable, incurable, which grow, out of the contact of a superior with an inferior race; the one race rushing onward to every Territory into all the valleys and the mountain gorges all over the vast domain of the United States, which of necessity brings in contact with the Indian tribes men of the most hardy, adventurous, not to say sometimes the most reckless character in the world. The contact of these people with the Indians in our Territories produces results which no legislation can remove. Whichever way the system is administered, whether by the War Department or without the War Department, there are diseases here and difficulties which are beyond the power of man to remove. But, sir, while it is impossible for us radically to remove all these difficulties and to make a perfect administration of Indian affairs, I do insist that there is such a thing as ameliorating these diseases, and it is toward the amelioration of the system that we wish to direct the attention of Congress and to call the serious judgment of Congress to it.

Sir, I know how difficult it is to get the ear of Congress or the ear of the Senate on anything which concerns our Indian relations. Allow me, however, to state some facts. Does my friend from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] know that six thousand Indians under the War Department in New Mexico cost us at the rate of $1,500,000 a year just to feed and clothe them, to say nothing about the expenses of the troops which are required to keep them upon the reservations and to keep the peace in New Mexico? Yes, sir, $1,500,000 expended to feed and clothe six thousand Indians alone, which appropriation is more than one half of the whole Indian appropriations besides. I ask gentlemen who sit around me here, who ever heard about this expenditure by the War Department? I ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance, did he ever know that the War Department were expending $1,500,000 annually merely to feed and clothe six thousand Indians? Not one word is said about that. No estimate is made for it. How is it that this $1,500,000 given to these six thousand Indians can pass through Congress and nobody know anything about it? Simply because it comes in the estimates for the Army. You will vote $50,000,000 without inquiring a word if it is only said to be necessary for the Army. Transportation for the Army, commissary supplies for the Army, pass without question. But when you come to the matter of appropriations for the Indian bureau the estimates must be itemized and they must present their claim, that we claim so much for such a tribe of Indians, so much for another, so much for carrying out a treaty with this tribe of Indians or with that tribe of Indians, and when these estimates are presented to Congress, item after item, Congress can look into them and make objections to them. These various items are to be passed on by the Committee on Finance and by the Committee on Indian Affairs. Our attention is arrested and brought to them.

By reference to the speech of an honorable gentleman of the House of Representatives on the 1st of February last, I find he states that the whole amount of the expenditures for the Indian Bureau under the appropriation bill was $2,468,030, and for transportation on that sum $127,368; while the cost of providing by the War Department for six thousand Indians alone was $1,500,000. We know nothing about that. I know it is a very easy way to dispose of these expenses in Indian affairs to turn the matter over to the War Department. It will then come in one grand item, $50,000,000 at a time; there will be no discussion in Congress. It will be said, "Why that is to support the Army; that is to feed the Army;" and no one will raise any objection whatever.

But, Mr. President, this $2,500,000 which is expended by the Indian Bureau in Indian affairs is of very little importance compared with the amount of expenditures which we incur by the Indian wars which grow up on the frontier; and the question arises, What is the best method of preventing Indian wars? Is it the best mode of preventing these Indian wars to turn the whole of those tribes over to the War Department and put them under the absolute control of officers of the Army? That is the question. Gentlemen sometimes say it is this Indian system that gets up the Indian wars. Mr. President, how little have these gentlemen looked into the real facts? I propose, in the few moments that I stand before you, to bring before the attention of the Senate the precise facts, as proved by the testimony of witnesses, to show how the great Indian wars have arisen since I have recollection on the subject.

I will go no further back than the great Indian war in the States of Illinois and Wisconsin in 1832, called the Black Hawk War, the war with the Sacs and Foxes. The Sacs and Foxes occupied a part of Illinois and Wisconsin, the valley of the Rock river, the most beautiful portion of the West, to-day filled with civilization and population. I may say from the mouth of the Rock river up into the State of Wisconsin for one hundred and fifty miles villages and cities are growing upon its banks beautiful beyond description. In the advance of white settlements it was necessary that the Indian title to that beautiful country occupied by the Sacs and Foxes should be extinguished. A treaty was made for the purpose of extinguishing the Indian title. This was before the Indian Bureau was transferred to the Interior Department, for the Interior Department was not yet created. These Indians, under Black Hawk, were in the neighborhood of their villages at Rock Island, and felt reluctant to cross the Mississippi river and forever surrender their hunting grounds and their cultivated places and the graves of their fathers. General Atkinson, in command of the Army, came up the river with steamboats and keel-boats for the purpose of driving those Indians by force across the Mississippi river, against the remonstrances of the agent. The agent of the Indians pleaded with the military not to undertake by force to drive them over the river; that if they would give to him a few blankets, some tobacco and presents, he would endeavor to persuade the Indians to cross the river, and avoid all bloodshed. But that is not the way in which the War Department deals with Indians. They undertake always to deal by force, to issue the order "the Indians must go." The military forces were advanced upon them to compel them to leave the homes of their fathers and to cross the Mississippi; and war was the consequence. We undertake to say that under the Constitution of the United States the power to declare war is in the Congress of the United States and in Congress alone; but I tell you, sir, that the whole history of our dealings with our Indian tribes has been to transfer the power to declare war to some commander of the forces upon our frontiers. Without any act of Congress, without any direction by the Government, by the mere act, it may be, of a lieutenant, it may be of a captain or a major or a colonel in command of the military forces upon the frontier, they make war on a nation of Indians, which, before its termination, involves the expenditure of millions upon millions of dollars, and we simply foot the bill. Why, sir, the report of the Secretary of War, which I have before me, tells us that the expenses of Indian wars in 1864 and 1865 amounted to $30,530,942 98. The war in the Northwest under General Sully cost this Government between six and seven million dollars, and there was but one Indian killed in the whole expedition. Why, sir? Because upon those plains they are too fleet, too rapid in their movements to be overtaken by the troops which we can send into the field.

Now, Mr. President, let me state some other facts. How did the war arise in New Mexico with the Utes and the Apaches? It was a war begun by the troops in New Mexico, as appears by an investigation which was made by Major Griner, who was detailed for the purpose of inquiring into the facts. I quote from his testimony on page 378. He says:

"In my experience I have never known a serious difficulty in the Territory between the Indians and citizens which did not originate mainly with the latter. One of the first exciting difficulties in the Territory arose from the capture of Mrs. White, a very beautiful woman, and her little daughter, by the Jicarilla Apaches. I was appointed to investigate it. I found that at Las Vegas the troops had, without any sufficient cause or provocation, fired upon the Indians, and they in revenge joined with some Utes and attacked the next train coming from the States, killing Mr. White and others, and capturing his wife and child; and also the stage, with ten passengers, was taken, and all killed. A war was the consequence."

Here was the beginning of that war which cost this Government probably $5,000,000; that is, the war with the Apaches. The troops commenced the war without provocation, they fired upon the Indians.

How was it with the commencement of the war with the Navajoes? That war commenced in this way: a Navajo Indian in the camp at Fort Defiance, having some little controversy with a negro servant boy, shot an arrow and killed him. A demand was made by Major Brooks, or those who were in command of our troops, on the whole Navajo nation for the surrender of this Indian. They had no power by which to compel the surrender. They declared that unless that Indian was surrendered war would be the consequence. An appeal was made to General Garland, then in command of the department. General Garland decided that he would stand by Major Brooks, and enforce that demand of the actual surrender of the Navajo Indian who had killed this negro boy and had fled, or he would commence war against the Navajo nation. They refused to surrender him; and upon their refusal war was declared against the Navajoes; and it was undertaken. That war resulted in four campaigns against the Navajoes before they finally surrendered. One campaign was made under Colonel De Bonneville. He made a failure. General Sumner made a campaign against them. He followed and pursued them, and drove them to their impregnable fortress in the Cañon de Chelly. That cañon is perhaps more remarkable than any other in the United States. The walls rise perpendicularly for a thousand feet on each side, in which the Indians had their homes. At the foot of the valley they raised their corn and their crops. But General Sumner going into this valley was compelled to retreat. He was not permitted to remain there one single night. The Indians rolled down stones upon the heads of the troops, and it was impossible for them to remain there, and he was compelled to retreat. General Canby undertook the capture of the Navajoes also. He entered into this same impregnable fortification of these Indians, and he was compelled to retreat also. Finally Kit Carson undertook another campaign, and before winter set in he had passed around to the foot of the valley and destroyed their crops and all the means of subsistence of these Navajo Indians; and when winter came on, being deprived of all provisions, they were compelled to surrender, and did surrender to the number of seven or eight thousand. These seven or eight thousand Indians, taken as prisoners of war, were transferred to the reservation upon which they now live, at what is called the Bosque Redondo. I have no doubt that the war against the Navajoes, which was begun by the Army for a single offense committed by a single Indian, cost this Government more than thirty million dollars.

Again, sir, how did the great war commence with the Sioux? It commenced from the blunder and folly of a little lieutenant in command of troops on the frontier. An emigrant was passing with his train toward the West. Some Indian, it is supposed, killed one of the animals belonging to this train; and this lieutenant was sent out with all the pomp and circumstance of war to direct the Indians to surrender the Indian who had been guilty of killing this animal. It was refused. The Indians proposed to pay for the animal in buffalo robes. That was refused; the Indian himself must be surrendered. The lieutenant gave them a fixed time within which to surrender that Indian, on pain of his commencing war upon the camps and lodges of the Indians. They refused to surrender him. He fired upon the Indians; and in less than half an hour he and his whole command were killed and scalped. That is the way the war began with the Sioux.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to inquire of the Senator how he knows those facts if they were all killed?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I know these facts from testimony taken before the committee, the testimony of Colonel Bent, Colonel Kit Carson, and other gentlemen whose testimony was taken by the committee, and also from the interpreter of the Indians, Mr. John Smith, who had himself married an Indian woman, and was familiar with the Indians and spoke their language. We have also the additional fact that a report has been made to the War Department that he and his whole command were killed and scalped. He was sent out with orders to demand the surrender of the Indians or he would fire upon them. It is the case of Lieutenant Grattan—

Mr. NESMITH. The Senator from Wisconsin will permit me to suggest that there is a report from the War Department stating all these facts.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes, sir; I have no doubt they all appear in the War Department. It was called the "Grattan affair." I say that "affair" by those troops under the command of a little lieutenant on the frontier originated that war. Up to that time and before that time white men and Indians all over the plains could hunt buffalo together. Our relations with all the great tribes upon the plains were peaceable; but war was begun in that way, begun by the troops who were sent out on the frontier.

But suppose we look a little closer into this matter for a moment. Col. Bent says, speaking of that Sioux war:

"This war originated as follows: some Mormons on their way to Salt Lake were driving some stock; either a cow or an ox gave out, the Indians killed the animal, and the Mormons reported the fact to the commanding officer at Fort Laramie; the officer sent down for the Indian who killed the animal, but the Indians refused to send him, as he was not present and could not be found, offering at the same time to pay for the animal killed; the officer then sent Lieutenant Grattan with eighteen men to the Indian camp, where there were some three hundred warriors, to fetch the Indian away; he demanded that the Indian should be delivered in fifteen minutes or he would fire on them; the Indian not being forthcoming at the time, Lieutenant Grattan fired on the Indians, and in a few minutes he and his command were all massacred. This occurred in 1854, and was the commencement of the Sioux war, which lasted some time, the Cheyenne band of the North Platte becoming involved in it."

You remember that that war lasted for a long time. There were two or three campaigns against the Sioux. It lasted until General Harney, some two or three years afterward, pursued them and continued to pursue them to their winter home, where he, by attacking their camps—men, women, and children—did finally subjugate them to such an extent that they came to terms of peace; and for a time there was a kind of peace existing between the Sioux and the United States.

Now, sir, how did the famous war between the Cheyennes and Arapahoes and the United States begin. Colonel Bent states the origin of that? He says:

"Having been living near the mouth of the Purgatoire, on the Arkansas river, in Colorado Territory, for the last thirty-six years, and during all that time have resided near or at what is known as Bent's Old Fort, I have had considerable experience in Indian affairs from my long residence in the country. Since I have been there nearly every instance of difficulties between the Indians and the whites arose from aggressions on the Indians by the whites. Some of these aggressions are of recent date. About three years ago the Arapahoes were encamped near Fort Lyon; a soldier had obtained some whisky, and went to the Arapaho village after dark; he met an Indian or two outside"—

And then the evidence goes on to state what I hardly deem proper to read in this presence, what occurred between the soldier and the Indians. It is enough to say that a difficulty arose in reference to the treatment of the Indian women by the soldiers on that occasion. A controversy arose—

"The Indian refused to return the whisky, when the soldier pulled out his revolver, fired, and broke the Indian's arm. The soldier then made his escape and could never be identified by his officers or by the Indians. The matter created great confusion among the Indians, but was finally settled without a fight."

He then goes on to tell how the war arose between the Cheyennes and the whites:

"I understood from some officers under Colonel Chivington that the hostilities between the Cheycanes and the whites were commenced by Colonel Chivington's orders, who sent an officer down the Platte to see some Indians who, it was said, had stolen some stock, with orders to disarm all the Indians he met."

And on that subject there were several witnesses who gave their testimony, that it was alleged some of the Indians had stolen some stock, and a lieutenant with some troops was sent after those Indians with an order to arrest them and disarm them. This lieutenant proceeded to execute the order. He pursued and overtook the Indians, and without having any interpreter, without being able to speak one word in the Indian tongue, or to enable the Indians to understand what demands he made, after they shook hands with them apparently in friendship, our soldiers commenced to seize their bows and arrows and disarm the Indians, to which they would not submit. A fight immediately commenced, and then began the war between the Cheyennes and the whites. The blundering folly of these lieutenants on the frontiers, more than all other causes, has brought on these controversies between the whites and Indians, which lead to war. This is what the testimony shows; I am not speaking at random:

"The officer proceeded until he met some Indians coming in with some animals they had found belonging to the whites. He rode up to the Indians in what they thought to be a friendly manner, and, I think, shook hands with the Indians, and after doing that he and his men made a grab for the Indians' arms. The Indians tried to run; the soldiers fired at them, wounding two; one fell from his horse, but the Indians rallied and got him off before the whites could get hold of them. This was a party of Cheyennes, I think seven in number. This was the first actual conflict between this tribe and the whites. Very soon after Lieutenant Ayres was sent down to pursue the Cheyennes; to continue down the Republican and Smoky Hill fork to Fort Larned. He met a party of Cheyennes on Smoky Hill, who were going out on a hunt; they had just left Fort Larned. One of the chiefs who had been on to Washington the spring previous was with the party. He went up to the soldiers, shook hands with them, showed the lieutenant the medal he got from the President, stating that his Great Father, when giving him the medal, told him to be always friendly to the whites. This chief, Lean Bear, was then shot by one of the soldiers; a fight then commenced; there were two other Indians killed, three soldiers killed, and ten or twelve wounded. The troops then commenced retreating, and a running fight was kept up for ten or fifteen miles; the Indians finally left them, the soldiers going to Fort Larned."

Now, Mr. President, that is the manner in which the great Indian war on the plains originated. We are coming down to the origin of the difficulty. It originates from the course pursued by troops under the command of these little lieutenants. I do not say that all men in command of our troops would be guilty of the same indiscretion. I am only speaking of the commencement of the difficulties in these cases.

Mr. CONNESS. Just at this time, if it will not interrupt the Senator, I should like to know from him at what rank an Army officer could command his respect? Nearly a dozen times already he has emphasized the words "little lieutenants." Now, Mr. President, little lieutenants are sometimes big men, quite as big — I will not say that; but I should like to know at what rank a soldier would have the respect of the honorable Senator?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not wish to speak with disrespect of lieutenants.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator has been doing it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have given an account of what was done by Lieutenant Grattan, and what was done by the lieutenant of whom I have just read. What I mean is, that those lieutenants are generally young men, inexperienced, not knowing how to manage, control, and govern a race like the Indians with whom they come in contact. If the best men and the wisest men could be selected for Indian agents, and the wisest and best men could be selected to have command of our troops upon the frontier, they would avoid, I have no doubt, these difficulties. I was only stating to the Senate the real facts, the beginning, the origin of these Indian wars; for it is these Indian wars which produce the great amount of expenditures that we desire to avoid.

Sir, let me state a fact, which is stated in the report of the committee, a fact within my personal knowledge. When that portion of the committee who were charged with the investigation of affairs there, arrived at Fort Larned in the southwest part of Kansas, Colonel Ford had already issued an order for fifteen hundred troops to cross the Arkansas on the south side to fight with the Camanches, where there is not a single white man residing, and where, if he had advanced with his fifteen hundred men, he could not have found one of them and obtain a fight. If we were to enter upon a war with the Camanches we would be required to have, as he stated in his testimony when we came to examine him afterward, at least ten thousand men, four thousand of whom should be mounted; for in his testimony he states, what all the world knows, that the Camanches are the best horsemen on the continent. The committee prevailed upon him to countermand the order he had issued and call back his troops, and not to enter upon a war with the Camanches on the south side of the Arkansas till he should have positive orders from headquarters. The order was countermanded, and the troops were withdrawn. I only speak of that to show the necessity of the presence of men who have judgment and discretion, men connected with the Army or men connected with the civil administration of affairs, to advise and control and give direction to these relations between ourselves and the Indian tribes, and who know how to preserve the peace as well as how to make war.

Sir, had a war been entered upon at that time which would have involved us in a war with the Camanches, it would have cost as much as any of the Indian wars which we have had on our hands in years gone by. According to the report of the Secretary of War, our Indian wars of 1864-65 cost over thirty million dollars. This war with the Camanches, had it been undertaken, would have cost us anywhere from ten to fifteen, twenty, or thirty millions, and would have required two or three years to bring it to a successful termination. I insist that the troops upon the frontiers are as responsible for the commencing of those wars as any other cause.

I know the argument which is used in favor of the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. That question upon both sides has been considered by the committee. The argument is stated in this language:

"The argument in favor of it is that in case of hostilities the military forces must assume control of our relations to the hostile tribes, and therefore it is better for the War Department to have the entire control, both in peace and in war; secondly, that the annuity goods and clothing paid to Indians under treaty stipulations will be more faithfully and honestly made by officers of the regular Army who hold their places for life, and are subject to military trials for misconduct, than when made by the agents and superintendents appointed under the Interior Department; and thirdly, that it would prevent conflict between different Departments in the administration of their affairs."

I have the candor to say that these suggestions are not without force. I feel that there is some force in them, and I balance the weight of these suggestions against the suggestions which are to be made on the other side. I do not deny that it would be an improvement upon our Indian system if all our Indian teachers and agents and farmers held their offices for life. That is the system in Great Britain. They appoint their Indian agents and teachers and missionaries substantially for life, and they do not require to keep any troops in the neighborhood of their Indian tribes. Of course they are situated differently from what we are. We are rushing forward in the tide of emigration, bringing us necessarily in contact with the Indians. They are not doing so in the Province of Upper Canada and in the great British Columbia. That is the reason, doubtless, why there are no conflicts and quarrels between the whites and Indians about the administration of affairs in Canada. I admit if it were possible for us to have Indian agents selected to hold their office for a long term of years, so as to make it their life business, their profession, their ambition, it would be better than our present system.

But, sir, when gentlemen say that officers of the Army, who, with their commands, must as a matter of course move from post to post, whose business and whose profession it is to deal with troops, to manage troops, to fight with troops, that that profession fits and adapts men to take charge of reservations, to become agents for Indians, to become farmers, to show them how to work, it is, in my judgment, a great mistake. If all the relations which we bear to the Indian tribes were relations of hostility, if we were to be always at war with them, I admit the management of Indian affairs should go at once to the Army, to their absolute and unqualified control. But, sir, the relations of peace are the relations which we desire to establish and to cultivate with the Indian tribes; and while troops, as a matter of course, are to be used upon the frontier to sustain the civil administration, we should put those troops there in aid of the civil administration of the Government rather than put them there in supreme power over the civil administration of the Government.

There are other considerations, Mr. President. I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate at any considerable length; but there is this consideration which, in my judgment, should urge the Senate to vote against the amendment proposed by the House and in favor of the Senate bill: there is now lying upon your table, Senators, a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, asking for an appropriation of $150,000, for the purpose of sending special commissioners to the Indian tribes in order to preserve the peace upon the frontier. The bill of the Senate provides, not for special commissioners, but for the organization of a board, whose constant duty it will be to inspect, to supervise, to take control and charge of our relations with the Indians in the various districts into which they are to be divided. Those boards are to be constituted in such a manner as to prevent them from being political appointments. One is to be assigned as an officer from the regular Army; one is to be selected from those persons who shall be named, not by any particular religious denomination or religious body, but who shall be named by the meetings or conventions of any of those bodies. Some gentlemen have said that this is connecting church and State, connecting Indian affairs with the church; that this man must necessarily be a minister. Sir, no such thing is required or is necessary at all; but the purpose is to prevent its being a political appointment; the purpose is to satisfy the sense of humanity and justice of this nation, which is shocked from year to year in the administration of Indian affairs. I say to that sense of justice and propriety of this whole nation, that if the proposition is now made to deliver the whole of the Indian tribes over to the absolute, unqualified control of the War Department, to be administered by the Army and the officers of the Army, it is to deliver them over to the shortest road to extermination.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. WILLIAMS] says that this is appointing a large number of officers and incurring a large amount of expense. How many officers are to be appointed under this bill? Ten, and only ten. There are to be five inspection districts, and two new appointments for each district, and one officer from the Army assigned annually to join in constituting this board. The whole of the additional expense under the bill will be $40,000. Sir, if the expenses under this bill were to be $250,000 it would be still a great economy to the Government. These men, charged as they are under the third section with power to suspend agents, superintendents, and all the employes of the Department; empowered to listen to the complaints which may be made by the Indian tribes; empowered to make peace with the Indian tribes, are to be a constant and standing commission. They are to be the ears and eyes of the Department of the Government dealing with the Indians, to keep and preserve the peace. I believe that this board, so constituted, would preserve the peace upon our frontiers.

Let me suppose a case. California, Nevada, and Arizona are to constitute one district. Suppose that my friend from California or some gentleman from California or from that district of equal capacity and standing and integrity should take charge as chief inspector of this board; suppose that a colonel or a general of the Army were detailed to go with him; suppose that some gentleman of high character should be named to become a visitor and join with them, and to that board were given the power to look after all the Indian affairs of California, Nevada, and Arizona; I mean to superintend their administration within that district. I would not be afraid to guaranty that there would not be an Indian war within that Territory if such a board so constituted, with power to see the Indians, to hear their complaints, to make peace, and to superintend the administration of affairs. Just so if Oregon, which is to be united with Washington and Idaho, were put under the charge of a similar board. Just so if Minnesota and Dakota and Upper Montana were placed under the superintendence or the inspection of a board like that. I believe that it would save us from Indian wars; and if these boards should save us from but one Indian war in ten years it would pay the whole expense of them. I know that the simple presence of three members of the congressional committee at Fort Larned, giving their advice, saved a war with the Camanches on the south side of the Arkansas. I know that these boards, constituted as proposed, seeing the officers of the Army in command of troops; seeing also the Indian tribes; seeing also all the officers of the Government dealing with the Indian tribes, superintending their affairs, with power to suspend any agent or employé of the Indian department, would bring to the administration efficiency and success. I do not say that it would remove all our Indian difficulties, because they are a disease which can never be completely cured. The most that we can hope for is amelioration.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is the Senator through?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes, sir; but I desire to take a vote of the Senate on this bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am utterly opposed to the bill before the Senate, and I am likewise opposed to the amendment; and I have been laboring for some time to take up a bill which is very important, indeed, the Niagara ship-canal bill. It must be evident to every Senator that we shall never get a vote on this bill. We have now squandered some three or four days upon it. We have but seven or eight days left; and in order to get rid of this question that we never can get rid of any other way, I move that it be laid on the table for the purpose of taking up the Niagara ship-canal bill.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I hope we shall have a vote on the bill itself.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We shall never get a vote if we have these long speeches on it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Let us have the speeches. There is no more important question before Congress than this very bill. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Fowler, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Sherman, Stewart, Wade, Williams, and Yates—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, Henderson, Hendricks, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Ross, Sprague, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wiley—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Johnson, McDougall, Morgan, Norton, Nye, Patterson, Poland, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sumner, and Wilson—19.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I commenced submitting a few remarks upon the bill which is now before us the other day, but was interrupted by the reception of the military government bill from the House of Representatives. Perhaps I said on that occasion all that it is necessary for me to say. However, I wish to call the especial attention of Senators to the fact that most of the difficulty in the management of our Indian affairs arises out of the fact that nobody is responsible for the Indian department; that there is no head; that there is nobody who has a right to control or who is responsible for our treatment of the Indians. The two Departments are constantly working at cross purposes. Each is blaming the other. When there is an Indian war without consultation with the military, a little Indian agent will slip in and make a treaty of peace with the Indians before the war is properly concluded, giving the Indians time to recuperate; giving them time for the grass to grow, and then they start again with the war. There is no fixed and firm policy. If the Indian Bureau is to constitute a part of the Interior Department turn the whole matter over to the Interior Department; do not have two contending parties.

Sir, this subject has come under my personal observation for the last fifteen or eighteen years. Every time murders are committed, every time anything is complained of, the War Department charge it to the Interior Department, and the Interior Department charge it to the War Department. This difficulty is realized in full by the War Department. In the report of General Grant, in which he submits for the consideration of Congress the reports of different military officers, these difficulties are enumerated, and any one on a moment's reflection can see that they are insurmountable. While this question is before Congress let it be settled. Either take it out of the hands of the War Department altogether and have no soldiers there at all, and send your missionaries and your peace-makers and have it understood that there is to be no protection except what they can give by persuading the savages to be humane and not kill any more than is absolutely necessary; have that understood, or have it understood that there is a responsible Department dealing with the Indians; that they must comply with their contracts; that they must comply with their treaties; and that this Government has power to enforce its treaty obligations. This is very forcibly put by Brigadier General Pope in his report. He says:

"GENERAL: In compliance with your suggestions, I have the honor to submit the following leading reasons why the Indian Bureau should be retransferred to the War Department. The views which I shall submit are by no means original, but are well-settled opinions of every officer of the Army who has had experience of the subject, and are and have been entertained for years by nearly every citizen of the Territories not directly or indirectly connected with the present system of Indian management."

I indorse that.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the Senator inform me from what document he is reading?

Mr. STEWART. I am reading from a letter of Major General Pope. It is indorsed by General Grant, and sent to the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What does General Grant say indorsing it?

Mr. STEWART. He submits it to the consideration of the committee:

"Respectfully forwarded to the Secretary of War, with request that these copies be sent to the Military Committees of the United States Senate and House of Representatives and the honorable Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is not an indorsement.

Mr. STEWART. I indorse this statement, for I have seen this difficulty. If it wants an indorsement, I am prepared to indorse it personally. I have seen the difficulty, and any man who has lived in the Territories must have seen it:

"1. Under present circumstances there is a divided jurisdiction over Indian affairs."

That is true.

"While the Indians are officially at peace, according to treaties negotiated with them by the civil officers of the Indian Bureau, the military forces stationed in the Indian country have no jurisdiction over the Indians, and, of consequence, no certain knowledge of their feelings or purposes, and no power to take an action, either of a precautionary or aggressive character."

That is when a treaty has been made, they are officially at peace, and they remain officially at peace until after the killing is done:

"The first that is known of Indian hostilities is a sudden report that the Indians have commenced a war, and have devastated many miles of settlements, or massacred parties of emigrants or travelers. By the time such information reaches the military commander the worst has been accomplished, and the Indians have escaped from the scene of outrage. Nothing is left to the military except pursuit, and generally unavailing pursuit. The Indian agents are careful never to locate their agencies at the military posts for reasons very well understood. It is not in human nature that two sets of officials, responsible to different heads, and not in accord either in opinion or purpose, should act together harmoniously; and instead of combined, there is very certain to be conflicting action. The results are what might be expected. It would be far better to devolve the whole management of Indians upon one or the other Department, so as to secure at least consistent and uniform policy."

This I indorse, because I have seen it. I have heard the excuses of both parties and seen these difficulties in the Territories where I have lived, and where they came under my personal observation. When any outrage occurred, and we called upon the military, they would attribute it to some action of the Indian agents, and the Indian agents would be full of their excuses and their representations. Nobody can be held responsible. If our pioneers are to be murdered every year by the hundreds, as they are now; if our thoroughfares are to be obstructed; if the progress of the settlement of the great West is to be retarded by Indian depredations, I am anxious to know what Department is responsible for it. I want to give the control of Indian affairs exclusively to one Department, so that we can look to that Department, and there shall be no excuses for misconduct:

"At war, the Indians are under the control of the military; at peace, under the control of the civil officers. Exactly what constitutes Indian hostilities is not agreed on; and besides this, as soon as the military forces, after a hard campaign, conducted with great hardship and at large expense, have succeeded in forcing the Indians into such a position that punishment is possible, the Indian, seeing the result and the impossibility of avoiding it, immediately proclaims his wish to make peace. The Indian agent, anxious for manifest reasons, to negotiate a treaty, at once interferes 'to protect' (as he expresses it) the Indians from the troops, and arrests the further prosecution of the military expedition, just at the moment when results are to be obtained by it, and the whole labor and cost of the campaign are lost."

Here you spend millions in sending out your armies to fight the Indians, and as soon as the armies have any prospect of success, the Indian has perfect protection from the Army by going to an Indian agent and making peace. As soon as the Army is withdrawn he proceeds to destroy the frontier settlements, to murder women and children; he is again pursued by the Army; and as soon as the Army have it in their power to obtain practical results by his destruction or capture, he proceeds to the Indian agent again and makes peace. So he cares nothing for the Army; he does not fear your Army because he has complete protection when he goes to the Indian agent; and thus it is that we have nothing but extermination and recrimination between the two Departments and constant slaughter of the pioneers.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the honorable Senator allow me to ask him whether he understands that by law we have divided any authority between the War Department and the Interior Department with regard to the care and management of the Indians?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir, by law.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator refer me to that law?

Mr. STEWART. I will tell the Senator just exactly how the law stands. The law provides that when the Indian is at war he shall be under the control of the War Department.

Mr. MORRILL. What statute says that?

Mr. STEWART. What statute gives the control of Indian affairs to the Army in case of war? I apprehend they can do it independent of statute. I think when any party makes war against us there is plenty of law authorizing the Military Department to protect the inhabitants in case of a war with the Indians.

Mr. MORRILL. If my honorable friend refers to a practice on the part of the Army then I am not at issue with him; but if he maintains that there is any law which authorizes the interference of the military I take issue with him.

Mr. STEWART. I undertake to say that there is law authorizing the interference of the military, or every military man in the United States is directly or indirectly a murderer.

Mr. CONNESS. If the Senator from Nevada will permit me, we were told only a few moments since by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin that it had cost $1,500,000 in the Territory of New Mexico under the administration of the War Department or a military commander there to feed six thousand Indians and take care of them. Now, I should like to suggest to the honorable Senator from Maine whether that is all being done without law and without authority of law, or whether it argues a general control or not. If it is true, it is a very sad truth; and I shall speak of that in another connection. They are held as prisoners said one Senator. It is under appropriations said another Senator. Why, sir, they are under the direction of military control and have been kept there for eighteen months last past; and more too, says the Senator from Wisconsin. Is not that a joint control?

Mr. MORRILL. The honorable Senator comes very near proving what I suggested when I spoke of the practice of the military as opposed to the law in the case. I have no controversy to settle with the honorable Senator from California on this question, and I might very respectfully refer him to the honorable Senator to whom he referred as having made the statement. But I have yet to learn that there is any divided authority on this question. The Interior Department has the absolute and unqualified control of this whole subject, and any interference on the part of the military is unauthorized. Of course, when we are in a state of war whether with the Indians or any other people, we are under the rules of war; but the management of the Indians is confided exclusively by law to the Interior Department of the Government.

Mr. STEWART. Then, according to the Senator from Maine, we are expending from ten to thirty millions per annum to carry on Indian wars without authority of law. I undertake to say that the War Department is guilty of one grand embezzlement, and the Army of the United States are guilty of the crime of murder, if they have no legal authority to spend this money and no legal authority to make war upon the Indians. But, sir, I apprehend that the Secretary of War and General Grant and all our Army officers are not in the sad predicament of having squandered thirty millions of money without authority of law, and having made war upon the Indians and killed them without authority of law. If they have done so, if their acts were not legal, we had better have them tried at once for the embezzlement of the money and for the murder of the Indians. I suppose our statute-books are full of laws which authorize the military authorities to protect the inhabitants and make appropriations for that purpose.

But if it be true that this thing is entirely under the control of the Department of the Interior, why do they complain of the War Department not doing its duty? Why do they shift the responsibility? Why do they not protect the frontier inhabitants? Why do they allow our highways to be blocked up? Why do they allow the women and children upon the plains to be murdered yearly, almost daily? Why do they permit these things? Sir, the system is a failure. Every gentleman who has lived in the Territories where it has operated will bear testimony that it is a failure. It is said that by patching it up a little and giving a few more officers they can remedy it. Taking up this morning one of the leading papers of my State, the Gold Hill Daily News, edited by a gentleman who has lived many years in that country, I find an article on this very subject, from which I will read an extract:

"The recent shocking massacre at Fort Phil. Kearney calls public attention afresh to the defects of our Indian policy. This policy is only perpetual war. The worst class of politicians seek Indian agencies for the opportunities they afford for plunder; the Indians are cheated and abused and kept in perpetual exasperation; they make treaties only to break them, and the border settlements and great routes of travel across the continent are rendered unsafe by them. The first thing to be done in the way of remedy for these abuses on both sides is to transfer the control of Indian affairs to the War Department. The Army has nothing else to do at present, and there is no service it can render of more importance than to effect a permanent settlement of the Indian difficulties. General Grant advocated this in his annual report, and Generals Sherman and Pope, and indeed all our commanders who have had anything to do with the Indians, agree that this is the true policy.

This is the sentiment of every journal published in that region and of every public man who has lived there long enough to see the workings of the system. It is time a remedy were applied. The results of this conflicting jurisdiction between the War Department and the Interior Department is visited not upon these Departments, but upon the pioneers and the innocent inhabitants. The Indians are not benefited. A large amount of money is appropriated to each Department for this service. The transfer will certainly not increase the amount to be expended.

But it is complained that the Army officers are not suitable persons for this business. I believe the Army, as now constituted, is well fitted for it. This results from the fact that those now in the service have been selected as a general thing for meritorious deeds; selected on account of their high character. Certainly men in the military service under present circumstances can be trusted more than irresponsible persons who are appointed for political reasons. If we turn this bureau over to the War Department the officers of the Army will be responsible; as military men they can be called to account, they can be tried, they can be removed for breach of duty. With the present efficient organization of the Army I believe the War Department will hold its agents to a strict accountability. There is more pride, more character in the Army than there was before it did the important service it has rendered in the suppression of the rebellion. Men of character are in it, and I say the War Department can select from the Army and appoint to this duty men who will be more responsible, men who will be more likely to be trusted by the community, men who will have the confidence of the community, men who will discharge their duties under the obligations of their official oath and under the obligations of the Army regulations better than A, B, and C, picked up we do not know where for mere political services which they have rendered, and placed in charge of this important trust.

Besides, under the present system, as soon as an agent gets to know anything about his business he is probably removed. Removals frequently take place every four years. An Indian agent is not left in office long enough to become familiar with the business he has to attend to. You are constantly educating men for this business, and as soon as they become familiar with it turning them out. The Army is so organized that when you get a good man in the right place he is likely to be kept there; he will be kept there long enough to do some good. The complaint of the present system, made by the Senator from Wisconsin, is that the officers are changed too often. Turn it over to the War Department and there will be no necessity for frequent changes.

But, sir, it has been suggested that turning it over to the War Department means the extermination of the Indians. I deny it. They can be put upon their reservations and kept there if you have responsible agents; but if no one is responsible for them that system will not be carried out. I deny that this transfer means extermination. The War Department is just as humane as the Interior Department. It does not mean extermination: it means protection. The War Department is the Department to which we have to look for protection in the end. Tell me not that officers of the Army will be more cruel and unjust to the Indians than mere speculating Indian agents! Such a suggestion is a reflection upon the Army that ought to be repelled at once. Besides, the Indian respects shoulder-straps; he respects the warrior, and he likes to deal with warriors, and he does not look upon anybody as honorable unless he is a warrior. Every Indian that is of any account is a warrior. Let him deal with those that he respects as a class. Civilians he has a great contempt for. He will use them to avoid punishment by the Army, and cheat them the next hour.

I believe the proposed change will save expense. I believe it will protect the frontier inhabitants. I believe the experiment ought to be tried, and ought to be tried now, or as soon as the interests of the country will admit, for the present system is a failure. If you give the War Department the sole control, they have the machinery to accomplish the purpose; they have the right men at the head of affairs in that Department to do it, and they can accomplish it. The other Department has not the machinery to enforce its mandates, has not the power to keep its employés in office whenever there is a change in the politics of the Administration. It has no control really over the subject with which it is dealing; is acting constantly in connection with the War Department in one sense, and yet constantly in conflict with it, so that the two Departments are working at cross purposes. The present system has been tried for twenty years and is a failure. Now, let the War Department have exclusive jurisdiction, and let us hold it responsible. Mr. Stanton, General Grant, and the whole Army are willing to take this responsibility; and if they do not keep the peace some body will be responsible for the management of Indian affairs. Now nobody is. There has not been an Indian disturbance in my recollection but there has been a dispute as to who has been to blame for it. The fact has been patent that somebody has been to blame; somebody has been negligent; somebody has failed to perform his duty. The settlers have suffered. As everybody acknowledges, the present condition of things is such that each Department charges it upon the other, and in that way each avoids the responsibility, and we who live among the Indians suffer.

I fear this bill, because it adds more officers, more power to continue the present system. I do not believe patching it up with more Indian agents is going to better it. It merely strengthens a bad system and makes more officers, and it will make it more difficult to get rid of the system next year. If we cannot change it now to the War Department let us kill the bill. Do not strengthen a bad system. There are now Indian agents enough if they were good for anything, if the system would work, if they had any power or responsibility. Adding more Indian agents will have the effect of giving more influence to continue the system. I am opposed to the system, and I am opposed to having more officers under it. We have officers enough paid by the Government now. Let us have officers amenable to military law, who can be punished if they do wrong. They are willing to take the responsibility; and I say it is the duty of Congress to turn over the Indian Bureau to the War Department at once.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is not my purpose to participate to any extent in this debate. I deem it proper, however, to answer one point made by the Senator from Nevada. The burden of his argument is that there is a divided jurisdiction over the Indians; the Indian department, the civil department, has its jurisdiction, and the Military Department also has a jurisdiction; and they conflict and produce the evils of which complaint is made. I am surprised to hear that proposition from the Senator from Nevada. It is only two or three days since he voted for a bill extending this very divided jurisdiction over ten of the States of this Union, in which there is no war, and in express terms saying that the military may permit the civil courts to exercise their jurisdiction; so that in ten of the States, under the policy of the Senator from Nevada, if a man wishes to bring an action of debt he must have the permission of the military; or if some poor woman who has been abused by her husband desires to bring her bill of divorce and secure the control of some of the property and the custody of her children, she must go to some lieutenant to get his permission that the court may try her cause. The Senator is the author of that policy to some extent; and why he should complain that there should be a divided jurisdiction where the Indians are sometimes at peace and sometimes at war I cannot understand. I can see with some force in there being a divided jurisdiction among the Indians depending upon the question of peace or war. But why the Senator should have been an able advocate of that policy in regard to the white people of the country I cannot quite understand. I think the Senator's course upon that bill a few days ago is a complete answer to the speech he has made just now.

Mr. STEWART. Allow me a word on that point.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. The bill that we passed the other day does make the military superior to the civil jurisdiction. It was complained that there was conflicting jurisdiction in the southern States, and that life and property were not protected. You have now given the military sufficient power to protect them. Then there is a kind of government there that we call a provisional government; and we let it go along in subordination to the military government. We have no local governments among the Indians organized by the whites that we propose to let go along as these governments in the South; but the Indians have a kind of government among themselves, and we do not propose to interfere with the Indian local, tribal government, so long as they exercise that without trespassing on the whites. We want to keep them in the exercise of their local government within the bounds of reason and humanity. And we are willing to divide the jurisdiction over the Indians, allowing the War Department power to make the Indians behave themselves in their intercourse with the whites, and allowing the Indians to manage their tribal affairs in their own way, so far as they are not in conflict with humanity and the rights of the whites. But we do not propose to have two Departments of this Government exercising authority over them independently of their local governments. We have not turned the people of the South over to both the Interior and the War Departments, and I think if we had done so we should have committed a great mistake; but we have said that the War Department shall exercise sufficient jurisdiction to protect life and property, and the provisional governments shall act in subordination to the military governments until the States are organized. I admit that that is a remedy which can only be justified on the ground of necessity. That necessity we believe exists. I hope the South will relieve themselves of it soon. I hope they will learn to do right and organize their governments on a purely Republican principle; and when they do, we shall be happy to relieve them from this military government. We have only exercised what military jurisdiction we thought necessary while they were emerging from the chaotic state in which this war left them, so that there could be some freedom of speech and some chance to organize governments on the republican principle down there. To save them from anarchy we propose to exercise this power temporarily. I was unwilling to pass a purely military bill unless it had this other provision in it.

In regard to the Indians, I propose to have a military government which shall protect the whites and Indians from conflicts with each other, and let the Indians go on with their tribal government so far as it does not conflict with that. And whenever they shall have developed a civilized government I will withdraw the military. I am willing to insert a provision in this bill declaring that whenever the Indians shall have organized civil society and are capable of taking care of themselves, when they respect the laws of the United States, when they cease to commit depredations, the military shall be withdrawn. The Senator from Indiana may have the same kind of legislation for the Indians that we have adopted for the southern States. I think it will be some time before they can organize such governments, before they learn to take care of themselves. I do not think such a provision in the bill would be of much account. I do not regard my position on this question as at all in conflict with the vote I gave the other day. It is in perfect harmony with it. I voted for the military bill as a necessity to keep order in the South. I vote now for turning the charge of Indian affairs over to the military, for the purpose of keeping order and peace in the Territories, and I declare that it is necessary; and any gentleman who has lived there and seen the situation must see the propriety of having some head, some responsibility, some military control for the protection of life and property. I think my position is entirely consistent.

Mr. HENDRICKS. As a general proposition, a man is rather unfortunate in debate when it requires a longer speech to explain himself than the original speech; but if the Senator from Nevada is satisfied with his explanation of his original speech, of course I am. When interrupted by the Senator I was about to say that I am not quite prepared to adopt the doctrine that has been announced by one of the most eminent of the military men of our country, that the only remedy is the extermination of the Indians, and that, too, by military power. However I may honor that distinguished citizen and soldier as a military man, I do not agree to that proposition. I think, sir, that it could only come from a military man, a man whose business it is to take human life in case of war.

I admit the bad qualities of the Indians; but I am not prepared to say that they have no good qualities. I admit their frequent wrongs upon the settlers; but I am not prepared to say that no wrongs have been done upon them. I believe almost as often the wrongs have been first upon Indians as the Indians have committed wrongs upon the whites. These people are to be taken care of by the Government of the United States. We have taken their lands away from them; we have located them at our pleasure; the question now is, shall they be given up to the War Department to be exterminated? If we attach this service to the War Department now after a lieutenant general of the Army has announced the doctrine that when a tribe is at war with the United States the only remedy is extermination, then we adopt in my judgment that doctrine. I suppose I should hardly be excused by the Senate in referring to the opinion expressed by Colonel Carrington. He says that he spares none, and they spare none. When he says he spares none I think he refers to the squaws and the children, not to the warriors.

I do not agree to such doctrines. I think we should take care of the Indians the best way we can. It is a very difficult question to decide. I dare say many Indian agents have been unfaithful to their trust, but certainly we can find some honest men in this country that will strive to save the Indians from destruction and constant wrong. This bill contemplates that, that we shall select some one who to some extent shall be the guardian of these poor people. I shall support it because I think that the bill does propose some remedy for the evil which we all feel.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, if I did not think that I could condense what I have to say on this measure within a brief space of time I should not rise to occupy the attention of the Senate. As I am in favor of the passage of the original bill adopted by the Senate,

I am of course disinclined by protracting the debate to endanger that passage; but there have been a few things said in this debate which deserve a reply—I mean things said with reference to the practical aspects of the measure itself, not upon those general considerations which have been introduced into the debate.

In the first place we were to be alarmed by the appearance of great expense if we adopted the original bill of the Senate. We were told that these inspectors were to receive large salaries; that the amount of contribution to this object from the Treasury would be very considerable. By referring to the second section of the bill it will be found that the amount of salary fixed in that section is to cover all expenditures whatever in connection with the performance of duty by these officers, all expenses incurred by them. The amount is to be in full, not only for their services, but also for all mileage and expenses incurred by them. In those portions of the country on the Pacific coast, and upon and beyond the western border, these officers will be subjected to unusual expenses, besides long and laborious journeys. We provide, however, that the amount of compensation fixed as salary shall cover not only the item of salary, but all other matters of expenditures in connection with their services.

Another thing: one of the three inspectors in the case of each board is to be an officer of the Army of the United States, detailed by the Secretary of War to this particular service, and it is carefully provided that he shall serve without additional pay or allowance, but shall be entitled during the continuance of his service simply to the pay provided by law for him as an officer of the Army.

It appears, then, that of the three inspectors one is to receive no pay other than that which without the passage of this bill he would receive as an officer of the Army, and it appears also that the compensation to be paid to the other two members of the board is a moderate and reasonable amount; taking into consideration the fact that they are excluded from all allowance for mileage or for those large personal expenditures to which they will be subjected in preparing supplies for themselves in entering into the Indian country, and for all other personal outlays whatsoever.

On the ground of expense the amount to be incurred by this bill is small; it is not extravagant nor even large, and no just objection lies against the measure on that ground.

Then, sir, objection has been made that one of these inspectors in the board of visitation and inspection may possibly be a minister of the Gospel, may possibly be a person in orders, one who ministers in the sanctuary. Such persons may be detailed to this service. I think language that sounded very much like contempt has been indulged in with reference to the proposition for selecting such persons.

Mr. President, I think that the board of inspection provided for in this bill will be selected under as many guarantees for efficient and proper service as can be provided. In the first place, one of the members is to be detailed by the Secretary of War, and therefore the War Department will be represented in this board. The second one is to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among such persons as may be named to him or recommended to him by the various religious societies of the country. Observe the guarantees for the selection of a proper person in that case. In the first place, our great, our important religious societies of this country are to name persons to the President. Afterward he is to select one so named, and then the selection is to be submitted to the Senate for its judgment and approval. Can you ask more securities than you have here that you will have a proper and fit man named and detailed to this particular service? The third member of the board is to be appointed by the President also, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. As to him, however, there is no requirement that any religious body or any public organization whatever shall originally name him.

In a word, sir, this board of inspection is to be constituted of members, one of whom is to be specially detailed from the Army by the Secretary of War; the other two members of it are to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and one of those appointed in the latter manner is to be named to the President by the religious societies of the country.

Now, sir, what were the objects of the original measure as passed by the Senate at the last session? Those objects were important in the highest degree, and they were as noble as they were important. One object of the measure was to prevent frauds in the management of our Indian relations, an object which has been insisted upon even by those who oppose this measure in the present debate. A second object was to prevent Indian wars, to establish such a system of inspection and management over our Indian relations that collisions between the races would not take place, in consequence of which we should be involved in prolonged and expensive wars on the border. Both these objects were of a capital and leading character, and, in the judgment of the Committee on Indian Affairs when they reported this measure, they were as necessary to the welfare of the Indian tribes as to the peace and security of the border. For there was another object in this bill, and one that in my opinion ought to commend the bill to the favor of the Senate and that was, the encouragement of civilization and of improvement among the Indian tribes. Sir, you have a choice here between the original proposition and the amendment of the House, and that choice consists in this: you are to choose between the missionary and the soldier; you are to choose between Christianity and the sword; you are to choose between peace, civilization, and humanity on the one hand, and violence, force, and devastation on the other.

Sir, I am not one of those who believe that no Government is possible upon the earth but one of sheer force, one of violence, one of brute strength. I believe that humanity, even in its most depraved condition, under its most unfavorable aspects, even among savage tribes, was so constituted by the Author of our being that it will respond to the appeals of Christianity and of kindness; that it will respond to the appeal of the missionary and of the patriot, when it is made in a proper manner and under proper auspices; and that you are not bound, even in your treatment of such tribes, to send the sword and the torch among them and announce a principle of extermination. At small expense you will extend over an enormous extent of country, not organized into States, and where Indians are found, a system of visitation, a system of inspection, a system of management and control, which, in the opinion of those who have investigated this subject, will produce most salutary results in saving this Government from expense, in saving the border from war, and in improving the mental and moral condition of the Indian tribes. And, sir, I look upon that feature of the bill which has been so much denounced to-day, the selection of one member of each board of inspection from nominees of religious societies, as connecting itself with missionary enterprise, with religious instruction, and with the progress of civilization among these tribes, and that of itself, if we secured nothing else by this bill, would be invaluable.

There is but one additional point on which I shall speak. It is obvious that a majority of the Senate are indisposed to turn over this whole subject to the War Department at this time, however it may be in the future, after the subject shall have undergone debate at a subsequent session of Congress. At present it is evident from the votes already taken that the Senate will not turn our Indian administration over to the control of the War Department. The practical question, therefore, before us is between doing nothing and passing the original bill, matured by the appropriate committee, and adopted by the Senate heretofore. That is, you have a choice between entering upon this proposed reform which bears the character I have assigned it, and doing nothing, allowing these alleged abuses of Indian agents, these imperfections of our present system to go on without any mitigation or correction whatever until perhaps a year hence, when you may possibly take up this subject for renewed discussion. Now, sir, assume that this is an experiment merely, is it not one which invites a trial, and at all events shall we not secure for a future session a large body of valuable experience and information by adopting this bill? In the first place, you will have from all portions of our country where the Indians are located a mass of independent information from these boards of inspection which you create by this bill. You will then be enabled to judge better than you can now judge whether military management or civil management is the better system to adopt for the future. For my part, so far as I have been able to investigate this subject and form opinions upon it, I am perfectly willing to try the experiment which has been proposed by the proper committee of this body and heretofore sanctioned by the vote of the Senate, and under the circumstances which now surround us, when the alternative is between adopting this measure for which we formerly voted, or doing nothing at all, every reason in my opinion is in favor of action.

Mr. HOWARD. I am disinclined to adopt either of the projects now before us. I am opposed to the bill itself, which was passed by the Senate on the 19th of March last, and still more opposed to the substitution for it of the amendment adopted by the House of Representatives. I do not think it is best at this time to attempt to revolutionize our Indian system. From the foundation of the Government down to 1849 Indian affairs were intrusted to the supervision and control of the Secretary of War. That was our ancient system, and we never departed from that policy until that year, when the act organizing the Department of the Interior was passed. The fifth section of that act declares—

"That the Secretary of the Interior shall exercise the supervisory and appellate powers now exercised by the Secretary of the War Department in relation to all the acts of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and shall sign all requisitions for the advancement or payment of money out of the Treasury, subject to the same adjustment or control now exercised on similar estimates or accounts by the Second Auditor and Second Comptroller of the Treasury."

That act turned over all the Indian affairs to the Secretary of the Interior, and since that time we have been "running the machine" under his supervision and care. It is now proposed by the amendment of the House of Representatives to reverse this order of things, and go back to the old system of military control, and to intrust it to the management of the Secretary of War; and gentlemen urge the adoption of this amendment of the House of Representatives for the reason, as they insist, that it will be likely to prevent the occurrence of Indian wars. According to their prognostications, if we adopt this amendment, we shall steer clear of all collisions with the Indian tribes in the future, or at all events the chances for the occurrence of Indian wars will be very much diminished.

How was it before the passage of the act of 1849 and during that period in which the Secretary of War had the same power which it is now proposed to give him? We had a succession and an almost continual succession of Indian wars under the administration of the War Department, including that most bloody and expensive performance of the kind known as the Seminole war, which cost the Government of the United States between twenty and thirty million dollars, if I recollect rightly. During the same period we had another very serious Indian disturbance known as a Sac war, which took place in the then Territory of Wisconsin and partly in the Territory of Michigan. I might enumerate other collisions of the same description between the Indian tribes and the United States under the same régime. I think that the history of the administration of our Indian affairs up to 1849 is a warning to us not again to intrust the Indian affairs to the control of the military authorities of the United States. I think, sir, it is unsafe. Military men, or at least that class of military men who are likely to be sent to the Indians, are, for the most part, unacquainted with the Indian character and the Indian habits. They go there carrying with them all the pride, and, I regret to say, haughtiness which pertains to their profession; and I think you will find, on a careful inspection of the history of these wars, that the most of them have been provoked by little petty interferences and insults on the part of small military officers who held the Indians in contempt or did not regard their rights. I should expect, if this amendment were adopted, to see a recurrence of precisely the same thing. I do not believe that the Indian has such a respect for the epaulette, or even the sword of an American officer, as to make him more peacefully inclined in the presence of an officer than he would be in that of a civilian, and I am opposed to revolutionizing our system again.

Congress for very good reasons adopted the plan of intrusting the administration of Indian affairs to the Department of the Interior nearly twenty years ago, and I do not believe that the country has become dissatisfied with this arrangement. We have become accustomed to it. The country is accustomed to it, although it must be confessed that in this administration there is undoubtedly a great deal of corruption and fraud. I do not look for any relief in this respect by turning the business over to the Secretary of War. I do not believe that military men who come in contact with the Indians are less likely to practice fraud and imposition upon them than are civilians. I know no distinction in point of honesty and commercial honor between a soldier or an officer and a civilian, and I do not believe it exists; while, at the same time, I do believe, for I think history justifies me in the belief, that these Indian collisions are more frequently brought about by the impertinence and unjust interference of military men located among the Indians. An Indian, perhaps, in his ignorance of civilized manners, affronts a lieutenant without intending to injure his feelings and not knowing that he has done so. The young gentleman, fresh from West Point, with his epaulettes bright and clean upon his shoulder and his sword by his side, whips out the boasting-iron and returns this imaginary insult by a blow or a stab, and then comes on an Indian war that costs the Government ten or fifteen or twenty million dollars. I think that the history of the past is a warning to us not again to intrust the management of Indian affairs to military hands exclusively. I shall vote, therefore, against concurring in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

I am opposed also to the bill itself to which this amendment is offered as a substitute, though I have more respect for that than I have for the substitute. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DOOLITTLE] is really fruitful in projects for governing the Indians. I do not impute to him of course any insincerity, for I believe him to be actuated by the best of motives. During the last year he brought forward a scheme for the government of all the Indian tribes as one nation, and proposed that by law they should all be subjected to the laws and jurisdiction of the United States, that they should have one or more legislative bodies.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. My friend will allow me to call his attention to the fact that it was in relation to the organization of the so-called Indian Territory, and giving them a territorial government, and then inducing the civilized tribes of the neighboring States to go into that Territory. That was the project.

Mr. HOWARD. I may be in error as to the mere details of the Senator's plans; but I know the general idea of the Senator was to subject all the Indians of the United States to the power and jurisdiction of the United States, and to give them a Governor to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and a Legislature to be chosen by Indian ballots.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. In that Territory.

Mr. HOWARD. In the Indian Territory says the Senator. Well, grant you, in the Indian Territory; but that Territory includes a very large proportion of the Indian population. It was not the less objectionable, however, for being confined to that locality which he mentioned. It was the principle which I then combated, and to which I am still opposed. I do not believe that the Congress of the United States have any such power under the Constitution to govern the Indian tribes upon our continent by means of Federal legislation and Federal officers and Federal laws. The Constitution recognizes them as independent nations, the owners of the soil itself, of the continent originally, and never to be divested of that ownership except by an honest and a fair treaty. Congress has power to regulate the intercourse of the United States, the commerce of the people of the United States, with the Indian tribes. That power is granted to Congress in almost exactly the same terms which are used to convey the power to regulate foreign commerce, showing that the Indian tribes are as tribes free and independent nations, and that the United States have no right to interfere to control them, or govern them, except the simple right of being the first purchasers of the Indian title to lands.

But, Mr. President, I will go no further in that direction. This bill before us as it passed the Senate in March last, and which the honorable Senator from Wisconsin foresees is to be the great means of preventing the recurrence of Indian wars, is certainly very plausible upon its face, and if I believed as firmly and sincerely as the Senator seems to do that it would effect that great object I should be very much inclined to support it; for it is desirable for us to prevent collision with the Indians; but I do not believe that the appointment of these five boards of inspectors will have that effect. I do not see how Indian wars are to be averted by the presence of these boards of commissioners among them. I rather look to see these boards of commissioners acting as a sort of ambulatory commission, missionaries going about in their districts, and inspecting this place and that place and the other, visiting the residences of Indian agents, perhaps the wigwams of the Indians themselves, often more respectable places than the residences of the agents undoubtedly, and exercising professedly a high tutelary influence over the Indians, but which in itself is of no value at all. I fear that will be the result, and I cannot adopt the convictions which seem to animate the Senator from Wisconsin.

There are to be five boards of inspectors according to this bill, which are to consist of three commissioners, two of the board to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and each of those two to receive a salary at the rate of $4,000 a year; and the third member a military gentleman of a rank not beneath that of a brigadier general, and who is to receive no salary, but to be paid his traveling expenses in going about from place to place in the various Indian districts in company with the other two gentlemen of the commission. I should add that one of the other two is to be selected upon the recommendation of the various religious societies of the country.

Mr. NESMITH. The Senator from Michigan will permit me to interrupt him. He is mistaken about the rank of the military officer. The bill is silent on that subject.

Mr. HOWARD. Well, what is to be the rank of the military officer?

Mr. NESMITH. His rank is not designated by the bill.

Mr. HOWARD. He is to be an officer of the regular Army. It is not necessary that a brigadier shall be sent, I agree; a colonel, a captain, a second lieutenant may be sent as the third member of the board.

In the first place, sir, this bill requires an additional expenditure in the Indian department, for salaries, of $40,000. To that must be added the contingent expenses for travel for all these three gentlemen who are required to visit the different agencies in their Indian districts at least once a year. These five districts, therefore, are to be visited annually by the proper board of inspectors, and each board is to report to the Secretary of the Interior annually the result of those visitations. They are empowered, to be sure, to suspend from office any agent or sub-agent that may become obnoxious to them, a power which I think is rather too liable to abuse to be intrusted to such hands. I can see, it is true, occasions when the prompt exercise of the power of removal or suspension might be very necessary; but at the same time, it is in its nature an arbitrary power, and one which it is very difficult to counteract, an evil which it is very difficult indeed to correct or to remedy. They might, and undoubtedly they would, in many cases, for such is poor, frail human nature, exercise this power of suspension and removal wantonly and from interested motives. They might side with one or the other party to an Indian quarrel. That certainly would have very little tendency to put an end to the quarrel, and for my life I am not able to see the utility of these five boards of inspectors. It would be a very convenient place in which to lodge a few worn-out politicians, a few anxious ministers of the Gospel, who are to be selected upon the recommendation of religious societies. It would be a pleasant place undoubtedly for a quiet military gentleman, for certain purposes. It would enable them to survey and examine every portion of the Indian territory with a view to the selection of lands and village lots, and water lots, mines of gold and silver and precious stones, and it would enable them to afford very happy accommodations, undoubtedly, to their anxious inquiring friends about to move into the Indian country for the purpose of bettering their condition. I foresee all this in the Senator's scheme of a general inspection, and I can only say that I can see no real public advantage in it, and shall therefore vote against it. That is all I have to say on the subject at present.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Mr. President, I do not rise to remark upon the entire measure, but upon one particular feature, of placing the jurisdiction of our Indian tribes in the hands of the military. They have suffered much from the days of the Pequods and Narragansets. I have seen the military saber them close by the Rocky mountains when they were invited into camp. The right has been assumed to kill the Indian because he was a savage, and they have hunted the squaws to bring them into prison. This thing occurred in Texas after the Camanches were invited into council, and when in council they were shot down by our own men, and this made the Camanches our adversaries. Again on the banks of the Gila the same tragedy was played. It is not always, therefore, that the Indians as a general thing should feel somewhat hostile to ourselves. But, sir, I learned the use of the bow and arrow from the Oneidas in my childhood, and I have traveled among Indian tribes and I have found no nobler men than the Camanches and Arapahoes. All the Indian wants is a kind eye and careful treatment, and then he is your friend. They have, however, a very strong impression upon their minds that we are enemies of theirs. The proposition of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs is to try and conciliate them by friendship. De Soto discovered the Mississippi and he was halted on its banks and died there; but the French missionary who came by the way of Quebec and Montreal and went down the Illinois river to the mouth of the Mississippi, and who established his posts all along had no controversy with the Indians, and he was regarded as their friend. In my opinion we need rather missionary labor among these men whom we call savages, but who I have found to be noble men in the exercises of my own experience. There is no people in the world who so soon recognize a kind and gentle look as the Indians of our frontier. They know that we have driven them from their original homes in Massachusetts, in New York, and Pennsylvania, and elsewhere on the Atlantic border, driven them from plain to forest, and from forest to plain, and from mountain to valley, and driven them far away from the land of their ancestors. They know and believe that, and therefore they are careful in whom they trust. Few men are fitted to discourse with them. Fitzpatrick, who was for many years our agent with the Camanches and with the southwestern tribes conterminous, could go among all the Indian tribes and converse with them, for he had a kind eye and a strong arm, and they knew him and knew he was a man to be trusted. I think it is by kindness and by the influence of Christian principles that we may save them from utter oblivion.

They inhabited this entire continent. It was their right. They fished our rivers, they hunted our plains, they sowed our fields with corn; and we with our rude barbarianism, unequaled except by the Norsemen, have driven them from mountain to valley, from forest to plain, until now they are refugees alongside the Rocky mountains, and we are inhabiting their lands, not by virtue of right, but vi et armis.

Sir, there has been altogether a want of just consideration for the Indian. The State of New York has done better than any other State in that respect; and the remnants of the tribes of the Six Nations still continue there protected by its laws. Where elsewhere in the States of this Union are the Indian tribes protected? Nowhere. They have been moved from the fine fields which they once owned to far beyond the Mississippi; and now our people are envying them their possessions there.

The policy of this bill I think is just. It will seek to secure to those tribes to whom we owe so much homes, protection, and civilization, such as Marquette undertook to afford to them, with the fathers of the Jesuits, who first came in the valley of the Mississippi, men who did not come with the sword to cleave, but who came with the word of Him who preached the sermon on the mount.

I am altogether opposed to returning this authority to the Military Department; for I know that a lieutenant or a captain commanding a post thinks his business is, if he sees a band of Indians, to order out his men booted and saddled; and as soon as he can approach them to draw and strike and slay and slaughter. I have seen it done, and I have felt it to be an outrage upon humanity. They are not to be overcome, unless they should be exterminated in that manner; and yet the Indians of our possessions are many of them superior men. A gentleman whom I now see in my eye may know one of them to whom I am about to refer. One of the bravest and noblest men I ever saw was a Camanche chief. He had the power over my life and the lives of all the men who were surrounding me, and he knew it. He met me as gracefully as if he had been in cashmere and a prince. I gave him my hand and invited him into my tent, with his band of one hundred and fifty warriors, and I was very short-handed.

Mr. JOHNSON. You felt perfectly safe.

Mr. McDOUGALL. From the moment I saw him dismount, and that he did not dismount his men, I felt safe. A great many of these tribes are very superior, particularly those of the Aztec race, and they should be treated with consideration. To put them in the hands of a captain of infantry commanding the post at Tucson or the post at Fort Yuma, with a crowd of boys just enlisted, who do not know anything more than to take up their arms and obey orders, is an outrage upon that race, and perhaps upon men quite as well qualified to be civilized as ourselves, lacking the present opportunity.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, I had intended speaking upon this subject; but I cannot proceed now, nor detain the Senate, and I will forego it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill.

Mr. CONNESS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 13, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Fessenden, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, Wade, Williams, and Wilson—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalow, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fogg, Foster, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Patterson, Poland, Pomeroy, Riddle, Ross, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, and Yates—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cattell, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Guthrie, Norton, Nye, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, and Willey—15.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

MAIL SERVICE TO HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a joint resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations. I will find the number of it in a moment.

Mr. CONNESS. While the Senator is finding his resolution, I think he will consent to my calling up a bill which will occupy but a very little while and which he is equally in favor of. I ask the Senate—and then I will join the Senator—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts give way to the Senator from California?

Mr. SUMNER. I do.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 603.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 603) to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands. It proposes to authorize the Postmaster General to invite proposals, by public advertisement, for the period of sixty days, in one or more newspapers published in the cities of Washington, New York, Boston, and San Francisco respectively, for mail steamship service between the port of San Francisco, in the United States, and the port of Honolulu, in the Hawaiian Islands, by means of a monthly line of first-class American sea-going steamships, to be of not less than one thousand tons, Government measurement, each, and of sufficient number to perform twelve round trips per annum between those ports; and to contract with the lowest responsible bidder for the service, for a term of not more than ten years, to begin from the day the first steamship of the line shall depart from the port of San Francisco with the mails for the Hawaiian Islands; but no bid is to be considered which shall amount to more than $100,000 for the twelve round trips per annum, nor unless it be from a citizen or citizens of the United States, and accompanied by an offer of good and sufficient sureties (also citizens of the United States) for the faithful performance of such contract.

Any contract which the Postmaster General may execute under the authority of the act is to go into effect on or before the 1st day of January, 1868, and in addition to the usual stipulations of ocean mail steamship contracts is to provide that the Government of the United States shall be entitled to have transported, free of expense, on each and every steamer, a mail agent to take charge of and arrange the mail matter, to whom suitable accommodations for that purpose shall be assigned; that in case of failure from any cause to perform any of the monthly voyages stipulated for in this contract, a pro rata deduction may be made from the compensation on account of such omitted voyage or voyages; that suitable fines and penalties may be imposed for delays and irregularities in the performance of the service; and the Postmaster General is to have the power, at any time, to determine the contract in case of its being underlet or assigned to any other party.

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads reported the bill with an amendment, to add to the first section the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That before the acceptance of the said steamships by the Postmaster General for the said service they shall be subject to inspection and survey by an experienced naval constructor, to be detailed for that purpose by the Secretary of the Navy, whose report shall be made to the Postmaster General.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill of the Senate (S. No. 220) for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels-of-war and steam machinery, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 283) for the relief of Edward St. Clair Clarke;

A bill (S. No. 513) granting a pension to Patrick Meehan; and

A bill (S. No. 602) granting a pension to Ezra B. Gordon.

PARIS EXHIBITION.

Mr. SUMNER. I now move that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 164) supplementary to other joint resolutions to enable the people of the United States to participate in the advantages of the Universal Exhibition at Paris in 1867.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have been struggling for the floor I do not know how many weeks to ask the Senate to take up some bills, which I think ought to be acted upon, that have been reported from the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman; but it seems impossible to get them before the Senate unless they are antagonized with something. Now, here is a resolution to take money out of the Treasury. I should like to get up a resolution reported by the Committee on the Judiciary to keep money in the Treasury. It is a joint resolution reported some time ago, which has passed the House of Representatives, to prevent the Treasurer from paying money to men who went into the rebellion on claims which they had against the Government as officers or otherwise before the war broke out. Military officers in our Army who deserted their posts and went into the rebellion and fought us during the war have been pardoned, as I understand, and are making applications now to get their back pay which they claimed before the war began. The House of Representatives a long time ago passed a resolution to prevent payments being made under such circumstances. That resolution was reported some time since by the Committee on the Judiciary, but I have been unable to get attention to it, and it is impossible that attention ever should be got to either that or half a dozen other bills that ought to be acted upon unless they are antagonized with something. I am not able to get the floor in the struggle in the morning hour. The first one who comes in makes a motion to take up some particular bill, and we have private bills brought up here to the crowding aside of the public business. I have no private bills that I desire to bring up. This morning we spent an hour here on a private claim. They ought to be attended to if money is due to private individuals, but I do think that the public business and that species of legislation which affects the nation ought to receive the attention of Congress.

Now, sir, I hope the Senate will not take up the joint resolution suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, which is to appropriate money to send persons to this Paris Exposition. They are to have a grand exhibition at Paris, and a great many people from this country want to visit there as I suppose, and here is a provision for a lot more of commissioners to be appointed to the Paris Exhibition, to go to Paris and have a nice time this summer. I hope that that resolution will not be taken up, but that we may proceed to take up some of these measures of which I have spoken. I shall move to proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 222, if this motion of the Senator from Massachusetts does not prevail.

Mr. SUMNER. I think it very profitless to undertake to antagonize one bill with another. Had the Senator made his motion I should not have antagonized this—

Mr. TRUMBULL. I could not make it.

Mr. SUMNER. I say had the Senator made it I should not have antagonized the resolution which I have charge of with his. And let me suggest to the Senator that he is unfair when he alludes to this as interesting only to private individuals. This concerns public interests just as much as the resolution of the Senator. The Senator says his resolution is not to take money from the Treasury, but if I understood him to put money into the Treasury.

Mr. TRUMBULL. To keep it there.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well; to keep it there. The resolution which I have in charge now may not be directly to put money into the Treasury of the country, but it is to put money into the pockets of the people of this country by enriching their resources, their knowledge of science, and quickening their intelligence. It is not a resolution to facilitate any visits to Europe nor to promote in any way private indulgence; but it is a resolution to enable the scientific and mineral and productive resources of our country to be exhibited in Europe. That is the character of the resolution. It is a resolution that has been carefully considered and matured in the Committee on Foreign Relations, who have had before them gentlemen from New York, and who have given several days attention to it. It is no hasty production; but it is, if I may say so, the well-ripened fruit of the best care and knowledge of the committee. I hope there will be no question about taking it up.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 164) supplementary to other joint resolutions to enable the people of the United States to participate in the advantages of the Universal Exhibition at Paris in 1867, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides:

1. That the commission of the United States at the Universal Exhibition to be held at Paris in the year 1867 shall consist of the commissioner general and honorary commissioner, whose appointment was approved by the joint resolution of January 22, 1866; also of the thirty commissioners whose appointment was provided for by the joint resolution of July 5, 1866, and of twenty commissioners whose appointment is hereinafter provided for.

2. That the commissioner general shall be the president of the commission thus constituted, with a vote on all questions that may arise.

3. That the commission shall meet at Paris as early as possible before the opening of the Exhibition upon the call of the commissioner general, and, when properly organized, shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for efficient action, with power to elect a vice president from their own number, who, in the absence of the commissioner general, shall preside at all meetings of the commission, and to appoint committees and chairmen of groups.

4. That the commission may designate additional persons, not exceeding twenty in number, being citizens of the United States, known to be skilled in any branch of industry or art, who are hereby authorized to attend the Exhibition in behalf of the United States as honorary commissioners.

5. That the commission may employ a secretary and clerks for the commission, the necessary scientific assistants and draughtsmen, and may engage suitable rooms for the commission.

6. That no commissioner shall act as agent for the show or sale of any article at the Exhibition, or be interested, directly or indirectly, in any profits from any such article.

The second section of the resolution makes the following appropriations:

For additional freights from New York to Havre, $15,000.

For transportation and freight from Havre to Paris, $10,000.

For return freight of articles owned by the United States or lent to the Government by individuals, $10,000.

For marine and fire insurance on the articles thus lent, $3,000.

For additional steam-power at Paris, in the "palace" and the "annex," or supplemental building, and in grounds adjacent, $10,000.

For the exhibition of machines, agricultural and other, and for the erection of buildings to illustrate the education and agriculture of the United States, $15,000.

For the necessary expense of collecting, classifying, labeling, and packing mineralogical and metallurgical specimens, to complete the exhibition of the mineral wealth of the United States, $5,000.

For the necessary expense of labors and extra service in the offices at Paris and New York, $5,000.

For the expenses of a secretary, clerks, scientific assistants and draughtsmen, rooms, and other incidental expenses of the commission, $20,000.

By the third section it is to be the duty of the general agent at New York and of the commissioner general at Paris to transmit to Congress, through the Department of State, a detailed statement of the manner in which the expenditures herein authorized are made by them respectively.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what amount of money was appropriated for this purpose at the last session of Congress?

Mr. SUMNER. About one hundred and fifty-six thousand dollars; and this appropriates $93,000.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Making about two hundred and fifty thousand dollars in all. I do not think such a sum of money is necessary for this business. I cannot conceive it possible—a quarter of a million of dollars! Unless it can be shown to be necessary I shall not vote for it.

Mr. McDUGALL. This bill proposes a congress of fifty-one from America to sit at the Paris Exposition, with their expenses going and coming and other expenses there to be provided for by the Government. The appropriation made at the last session of Congress ought to have been abundantly sufficient for the purpose. I think it is a perfect absurdity to be sending these commissioners and a commissioner general to Paris to attend to this matter. They are to sit in council there and determine how our products are to be presented. Sir, there will there be present from this country men of science, men of art, men who go to exhibit their productions, and it does not require this extra, superlative legislation.

Mr. SUMNER. With regard to the necessity of this appropriation I shall content myself with a single remark. It was most carefully canvassed by the committee. Never has any measure with which I have been associated been more carefully considered. There is no single item which is mentioned in this resolution which was not adopted after the most conscientious consideration. If Senators are of opinion that the United States should abdicate the position it has already begun to assume in this great industrial congress, they should vote against this resolution; but I believe they will not be of that opinion. From every part of the country public opinion is declaring in its favor. Only a day or two ago resolutions from the Legislature of Wisconsin were presented and printed by order of the Senate asking these appropriations. They are needed in order to exhibit to Europe the mineral, the cereal, and the agricultural resources of our country. They are needed also to exhibit what we have done in mechanics and the arts. We need also scientific representatives there, who shall bring back their observations of the various countries of Europe there assembled. But, sir, I will not say another word; I am anxious to have the vote taken.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to offer a little amendment, to which I suppose the Senator from Massachusetts will consent. It is to insert after the words "United States," in the eighteenth line, page 3, the words "and for the collection of specimens of agricultural productions, under the joint resolution for that purpose passed at the present session."

Mr. SUMNER. I accept that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts whether he expects this to be an end of the appropriations that will be asked for this purpose? He asks the Senate now if we are going to back out of what we have done. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts, who urged this matter originally upon the Senate, if he notified the country at that time that he would require a quarter of a million dollars, and if, on the other hand, he did not notify the country that the expense would be very small? I should like to know now, whether, when we meet in the next Congress, another quarter of a million dollars will not have to be appropriated for this same purpose; or whether there is the least expectation on the part of the Senator from Massachusetts that this is to be the end of these appropriations? I do not expect it to be. I look upon it as the most unwarrantable appropriation of the people's money that has been made since I have been in Congress. I shall content myself with voting against it.

I do not wish to take up time, but I have no expectation that this is the end of it, and I have no belief that the people of this country expected, when the Senator from Massachusetts started this matter, that it was to take a quarter of a million dollars to pay the expenses of agents and others in Europe in connection with this exhibition.

Mr. SUMNER. I am not aware that I have ever given any notification one way or the other that money would be demanded or would not be demanded. I was never in a position to express any opinion on that question. At each stage of this measure I have acted according to the information before me and the necessities of the hour. If hereafter, at some subsequent stage, it should seem important to the interests of the country that further appropriations should be made, I should not object, but it would be the duty of the Senate to consider it at that time; all I ask now is that the Senate shall act on the question before it. Let it not wander under the lead of the Senator from Illinois into the future; when that comes let us deal with it in the light of the future. I only ask you now to deal with the question before you.

I have already said that these appropriations are simply for the object proposed. According to all the evidence before the committee, much more was needed to the adequate representation of the resources of our country at that great exhibition. But the committee, conscientiously disposed to every possible economy, cut every item down, and you have the result in what I may call the very minimum with which our representation can be adequately conducted at Paris. The question therefore is, are you disposed to proceed with this business or abandon it? If you wish to abandon it, then you will vote against this joint resolution. But unless you are ready to adopt that extreme course, I think you will be constrained to comply with the conclusions of the committee. The committee represent the Senate; they have at heart the interests of the Senate. There are no personal or private interests represented in this joint resolution. The committee had nothing in view except the public welfare, and I believe they consulted in that regard economy as well as ever any committee of this body did.

Mr. McDUGALL. If I remember well, at the last exhibition at Paris there was sent from Boston a commissioner, Mr. Riddle, a carriage-maker. I think he made good carriages, and rode in state in Paris. If I remember well—and I think I remember well, for about that time I was residing in this city and in office—the claims he set up, after having gone there to exhibit his own manufactures, at his own invitation, amounted to $150,000 at least. What the exact result of the action of Congress in his case was I do not now remember, though I think he obtained his appropriation. He, a single individual, going out a carriage-maker to exhibit the mode of constructing vehicles, occupied the time of the two Houses in considering his claims for months and cost the Government more than a hundred thousand dollars. If our manufacturing enterprises and our art enterprises cannot get along with what we have already afforded to them they had better withdraw.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. COWAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to say one word before the vote is taken. The great exhibition at Paris it is already settled will be the greatest of that character that has ever yet taken place. There will be congregated and brought together the practical, real, and mightiest wonders of the world. The currents of a nation's life are perhaps better represented by a nation's industries than in any other way. The degree of life that we have as a nation and its volume are to be determined by the world's representatives by the part we shall take in this great exhibition. There may have been a time when we could have decided not to appear there; but that time, I submit, has passed. We have now an interest there from which we cannot retire, which we cannot afford to yield. I hope that there can be no considerable vote in the Senate to disappoint the earnest and real expectation of all parts of the country to be thus fully represented at such a place.

Mr. WADE. When this measure was first introduced I was opposed to it both in the committee and here. I thought I foresaw that it was to be a very expensive business. But we have got to go through with it. I do not suppose now that this appropriation is more than a beginning of what we shall be involved in when everything comes to be summed up. But once embarked, having been overruled in my opposition, the first step having been taken, I see no place to back out. The dignity of the nation requires that if we go into it at all we should endeavor to make a respectable appearance. I am sorry the appropriation has to be as large as it is; but the first step was the one that cost. Being in it we have got to go through, and there is no other way that I can see; and hence I was compelled to yield to this appropriation large as it is. Even this appropriation will scarcely make us appear respectable there in my judgment. I sincerely wish we had not taken the first step; but as we have begun we must go through.

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted—yeas 26, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Conness, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Johnson, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Cowan, Davis, Hendricks, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Patterson, Riddle, Ross, Sherman, and Trumbull—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Cragin, Creswell, Doolittle, Grimes, Guthrie, Howe, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Poland, and Saulsbury—13.

So the resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The resolution was read the third time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I wish the attention of the Senate for one moment, to see how we have been drawn into this matter. The Senator from Massachusetts, when I put the question to him, did not remember whether he had given any assurance or not in regard to future appropriations. When this question was before the Senate at a former session, we then were applied to on the same point, and were inquired of by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRIMES] in what sort of an enterprise we were embarking, where it was to lead, and whether future appropriations would be necessary. In reply to that question the Senator from Massachusetts then said:

"I do not understand that there is any obligation, direct or indirect, to any future appropriation on this subject."

To-day he tells us, you have either to abandon the thing or make these appropriations. Then he did not understand that there was any obligation whatever, direct or indirect, to make future appropriations; and in that way the Senate, beguiled by the persuasive manner of the Senator, embarked in this exhibition, thought it would cost little or nothing to have the country represented abroad, to bring to notice its agricultural and mineral and scientific resources, by exhibiting them in Europe—"a very simple thing," he said. The Senate and Congress was thus beguiled and led along to make the first appropriation. Indeed, I believe originally, the first resolution did not call for any money. The proposition only fixed the salary of the general agent, and it was said to be a very small matter, involving no obligation afterward.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Like the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Very likely; I do not know whether it was the eloquence of the Senator from Massachusetts that beguiled us into that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No. The Senator from Illinois had something to do with it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir. The Senator from Illinois was not the author of the Agricultural Department. I suppose this appropriation is to go through; but I want to remind Senators of the easy way in which they have been led along to make these appropriations. The Senator from Massachusetts having started us on the road, will not give us as much of an assurance as he did a year ago. He said then that he did not think it involved any obligation to make future appropriations. But when he is asked to-day, he says he will give no assurance; if money be necessary hereafter, it must be voted. He has got us embarked in it, and I suppose we must go to the end of the voyage.

Mr. SUMNER. I am very glad to have the last assurance of the Senator from Illinois, that he is going with us to the end of the voyage. His company is always pleasant, and I am very glad to know that he is to be one of our fellow-travelers.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I spoke of the nation and not of myself particularly.

Mr. SUMNER. But I choose to include the Senator. We should not be happy if we had not him with us.

Now, with regard to the proposition to which he has called attention, the Senator misapprehends it. At the time I made the statement which he has read we had before us simply an initiatory resolution providing for an agency in New York. I had no reason at that time to suppose that the United States would embark further in this enterprise. It was several months afterward that the question assumed a larger character and that further appropriations were made. The appropriations which are made to-day are simply a continuation of those that were made subsequent to the time to which the Senator from Illinois has called attention. When I made those remarks which he has quoted I had no reason to suppose that we should go further in the business. I spoke honestly according to my impressions at the time; and now I speak with equal honesty when I decline to make any expression one way or the other as to appropriations in the future.

Mr. LANE. I have no doubt this measure is to pass; but I wish to recall the attention of the Senate for a moment to the inception and history of this whole scheme. When the subject was first introduced into the Senate it was stated that the French Emperor had invited this country and other countries to participate in this exhibition. It was then said that it would cost our Government nothing. When we were next called upon to act on the subject, it was said that it would cost a certain amount to carry it through; and now a further and larger amount is asked for. I opposed it from the beginning, believing that no public good would result from it. I believe so now, and I will venture to indulge in a prophecy: I say this country will not get out of the Paris Exhibition under $5,000,000 of expense, and the whole thing from beginning to end is, in my opinion, a grand humbug. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. SUMNER. I suggest that the yeas and nays have been taken once.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let us have them taken again.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Conness, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Harris, Henderson, Johnson, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Davis, Hendricks, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Patterson, Ross, Sherman, and Trumbull—10.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cattell, Chandler, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Fogg, Grimes, Guthrie, Howard, Howe, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Poland, Riddle, and Saulsbury—16.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BROWN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Foster, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, McDougall, Morrill, Norton, Patterson, Ramsey, Sprague, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Williams, and Yates—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Cattell, Conness, Dixon, Fessenden, Fogg, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Poland, Pomeroy, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, Willey, and Wilson—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Nesmith, Nye, Riddle, and Saulsbury—11.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 2, 1867.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON, made the following prayer:

Almighty and most merciful God, through Jesus Christ, our crucified and risen Lord, High Priest and Advocate of his people, we implore Thy blessing for this last day of the week; that thou wilt enable all these public men so to close up the labors of the week that they shall not fear to meet the record of it at Thy judgment bar. Lord be with them individually, and bless them in their private concerns as well as in their public relations. Remember all their friends and households. May the benediction of God rest on all those places dear to their hearts to-day. And we implore Thy blessing upon the Thirty-Ninth Congress in these the last days of its existence. As Thou hast, O Lord! on many occasions, manifested Thyself, as we believe, in its behalf, giving wisdom and guidance in difficult places, so we beseech Thee to enable these legislators so to close up the work that those who come after them may find no reason for pulling down and removing any portion of the structure, but may find a work well begun and well devised that they may easily finish, and so place the country on stable foundations of peace.

Will the Lord bless all our rulers to-day, and may all in the land receive from our Heavenly Father a father's benediction, wide as the wants and varied as the necessities of the people may be.

May we all so live that at the last we may be accepted of Thee through Jesus Christ, our Lord and Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 896, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1867, and asked a further conference on the remaining points of disagreement between the two Houses.

MEMBER FROM NEBRASKA.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to have the member from the State of Nebraska sworn in. The proclamation of the President declaring the State of Nebraska in the Union has been published this morning in the official organ. I send the credentials of the member-elect to the Chair, and ask that he be sworn in.

Mr. T. M. MARQUETTE, member-elect from the State of Nebraska, appeared, and having taken the oath to support the Constitution, and the oath prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862, took his seat.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. MILLER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas ten of the States lately in rebellion, to wit: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas, Mississippi, and Virginia, have through their Legislatures refused to ratify the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress at their first session, and known as article fourteen; Therefore,

Resolved, 1. That said amendments are deemed necessary for the preservation of the Union, and required in order to guaranty to every State a republican form of government.

2. That no State lately in rebellion against the Government of the United States ought to have a representation on this floor as long as such State declines the ratification of said amendment.

3. That said amendments are offering to the late rebellious States terms precedent to the admission of representation more conciliatory than they had a right to expect, and if they continue to refuse to ratify the same conditions more stringent ought to be required.

4. That the doctrine of universal amnesty to those who endeavored in the late bloody conflict to dismember this Republic ought to be discarded by every loyal patriot.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that one clause of the resolution embodies a principle in regard to representation, and therefore the resolution is referred, under the rule, to the joint Committee on Reconstruction without debate.

Mr. LE BLOND. I move to insert "Massachusetts," as she has also refused to ratify the constitutional amendment.

The SPEAKER. The resolution has gone to the Committee on Reconstruction.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KASSON, from a committee of conference, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1039) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1868, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out the words "for first installment of annuity;" and insert "for first of payments to be made during the pleasure of Congress," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from the second amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out the words "for first installment of annuity" and insert "for first of payments to be made during the pleasure of Congress," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from the third amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendments: strike out the words "Secretary of the Interior" and insert "President;" strike out the word "fifteen" and insert the word "ten," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the fifth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, striking out the word "ten" and inserting the word "five," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the sixth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendment: add at the end of the section the following proviso: "Provided, That the Attorney General of the United States shall be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire into the condition of the funds held in trust by the United States for said tribes and for all other tribes of Indians, and what remedy exists for the security of the United States in respect to the non-paying stock so held, the value thereof, what stocks are non-paying, and what proceedings should be taken for the security of the United States in respect to the same, and report to Congress on the first Monday of December next," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the seventh amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out the words "for first installment of annuity" and insert in lieu thereof the words "for first payments to be made during the pleasure of Congress," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its tenth amendment.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the eleventh amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out the word "Tama," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Tama," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the twelfth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows: strike out the words "Secretary of the Interior" and insert in lieu thereof the word "President;" strike out the word "seventy," and insert in lieu thereof the words "thirty-five," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the twentieth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the twenty-sixth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: strike out the words "seven thousand and two," and insert in lieu thereof the words "three thousand and six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the twenty-eighth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: add at the end of the following words:

"Except in case of extreme necessity, the facts of which shall be certified to the Secretary of War by the officer commanding that military district."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its thirty-second amendment.

That the Senate recede from its thirty-third amendment.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the thirty-fourth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with the following amendment: strike out all after the enacting clause of said House amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the sum hereinbefore appropriated to the Miamis of Indians, or which shall hereafter be appropriated to them, shall only be paid to such persons as may be, upon the opinion of the Attorney General, legally entitled to the same under the provisions of the treaty with said Indians of June 5, 1834," and Senate amendments thereto, regardless of any subsequent legislation.

JOHN B. HENDERSON,
GEORGE H. WILLIAMS,
T. O. HOWE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The question was upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. KASSON. Upon that question I call the previous question.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion for a time, and explain to the House the effect of those amendments to which the conferees on the part of the House have agreed.

Mr. KASSON. I can explain any specific amendment to which the gentleman may call my attention. I do not think it worth while at this late hour of the session to explain all the amendments.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I want to know what amendments making appropriations put on by the Senate have been agreed to by the conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. KASSON. Several of the amendments of the Senate made appropriations for certain Indian tribes with whom treaties have been made, but which treaties are not yet ratified by the Senate "for the first of annuities," &c. I am very glad to be able to State to the House that there seems now to be a disposition in the Senate to abandon the "treaty payments;" and as the first step in that direction an agreement was made to change the language employed, while they continue to provide for the immediate wants of these Indians and prevent the disappointment which would otherwise result to them, as they regard these unratified treaties as already concluded. The form of appropriation is changed from "for first installment of annuity" to "for first of payments to be made during the pleasure of Congress." That leaves it entirely in the control of Congress hereafter from year to year to regulate the amount and manner of distribution. I consider it a very great point gained.

Mr. SCOFIELD. What is the total amount of Senate appropriations to which the conferees on the part of the House have agreed?

Mr. KASSON. I have not figured it up, but I should suppose it might be some three or four hundred thousand dollars; perhaps not quite so much.

The previous question was then seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was upon agreeing to the report; and upon being taken, it was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF THE TARIFF.

Mr. ALLEY. I again ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution to amend section five of an act entitled "An act to increase duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864.

The joint resolution was as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the paragraph of section five of an act entitled "An act to increase duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, as follows, to wit: "On lastings, mohair cloth, silk twist, or other manufactured cloth woven or made in patterns of such size, shape, and form, or cut in such manner as to be fit for shoes, slippers, boots, booties, gaiters, and buttons, exclusively, not combined with India rubber, ten per cent. ad valorem," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. FINCK. I object.

Mr. ALLEY. Then I must move a suspension of the rules, and I pledge myself beforehand—

Mr. FINCK. I object to debate.

The question was on the motion that the rules be suspended.

Mr. FINCK. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ANCONA. I rise to a question of order. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. During the last ten days of the session a motion to suspend the rules is at any time in order when a gentleman can obtain the floor to make it.

Mr. FINCK. If this resolution is introduced under a suspension of the rules will it then be open to amendment, so as to put on other articles besides those enumerated in the joint resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide that question when it shall come up. The joint resolution if introduced will be open to any amendment which may be germane to it.

Mr. ALLEY. If the rules are suspended I suppose I will have the control of the joint resolution, and I pledge myself that no advantage whatever of that kind shall be taken of it. And I also say further that this is a resolution which every gentleman in the House will agree to if he understands it.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Is a report of a committee of conference now in order?

The SPEAKER. A report from a committee of conference is always in order, even if a member has the floor upon another subject.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FARNSWORTH submitted the following privileged report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 896) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1868, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from their amendments Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 8, 10, and 11.

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 9, 18, 28, 35, 45, and 47, and agree to the same.

That the House of Representatives recede from their amendment to the forty-sixth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

The committee of conference further report that they are unable to agree upon the amendments Nos. 44, 48, and 50.

J. F. FARNSWORTH,
F. E. WOODBRIDGE,
C. A. ELDRIDGE,
Managers on the part of the House.
JOHN SHERMAN,
LUKE P. POLAND,
C. R. BUCKALEW,

Mr. SPALDING. I should like to know what they recede from.

Mr. STEVENS. I think this is wholly irregular. I do not think a conference committee can divide its report. Such a thing is not in accordance with the parliamentary law. Although it has once or twice been departed from under great pressure in this House, still it is inaugurating a new and vicious system, which I hope will not be allowed. I ask whether ever, though this report be adopted, this bill could be sent to the President?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will respond to gentleman's inquiry. He understands the committee of conference reports agreement in some and disagreement in other amendments.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. We disagree only in three amendments.

The SPEAKER. There are two cases, and only two cases, within the recollection of the Chair where this has been allowed, one in the Twenty-Ninth Congress and one in the Thirty-Fourth Congress, when Hon. Mr. BAXES, now a member of this House, was Speaker. In the latter case the two Houses agreed on all subjects of disagreement on the Army bill except in reference to the amendment of the House, that no portion of the appropriations should be used for the enforcement of certain so-called laws of the Territory of Kansas. The House insisted and the Senate refused to recede from its disagreement. After three conferences they failed to agree. They reported agreement in all but this one amendment, and a committee of conference was appointed upon that amendment; but Congress adjourned failing to agree, and the bill was lost. Members returning to their homes were arrested by the proclamation of President Pierce, calling them to meet in extra session, at which session the bill finally passed, the House receding from their disagreement.

Mr. BANKS. That is undoubtedly true; but a conference report, agreeing in part and disagreeing in part, does not settle the matter. I agree with the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The bill would not be passed by the adoption of this report.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I ask the Speaker to appoint another committee of conference.

Mr. STEVENS. There was a committee of conference which agreed to every item, except two, now disagreed to, and that committee agreed differently from what this one does. But we did not think it right to submit a partial report. We thought, sir, that could not be done. I knew there were one or two instances where it had been done; but the bills never came to be laws. I hope the House will reject the report, and that another committee of conference will be appointed.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The three points on which the committee failed to agree are the ones I will state. One was the amendment of the Senate increasing the salary of the judges of the United States; another the section of the House bill providing for paying the clerks and employes of the House of Representatives according to various resolutions adopted by the House, to which the Senate refuses to agree; and the third an amendment of the Senate increasing the salaries of some of their employes. It was supposed by the committee they had a right to agree in some and disagree in others. Before making the report I inquired of a gentleman, supposed to be a good parliamentarian, whether this was admissible, and he said it was.

Acting upon the supposition that it was correct practice to bring the two Houses in the next conference as near together as possible by narrowing down the labors of the committees to three points only, it seemed to us, if the House and Senate should concur in the report of the committee as to all the other disagreements it would facilitate action upon the subject if we made a report as far as we had gone. So far as I am concerned I have no wish in regard to the acceptance of the report. The House can do as it pleases in regard to it. If the report made by the committee of conference accords with the views of the House so far as we have agreed, I see no impropriety in the House agreeing to the report, and thus narrowing the matter down.

Mr. CONKLING. I would like to make an inquiry. Do we understand that the conference committee did agree entirely as to the salary of judges, or that they agreed as to some of the salaries and differed as to the rest?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. They came to an agreement upon this subject.

The three questions that I have mentioned, namely, the salaries of the judges the pay of employes of the House, and the increased pay of some of the employes of the Senate, are the remaining questions upon which the two Houses are at loggerheads. We agree as to all others.

I will state that amendment No. 9, from which the committee of the House recedes by this report, is in regard to the Congressional Globe. We agreed to concur in the Senate amendment. It will be recollected that the House adopted a provision giving notice to the Globe that we would terminate the contract to receive complete sets of the Globe for every new member of the House and Senate after the Fortieth Congress. In the opinion of the Senate it was necessary, in order to enable Congress to terminate its contract for publishing the debates, that a like notice should be given; therefore the Senate put in a provision giving the Globe notice that it would terminate the contract for publishing the proceedings of Congress as well as for supplying new members with complete sets of the Globe at the expiration of the Fortieth Congress, thus leaving Congress at liberty if it can make a better bargain, either with the Globe or any other publishing-house, or if it can do it cheaper at the Government Printing Office, to do so. It is simply giving the required notice and relieving ourselves from the obligation of continuing the publication.

The next amendment from which the House receded is the amendment of the Senate providing $50,000 to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to employ temporary clerks. The committee were satisfied, from investigating the subject, that it was necessary to put in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, as we had done in the case of the Postmaster General and some other heads of the Departments, a sum sufficient to enable him from time to time to employ temporary clerks. Frequently the House of Representatives calls upon the Secretary for information which it requires a number of extra clerks to furnish, and unless he has this sum he cannot do it.

The twenty-eighth amendment, from which the committee of the House receded, is an amendment of the Senate in reference to the Supreme Court, which provides that in case the Supreme Court directs its reporter at any time to publish a second volume he shall be allowed therefor $1,500. He is allowed now by law $2,500 for a single volume. If he is directed to publish the second volume he is to be allowed, upon depositing the necessary number of copies with the Secretary of War, $1,500 additional.

The thirty-fifth amendment from which the committee of the House receded is an amendment of the Senate increasing by some $300 the appropriation to pay the policemen employed at the President's House, which seemed to be right and proper. It is a very small matter.

The forty-fifth amendment from which we receded is an amendment of the Senate striking out the third section of the bill, which provides that parties, whether white or black, may testify in suits against the Government of the United States. It seemed to us very proper that parties in suits against the United States in the Court of Claims should not be permitted themselves to be witnesses, whether white or black. Therefore we concurred in the amendment of the Senate. The effect of the report is to prevent parties being witnesses where there is no party to testify against them. In case of suits against the Government the Government can testify only by its agents who are competent witnesses for either party.

The only remaining amendment from which the committee of the House receded is an amendment of the Senate authorizing the employment of additional clerks in the Pension Office. I have no doubt that the House will very willingly accede to that. I think every member of the House is well aware that the business of that bureau is very far in arrear. It is almost impossible for a widow to get her pension papers through under twelve months.

These are all the amendments from which we receded. The Senate recede from a larger number.

Mr. CONKLING. If the gentleman will allow me, in the hope of relieving the House from this dilemma, and believing as I do that we can agree as to all the amendments, I will move that the House disagree to this report, and that a further conference on the part of the House be appointed. I say I believe the two Houses can agree in spite of the fact that I was on one of these committees which failed to agree.

Mr. HALE. I hope the chairman of the committee will give us a statement as to what amendments the committee on the part of the Senate disagreed to.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will not consent to any increase of compensation to the present reporter of the Supreme Court for the reason that he is unfit for the position he now holds. I know nothing personally of the present reporter of the Supreme Court, but I do know that in the case of Havemyer vs. Iowa county, which originated in our State, he has taken occasion to indulge in a gratuitous and unfounded statement insulting to the judges of the supreme court of our State, and through them to the judges of other States where they are elected by the people. He has inserted in the report of that case a statement or an intimation that our judges were influenced to make the decision they did by a desire to court popular favor. I pronounce the statement to be absolutely false, without the slightest foundation in truth. And, sir, no man who had the slightest regard for propriety, or the least regard for what was becoming and decent in the discharge of his duties as reporter, would have indulged in such an intimation. He seems to have an irrepressible desire to write himself down a blackguard in the reports of our highest judicial tribunal. Our judges need no defense at my hands, for every one who has any knowledge on the subject will agree with me when I assert that the judges of our supreme court are as little obnoxious to the charge brought against them by this reporter as the judges of any State in the Union, without any exception.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I think I will call the previous question. It will amount to the same as the other proposition if the House refuses to adopt the report.

Mr. CONKLING. I appeal to the gentleman to allow me a moment. Every gentleman will see that should a future conference be appointed the hope of agreeing rests very largely upon the fact that the committee may take all the subjects of concession and compromise into consideration. If the House should so vote that the next conference committee is concluded with regard to every amendment except those in reference to which the two committees have already failed to agree, it is very improbable that a future committee on the part of this House will be able to agree with a committee on the part of the Senate. But if all these amendments are left to be acted upon together as a subject of concession, if I may so say, it is very likely they will agree. Therefore I ask the gentleman, both with a view of reaching the result desired and of economizing time, to allow the House to vote upon the question of non-concurrence in this report and also of appointing a further conference committee.

Looking at the statute I am satisfied that a portion, if not all of the preceding conferees, acted under a misimpression with regard to the salary of the reporter. I find that the act of 1850, which has not been amended since, gives to the reporter additional compensation for an additional volume, and all the compensation he should have. Therefore, it is proper, with regard to this and everything else, that the third conference committee shall act in the light of all the facts as they shall reveal themselves at the time, and I trust the gentleman will allow a vote to be taken on the motion to disagree to the report, and appoint another committee, which shall be so circumstanced that the two committees will have all the opportunity that we can properly give them to come to an agreement.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire to say in reply that, personally, I care nothing about this except to facilitate business. But this conference committee has experienced a great deal of difficulty in coming to an agreement as far as we did. We have labored pretty faithfully for nearly two days. After the first committee had left the matter all open, and it seemed to us it would very much narrow the labors of the next committee if they should be reduced to three points of disagreement only, provided the two Houses will accept the report.

Mr. SPALDING. How many points of difference were there altogether?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Some thirty or forty.

Mr. SPALDING. And they are reduced to three.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. They are.

Mr. SPALDING. I understand the Senate has agreed to the report.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It has.

Mr. CONKLING. That is precisely the reason why we ought to disagree and appoint another committee of conference.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Because the Senate has agreed?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It so happens that the Senate is obliged to act upon the matter first according to the rule. I suppose if the Senate had disagreed we would insist upon another committee. That is the only way we could get it before us, to let the Senate act upon it first.

Mr. CONKLING. I would like to make a remark in answer to what the gentleman has stated. He is not correctly informed when he says the other committee left this matter all open. On the contrary, we came much nearer to an agreement than the present committee. With reference especially to one amendment, the last to which the gentleman referred, the committee did practically agree; for although an agreement was not embodied in form we saw that as to that we could agree. I refer to the compensation of employes in the other House. So instead of leaving the matter open we came much nearer to an agreement than the present committee.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HALE. I ask the gentleman from Illinois whether he proposes before he takes his seat to give a statement of the different amendments from which the Senate recedes. If not,

I wish to ask some questions in regard to one or two of those amendments.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I do not propose to go through with a statement of all of them. They are very numerous.

Mr. HALE. Then the gentleman will allow me to ask him a question in regard to one or two of them. The gentleman has already stated that the committee recommend that the House recede in regard to the provision for terminating the contract with the Congressional Globe. I wish to ask whether the report proposes that the Senate recede from those amendments striking out the appropriations for the Globe for the coming Congress.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Yes, sir; we propose that the Senate recede from all those.

Mr. HALE. Then the effect of the action agreed upon by the committee is merely to give the notice terminating the contract?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Yes, sir. We propose that the Senate recede from all its amendments with reference to the Globe, except one, leaving the appropriations for the Globe stand just as they went from the House.

I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER.]

Mr. THAYER. I wish to say a word to correct what I think is an erroneous impression on the part of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] in regard to the amendment relating to the compensation of the reporter of the Supreme Court. The gentleman seems to be under the impression that there is some general provision of law authorizing this compensation where the reporter is ordered by the court to issue an extra volume. That is not a correct impression. There is no such general law. There have been at times various acts passed authorizing an extra appropriation where extra volumes were ordered by the Supreme Court; but those provisions related to the particular instances specified. There is no general provision of law authorizing this compensation.

The reporter will be obliged by the court to print an extra volume during the present year and to furnish to the Interior Department three hundred copies of this extra volume. It is manifest that he cannot do this at his own expense, upon the ordinary compensation allowed him by existing law. In my judgment simple justice requires that the compensation which was fixed in this bill shall be allotted to this office.

ABSENCE OF TERRITORIAL OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that yesterday a bill entitled "An act to prevent the absence of territorial officers from their official duties," which has not been passed by the House, but referred to the Committee on the Territories, was erroneously enrolled. The error was discovered by the Speaker, but not till the bill had gone to the Senate. If there be no objection, a message will be sent to the Senate requesting the return of the bill.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (H. R. No. 588) for the relief of William H. Webb, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 1161) to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue; had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed Messrs. FESSENDEN, MORGAN, and HENDRICKS, as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1134) declaring and fixing the rights of volunteers as a part of the Army.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. WOODBRIDGE.]

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I am not very particular whether the House agree to the report of the committee of conference or disagree to it and send the whole matter to a new committee. It will be recollected, however, that we have but very little time between this and the close of the session. This is a very long bill as well as a very important one, and considerable time will be required for its engrossment. As a committee, we spent in faithful work a large portion of two days before we arrived at the agreements which are stated in this report. It seemed to us important that we should bring the two Houses together as far as we could; that when we had relieved the bill from as many disagreements as possible, another committee of conference, having fewer questions before them, could probably arrive more expeditiously at some agreement which might be partially, if not entirely satisfactory.

The only points of difference now remaining are three in number. One relates to the payment of the employés of this House; the second relates to the payment of the employés of the Senate; and the other has reference to the proposed increase in the salaries of the judges of the United States. Upon the first two questions it is very likely an agreement might have been had; but the members of the committee on the part of the House did not deem it proper for them to agree to the demands of the Senate in relation to the payment of our own employés; and upon that we split permanently. The question now is whether the numerous matters on which the two Houses have differed shall be reopened, or whether the differences shall be reconciled so far as the committee have been able to reconcile them. I think it better that this report should be accepted and that the three remaining matters of difference should be referred to a new committee of conference.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.]

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, the question referred to a committee of conference is a single question, and I do not think any committee has the right to divide it. But even if it be allowable under parliamentary law, as I think it is not, that the question referred to such a committee shall be divided, certainly it is not good policy for the House to permit a division, because one matter of disagreement may help to settle another by giving room for mutual concessions. If a new conference be had upon all the disagreeing votes, the labors of the committee, whose report has just been presented, would not go for naught, because the record of its action will go before the new committee. If the new committee should be disposed to agree to the same propositions of settlement the points of disagreement to that extent would be settled, and the committee could at once proceed to the reconciliation of those questions remaining undetermined; therefore no time would be lost; and by this course we should conform to the strict parliamentary rule that the question submitted to a committee of conference is a single question, and cannot be divided by the committee.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I have already stated that, in the opinion of the committee, the adoption of this report will facilitate an agreement between the two Houses, and help to insure the passage of the bill. It can be at once enrolled, with the exception of the three sections on which there is still a disagreement. I call the previous question.

Mr. CONKLING. I rise to a point of order. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether, if the previous question be not seconded, it will then be in order for me to enter a motion to disagree to the report and appoint a committee of conference?

The SPEAKER. It will.

On seconding the call for the previous question, there were—ayes 31, noes 67.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. CONKLING. I now move that the House disagree to the report of the committee of conference and ask the appointment of another committee of conference.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a question of order. Does this motion take precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FARNSWORTH,] that the House agree to the report?

The SPEAKER. If the report of the committee of conference proposed to settle all disagreements and pass the bill, the motion to agree to the report would have priority; but as the report leaves the question still open, the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] is in order.

Mr. CONKLING. I demand the previous question.

Mr. CHANLER. If the motion of my colleague fails, will not the effect be that the House recedes?

The SPEAKER. The question will then recur on the motion to agree to the report.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof Mr. CONKLING's motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes eighty-five, noes not counted.

The SPEAKER appointed as managers on the new committee of conference on the part of the House Mr. CONKLING, Mr. SCHENCK, and Mr. McCULLOUGH.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 470) to authorize the change of a name;

An act (S. No. 477) to amend an act entitled "An act to continue, alter, and amend the charter of the city of Washington," approved May 17, 1848;

An act (S. No. 534) to provide for the allotment of the members of the Supreme Court among the circuits, and for the appointment of a marshal for the Supreme Court;

An act (S. No. 589) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Theological Institute," and to define and extend the powers of the same;

An act (S. No. 529) to incorporate the Howard University in the District of Columbia;

An act (S. No. 570) extending the time for the completion of certain street railways;

An act (S. No. 128) authorizing limited partnerships in the District of Columbia;

An act (S. No. 493) supplemental to an act to establish the Treasury Department, approved September 2, 1789;

An act (S. No. 264) to grant certain privileges to the Alexandria, Washington, and Georgetown Railroad Company in the District of Columbia; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 160) for the relief of Dempsey Reece, of Indiana.

AMENDMENT OF THE TARIFF.

The question then recurred on Mr. ALLEY's motion, to suspend the rules to allow him to introduce the following joint resolution:

Joint resolution to amend section five of an act entitled "An act to increase duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the paragraph of section five of an act entitled "An act to increase duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, as follows, to wit: "On lastings, mohair cloth, silk twist, wool, or other manufactured cloth woven or made in patterns of such size, shape, and form, or cut in such manner as to be fit for shoes, slippers, booties, gaiters, and buttons exclusively, not combined with India-rubber, ten per cent. ad valorem," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. ALLEY. In case the rules be suspended will I not retain control of the matter?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman; but the House will have the control of the resolution.

Mr. ALLEY. If any attempt of unfairness be made I pledge myself to withdraw the resolution.

Mr. LE BLOND. Can the gentleman withdraw it?

The SPEAKER. Not without consent of the House?

Mr. LE BLOND. Then the House might attach the tariff bill to it.

The SPEAKER. Not by a majority vote.

Mr. ALLEY. This resolution passed both Houses unanimously. It has received the approval of the Committee of Ways and Means here and the Committee on Finance in the Senate. If I had two minutes to explain it I am sure it would not be objected to.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. ALLEY. It is merely to prevent frauds upon the revenue.

Mr. LE BLOND demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 77, nays 70, not voting 44; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomall, Buckland, Cobb, Conkling, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnell, Eckley, Farquhar, Ferry, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Washburne, Winfield, Woodbridge, and Wright—44.

So (two thirds not voting in the affirmative) the House refused to suspend the rules.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS FOR SOLDIERS.

Mr. DEMING, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a joint resolution for the relief of soldiers who are entitled to artificial limbs; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that out of any appropriations made, or that hereafter may be made, for supplying soldiers who have served in the late rebellion with artificial limbs, the Secretary of War shall be authorized to pay to said soldiers, at their option, an amount of money equivalent to the contract price of said artificial limbs, in lieu of the order now furnished for said limbs.

Mr. ROSS. I understand this to be a resolution to provide artificial limbs for soldiers who served in the late rebellion. I object to that. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANLER. Does the resolution propose to supply these limbs to soldiers on both sides in the late war?

Mr. DEMING. The object of the resolution is to authorize the War Department to furnish to those soldiers who are entitled to artificial limbs the equivalent of those limbs in money instead of orders for the limbs themselves.

Mr. CHANLER. I desire to have the resolution amended so that it will specify on which side these soldiers fought. I am perfectly willing to furnish legs to everybody, [laughter.]

Mr. DEMING. I modify my resolution so that it will read "for supplying soldiers who have served in the war against the late rebellion with artificial limbs."

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LAFLIN. I resume the floor.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. LAFLIN. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut, and for the last time.

UNAUTHORIZED EXPENDITURES.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved, That if any Government officer or contractor shall hereafter make expenditures in anticipation of appropriations and without authority of law, the Government will in no case assume to pay such expenditure.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to a question of privilege—

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me, that I may ask unanimous consent of the House to offer a resolution.

Mr. DAWES. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

FREE IMPORTATION OF MACHINERY.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I ask leave to introduce the following joint resolution:

Be it resolved, &c., That for one year from and after the passage of this joint resolution machinery for the manufacture of beet sugar, and imported for that purpose solely, shall be exempt from duty.

Mr. ROSS. Supposing that it is intended to tack on a tariff bill to that resolution I object to its introduction.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I move to suspend the rules to allow me to introduce this resolution. If gentlemen would listen attentively to the resolution there would not be an objection to it.

Mr. ROSS. I am afraid it has something to do with the tariff bill, and therefore I object. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOTCHKISS. It has nothing whatever to do with it, sir. What this resolution provides for is much needed. You want it yourself, and all your constituents want it.

Mr. CHANLER. Is it designed to admit machinery for the manufacture of sorghum?

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Beet sugar.

Mr. CHANLER. Well, that is the same thing. I am afraid that my friend is forgetting the interests of the great West.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. It is a subject with which I am very little acquainted personally. I only know that this is asked for by gentlemen who have expended very large sums of money for agricultural purposes, and who are perfectly familiar with the subject and know the necessity for it.

Mr. FINCK. I object to discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio objects to debate, and debate is not in order.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I demand tellers on the motion to suspend the rules.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOTCHKISS and Mr. Ross were appointed.

Mr. WENTWORTH. While the House is dividing I—

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes thirty-three, noes not counted.

So (two thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

TENNESSEE CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee of Elections, to whom was referred the petition of Dorsey B. Thomas, contesting the right of Hon. Samuel M. Arnell, representing the sixth congressional district of Tennessee, have instructed me to make a verbal report.

Mr. Arnell was admitted to a seat in this House upon his certificate at the commencement of this session, and at that time the contest was commenced by the contestant, Mr. Thomas. Owing to a misunderstanding between the parties as to the admissibility of certain testimony, the committee asked, and the House granted, an extension of the time for taking testimony in the case, which time expired on last Saturday. The testimony was committed to the Printer, and it only came back into the hands of the committee on Tuesday of this week. The committee were engaged in hearing the parties until eleven o'clock to-day without being able to conclude that hearing; and they have instructed me to state these facts to the House, and to ask the House to discharge them from the further consideration of the case.

Before doing that, however, I am instructed to state to the House some circumstances connected with the case as a basis and as a reason for the resolution which I propose to offer if this report of the committee shall be accepted.

The contest depends mainly, Mr. Speaker, upon the proper construction of the statute of the State of Tennessee in reference to the registration of voters. The returns of votes in this case to the office of the secretary of the Commonwealth of Tennessee give to Mr. Thomas, the contestant, a majority of four hundred and eighty-five. Under the construction put upon the statute by the Governor of Tennessee, he rejected so many of the votes coming from this district, 3,000 in number, as to make the majority in favor of Mr. Arnell, to whom he accordingly gave the certificate of election.

While the case does not rest entirely upon the construction of this statute, yet it is impossible to come to any conclusion in the case without putting a construction upon it. But that statute has now ceased to be in force in Tennessee; it has been superseded by another statute—

Mr. MAYNARD. I beg to correct the gentleman. That statute has not ceased to be in force, although some of its provisions have been amended.

Mr. DAWES. I believe that the provision in respect to the question in controversy has ceased to be in force.

Mr. MAYNARD. It has been amended; some additions have been made to it.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, I believe I am substantially correct in saying that upon the construction of that statute depends, in large measure, the determination of this case. Now, the statute, if not absolutely repealed, has been so altered that a construction of it, as it existed at the time when this election was held, could now be of no practical value; and therefore there will be no occasion hereafter, in reference to any subsequent election of members of Congress in that State, to decide the question whether in this case the Governor of Tennessee put the right construction upon the statute or not. It must now be apparent to everybody that whatever conclusion the House might come to in reference to the right of the contestant would be of no practical consequence either to him or to Mr. Arnell; and inasmuch as it would also be of no practical consequence to the people of the State of Tennessee it was deemed best—indeed, it was deemed necessary, there being no other way open for want of time—that the committee should report back the papers, and ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the case. They have instructed me to say, however, that they find no occasion to impugn the motives or the fidelity of the Governor of Tennessee; but to say that upon the question of the correctness of the construction put by him upon the statute there is room for difference of opinion, and there is difference of opinion among lawyers. In the condition of things in Tennessee the Governor, without doubt, acted up to what he believed to be his duty, and in the opinion of many he acted correctly. Upon that point, however, the Committee of Elections, for the reasons I have stated, do not desire to express an opinion.

On the other hand, the committee have instructed me to say that the contest on the part of Mr. Thomas was conducted in good faith. With a majority of four hundred and eighty-five returned for him in the registry in the office of the secretary of the Commonwealth, the committee were of opinion that it was his duty to contest this question and bring it before the House, and I think I express the opinion of the committee, and of all the members of the House, that any member situated in that way would have felt it his duty to have made the contest, believing, as Mr. Thomas did, that the construction put upon the statute by the Governor was not correct.

Therefore, if the House will accept this report of the committee and discharge us from the further consideration of this case I shall feel justified in offering a resolution in accordance with custom and precedent, giving to Mr. Thomas monthly pay and mileage since he began this contest, to the amount of $1,658. I believe that no member of the committee doubts that this contest has been conducted fairly and that this resolution should be adopted.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would ask the chairman of the Committee of Elections [Mr. DAWES] whether the resolution he proposes to offer is or not in accordance with the invariable rule of the House in case of an unsuccessful contestant, when the contest has been made in good faith?

Mr. DAWES. It is in accordance with the invariable rule of the House, with this exception, that they have sometimes given more. Where they have been of opinion that the contest was in good faith, they have never given less than what I shall propose in the resolution of which I have given notice.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope there will be no objection to the resolution.

Mr. MARSHALL. I desire to say but a word or two in regard to this case. And all I will have to say will be in regard to the amount of pay that I think ought to be given to the contestant.

Mr. DAWES. I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSHALL] that if he will wait until the House shall have accepted the report of the committee, his remarks will be more appropriate to the resolution itself.

Mr. MARSHALL. What I have to say will be very brief, and I may as well say it now.

Mr. PHELPS. Before the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSHALL] begins, I would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] whether there is not something more requisite in order to establish ground for compensation on the part of the contestant than mere good faith; whether it is not necessary that he should have some reasonable and probable ground of contest?

Mr. DAWES. I think that is involved in "good faith;" I think we state the matter fairly when we say that there was fair ground for contest. I say distinctly that while we believe the Governor acted conscientiously, and may have been right—upon which question we do not express an opinion one way or the other, because we do not feel called upon to do so—we still say that in this particular case, without applying it to any other, no one of us, I think, with such a return in the office of the secretary of the Commonwealth, would omit to make a contest.

Mr. PHELPS. Then are we to understand that the contestant in this case acted in good faith, and had reasonable and probable ground for a contest?

Mr. DAWES. I have stated distinctly that the settlement of that question would decide the whole case. If we should say that in our opinion he had good ground for a contest that would be making up the judgment of the committee that the construction put upon the statute by the Governor was erroneous. The committee say that they have not had time to make up a judgment on that construction. And inasmuch as it will have no practical effect, either upon the seat in contest or upon any subsequent election in the district, they prefer to express no judgment. The party did not conclude their hearing, and it would be improper for us to express an opinion. We do ample justice in saying that the contestant prosecuted this contest in good faith; and situated as he was, and with his opinion about the construction of the law, any other member of the House would have prosecuted the contest; whether his opinion was correct or not, we withhold our judgment.

Mr. PHELPS. Of course I do not understand the committee as concluding this question as to the ground of contest. I simply wished to inquire whether there is such a prima facie case on the part of the contestant as justifies the House in awarding compensation.

Mr. DAWES. The committee, following the practice of the courts, have decided the questions involved in this case so far only as they arose and required decision. I believe I see the significance of the gentleman's question, and I think I have already sufficiently answered it.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, as the present Congress is about to expire I do not propose to make any objection to the adoption of the report of the majority committee. I do not propose to offer a resolution that Mr. Thomas, the contestant, is entitled to the seat which he claims. But before the question is submitted to the House, I feel it due to myself as a member of the committee to make a brief statement, for the purpose of showing the reasons why I propose to offer an amendment to the resolution in regard to compensation.

So far as I have had an opportunity to examine this case I think that Mr. Thomas, the contestant, is entitled to the seat as a member of this House. I think that the contestant was duly elected according to the laws of the State of Tennessee, and that he ought to have received a certificate of election at the hands of the Governor of that State. I do not propose here to question the good faith or the purity of purpose of the Governor of Tennessee in his action in the premises; it is not necessary to do so, and I suppose it would not be proper for me to do so. According to the returns of the election officers in the different counties of the congressional district Mr. Thomas, the contestant, had a majority of several hundred of all the votes cast for member of Congress. Now, sir, by the law passed three years ago prescribing the duties of the Clerk of this House at the organization of Congress, that officer is directed to enter upon his roll the name of no persons except those having the certificate of the Governor of the particular State that they have been elected in accordance with the laws of the State or a law of Congress. Under this law Governor Brownlow supposed that in giving his certificate he had the right to determine the legality of the returns; and hence he took it upon himself to throw out the entire returns from several counties in the district, and upon the returns from the remaining counties he gave his certificate to Mr. Arnell, the sitting member. Upon that certificate Mr. Arnell took his seat, and has been acting as a member until the present time.

Mr. Thomas, the contestant, gave notice of contest within the time prescribed by law; but on account of an informality in presenting his case at the commencement of the present session—and the House will remember that he had no opportunity to do so at an earlier period, because the members from Tennessee were not admitted until one of the last days of the last session—on account of an informality Mr. Thomas has not been able to bring his case to trial before the committee until a very recent period. Now, under the present circumstances, at the very close of the Congress, I do not know that the committee could well have done otherwise than report the case back, as they have done, and ask to be discharged from its further consideration. But under the peculiar circumstances of the case, in view of the heavy expenses to which Mr. Thomas has been subjected, in view of the fact that he was in attendance here during the last session of this Congress, as well as during the present session, except when he was required to go home to take testimony, it must be evident, I think, that the amount of compensation proposed in the resolution of the committee will not be sufficient in all probability even to remunerate Mr. Thomas for the expenses which he has actually incurred.

Now, the case is a somewhat peculiar one. The return of the election officers gives this contestant a clear majority of the votes cast in this district, but he has been deprived of his right by the construction put upon this act of Congress, a construction I do not think this House would place upon it. We are not called on to decide that question now.

I shall make no minority report, nor even a minority suggestion in regard to the matter. The result one way or the other will benefit no one; certainly it will not benefit the country. I make this suggestion to the House that in good faith, and to carry out the ordinary purposes of the House, there should be some compensation given to Mr. Thomas; that we should at least compensate him fully for the trouble he has been at in making the contest here. It was not only his right but his duty to bring it before the House. The returning officers gave him several hundred majority in the district, and I will say that the good faith of those returning officers has never been impeached. This is all I propose to say at the present time. If opportunity be afforded to me I will move the amendment I have suggested.

Mr. DAWES. I have refrained, under the instructions of the committee and in accordance with my own judgment, from expressing an opinion on the case; and I wish to leave the record distinct as regards the committee that they do not express any judgment in the case, simply from the fact they had not time to conclude the hearing of the case and make up their judgment. We leave the claim of one or the other where it is now.

The delay which caused this result arose from the too easy manner of the contestant in prosecuting his claim, taking as service of notice that which he ought not to have accepted; and I ought to say the reason why the time was extended was because this contestant took what he supposed to be an agreement as sufficient; because there was no written agreement, he supposing a verbal one would be sufficient.

Mr. STOKES. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. DAWES. I will if it does not involve the merits of this case or too great a consumption of time. After the report which has been made by the committee, neither the gentleman from Illinois nor the gentleman from Tennessee should go into the merits of the case. I will yield to the gentleman for five minutes.

Mr. STOKES. I would not have attempted to say a word on this subject but for the fact that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSHALL] has alluded to the action of Governor Brownlow. I desire to state, in defense of Governor Brownlow for what he did, that he acted strictly in accordance with the act of Congress of March 3, 1863, which provided that the Governor should give the certificate to the one who received the largest number of legal votes. It was made his duty to examine who had the majority of legal votes. What did he do? All over the State was heard the threat on the part of certain persons that they would override the franchise law. It was declared to be unconstitutional, and that they intended to override it. Governor Brownlow, to save trouble and difficulty, issued his proclamation, warning the people against overriding the franchise law.

Mr. COOPER. Let me ask my colleague a question.

Mr. STOKES. Not now. Governor Brownlow issued his proclamation that the law must be enforced. The law was nevertheless disregarded. He sent to the clerks of election to report to him exactly the manner in which the votes had been recorded. The clerks did report that the law had not been complied with, and where this occurred the returns were thrown out. Many counties in my district where I got my heaviest majorities were thrown out for want of legal registration. I say this in justice to Governor Brownlow.

Mr. COOPER. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to yield to me to reply to my colleague.

Mr. DAWES. That would be going into a debate on the merits of the case which neither the gentleman from Tennessee nor the gentleman from Illinois ought to have indulged in. I know the gentleman and his colleague differ widely on the subject. I have stated to the House that there is room for difference of opinion; that in our opinion all parties acted in good faith, and that it is impossible for us, in the brief time we have left to us, to enter into a consideration of the correctness of their decision. I adhere to the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the question was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I offer the following resolution, and call the previous question:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House the sum of $1,653 80 to D. B. Thomas, in full for time expended and expenses incurred in contesting the right of Samuel A. Arnell to a seat in this House from the sixth district of Tennessee.

Mr. MARSHALL. I ask my colleague on the committee to yield to allow me to offer an amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I will.

Mr. MARSHALL. I move to insert $2,500 in place of $1,653 80.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question being put on the amendment, there were—ayes 56, noes 54.

Mr. DAWES demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. DAWES and MARSHALL.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 69.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The resolution was then agreed to.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 598, to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

Also, that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill No. 1220, to provide ways and means for the payment of compound-interest notes.

Also, that the Senate had passed House bill No. 793, to provide increased revenue on imported wool, and for other purposes.

Also, that the Senate had insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. No. 896) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868; had agreed to the further conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Messrs. TRUMBULL, EDMUNDS, and DAVIS.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. No. 276) to establish a Department of Education; when the Speaker signed the same.

IMPORTATION OF SUGAR MACHINERY.

The SPEAKER. The House will resume the consideration of reports from the Committee on Printing, which have been interfered with by various privileged motions.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. LAFLIN. For a moment.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I believe that all opposition to my resolution to admit machinery for making sugar free of duty for one year is withdrawn, and I think it will pass by unanimous consent.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I object.

COAST SURVEY.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed twenty-five hundred extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey for the year 1866, of which one thousand shall be for distribution by the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, and fifteen hundred for the use of the members of this House.

SURVEY OF LAKES.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the same committee, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed fifteen hundred extra copies of the report of the Secretary of War for the year 1866 on the survey of the western and northwestern lakes, without the appendix, five hundred of which shall be for distribution by the officer in charge of such survey, and one thousand for the use of the members of this House.

Mr. PAINE. I suggest an amendment, that it should read "northern and northwestern lakes."

Mr. LAFLIN. I accept that amendment.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

PAY OF A MEMBER.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I ask the gentleman from New York to allow me to offer a resolution.

Mr. LAFLIN. I will yield.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House be, and he is hereby, instructed to pay Hon. T. M. MARQUETTE, from the State of Nebraska, the pay and mileage that would have been due him as a member of the Thirty-Ninth Congress had he been admitted to his seat on the 2d of January, 1866, the day of his election.

Mr. SPALDING. Nebraska was not a State then.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Yes, it was a State. Gentlemen in this House ought to understand, if they do not, that Nebraska was admitted as a State by the vote of Congress at the last session, but the act was vetoed. It has since been admitted over the veto upon a condition which has been complied with. But it had elected a member of this House, and he was here during the entire last session of this House waiting for his admission, and only because Congress prescribed additional terms which it compelled the State to accept was he detained from his seat till now.

I desire to state another fact, and that is, that he was elected a Delegate to the Fortieth Congress from the Territory of Nebraska, and by the State being admitted to-day he is prevented taking his seat as such Delegate in the next Congress, which would give him more pay and mileage than he will receive under this resolution.

Mr. SPALDING. Make it a donation, then, and not call it the pay of a member of Congress.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. FINCK demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken on agreeing to the resolution, it was decided in the negative—yeas 43, nays 105, not voting 43; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bingham, Blaine, Bromwell, Buckland, Sidney Clarke, Cullom, Doanely, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Garfield, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hayes, Higby, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, Jones, Julian, Kasson, Koontz, Loan, McClurg, Moulton, Myers, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Price, Stilwell, Stokes, Thayer, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, and James F. Wilson—43.

Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Hale, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hart, Henderson, Hill, Hise, Holmes, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Kerr, Ketcham, Laflin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, LeBlond, Leftwich, Longyear, Lynch, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, McKuer, Mercer, Miller, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, Orth, Rice, Plants, Pomeroy, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Van Aernam, Andrew H. Ward, Hamilton Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Winfield—105.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Banks, Bidwell, Bundy, Culver, Dawson, Delano, Dodge, Driggs, Dumont, Griswold, Hogan, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Kelley, Kelso, Kuykendall, Latham, Marquette, Marston, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Noell, Patterson, Phelps, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, Rousseau, Shellabarger, Stevens, Strouse, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Walker, Windom, Woodbridge, and Wright—43.

So the resolution was disagreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was disagreed to, for the purpose of suggesting an amendment, which I think the House will concur in, to pay the member from Nebraska from the 1st of December, 1866. If the vote is reconsidered I will move that amendment.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

On laying the motion on the table there were—ayes 69, noes 53.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I demand tellers. Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. DAWES and SPALDING.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 56.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Several messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House, by Mr. MOORE, one of his Secretaries, one of which was announced as a return to the House from which it originated of the bill (H. R. No. 1143) entitled an act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States, with the President's objections thereto.

NAMES OF PARDONED REBELS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House various messages from the President of the United States. First the following:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report of the Attorney General, additional to the one submitted by him December 13, 1866, in reply to the resolution of the House of Representatives of December 10, 1866, requesting "a list of names of all persons who have been engaged in the late rebellion against the United States Government who have been pardoned by the President from April 15, 1865, to this date; that said list shall also state the rank of each person who has been so pardoned, if he has been engaged in the military service of the so-called confederate States, and the position, if he shall have held any civil office under said so-called confederate government; and shall also further state whether such person has at any time prior to April 14, 1861, held any office under the United States Government, and if so, what office, together with the reasons for granting such pardons, and also the names of the person or persons at whose solicitation such pardon was granted."

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, March 21, 1867.

The message was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

REMOVALS, ETC., IN INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 25, 1867.

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of the Interior, in reply to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 11th instant, calling for certain information relative to removals and appointments in his Department since the adjournment of the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

R. M. BOYNTON AND H. M. FISHER.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 21st instant, calling for a copy of a letter addressed by Richard M. Boynton and Harriet M. Fisher to the Secretary of the Navy in the month of February, 1863, together with the indorsement made thereon by the chief of the Bureau of Ordnance.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 27, 1867.

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION OF THE CZAR.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit to Congress a copy of a correspondence between the Secretary of State and G. V. Fox, Esq., relative to the presentation by the latter to the Emperor of Russia of the resolution of Congress expressive of the feelings of the people of the United States in reference to the providential escape of that sovereign from an attempted assassination.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 26, 1867.

REPORT OF GENERAL INGALLS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the House of February 27, 1867, General Ingalls's report of an inspection made by him in 1866; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT OF REBEL STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following veto message of the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I have examined the bill "to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States" with the care and anxiety which its transcendent importance is calculated to awaken. I am unable to give it my assent for reasons so grave that I hope a statement of them may have some influence on the minds of the patriotic and enlightened men with whom the decision must ultimately rest.

The bill places all the people of the ten States therein named under the absolute dominion of military rulers; and the preamble undertakes to give the reason upon which the measure is based, and the ground upon which it is justified. It declares that there exist in those States no legal governments and no adequate protection for life or property, and asserts the necessity for enforcing peace and good order within their limits. Is this true as a matter of fact?

It is not denied that the States in question have each of them an actual government, with all the powers, executive, judicial, and legislative, which properly belong to a free State. They are organized like the other States of the Union, and like them, they make, administer, and execute the laws which concern their domestic affairs. An existing de facto government, exercising such functions as these, is itself the law of the State upon all matters within its jurisdiction. To pronounce the supreme law-making power of an established

State illegal is to say that law itself is unlawful.

The provisions which these governments have made for the preservation of order, the suppression of crime, and the redress of private injuries, are in substance and principle the same as those which prevail in the northern States and in other civilized countries. They certainly have not succeeded in preventing the commission of all crime, nor has this been accomplished anywhere in the world. There, as well as elsewhere, offenders sometime escape for want of vigorous prosecution, and occasionally, perhaps, by the inefficiency of courts or the prejudice of jurors. It is undoubtedly true that these evils have been much increased and aggravated, North and South, by the demoralizing influences of civil war and by the rancorous passions which the contest has engendered. But that these people are maintaining local governments for themselves which habitually defeat the object of all government, and render their own lives and property insecure, is in itself utterly improbable, and the averment of the bill to that effect is not supported by any evidence which has come to my knowledge. All the information I have on the subject convinces me that the masses of the southern people and those who control their public acts, while they entertain diverse opinions on questions of Federal policy, are completely united in the effort to reorganize their society on the basis of peace, and to restore their mutual prosperity as rapidly and as completely as their circumstances will permit.

The bill, however, would seem to show upon its face that the establishment of peace and good order is not its real object. The fifth section declares that the preceding sections shall cease to operate in any State where certain events shall have happened. These events are, first, the selection of delegates to a State convention by an election at which negroes shall be allowed to vote; second, the formation of a State constitution by the convention so chosen; third, the insertion into the State constitution of a provision which will secure the right of voting at all elections to negroes, and to such white men as may not be disfranchised for rebellion or felony; fourth, the submission of the constitution for ratification to negroes and white men not disfranchised, and its actual ratification by their vote; fifth, the submission of the State constitution to Congress for examination and approval, and the actual approval of it by that body; sixth, the adoption of a certain amendment to the Federal Constitution by a vote of the Legislature elected under the new constitution; seventh, the adoption of said amendment by a sufficient number of other States to make it a part of the Constitution of the United States. All these conditions must be fulfilled before the people of any of these States can be relieved from the bondage of military domination; but when they are fulfilled, then immediately the pains and penalties of the bill are to cease, no matter whether there be peace and order or not, and without any reference to the security of life or property. The excuse given for the bill in the preamble is admitted by the bill itself not to be real. The military rule which it establishes is plainly to be used, not for any purposes of order, or for the prevention of crime, but solely as a means of coercing the people into the adoption of principles and measures to which it is known that they are opposed, and upon which they have an undeniable right to exercise their own judgment.

I submit to Congress whether this measure is not, in its whole character, scope, and object, without precedent and without authority, in palpable conflict with the plainest provisions of the Constitution, and utterly destructive to those great principles of liberty and humanity for which our ancestors on both sides of the Atlantic have shed so much blood and expended so much treasure.

The ten States named in the bill are divided into five districts. For each district an officer of the Army, not below the rank of brigadier general, is to be appointed to rule over the people; and he is to be supported with an efficient military force to enable him to perform his duties and enforce his authority. Those duties and that authority, as defined by the third section of the bill, are, "to protect all persons in their rights of person and property, to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, and to punish, or cause to be punished, all disturbers of the public peace or criminals." The power thus given to the commanding officer over all the people of each district is that of an absolute monarch. His mere will is to take the place of all law. The law of the States is now the only rule applicable to the subjects placed under his control, and that is completely displaced by the clause which declares all interference of State authority to be null and void. He alone is permitted to determine what are rights of person or property, and he may protect them in such a way as in his discretion may seem proper. It places at his free disposal all the lands and goods in his district, and he may distribute them without let or hindrance to whom he pleases. Being bound by no State law, and there being no other law to regulate the subject, he may make a criminal code of his own; and he can make it as bloody as any recorded in history, or he can reserve the privilege of acting upon the impulse of his private passions in each case that arises. He is bound by no rules of evidence; there is indeed no provision by which he is authorized or required to take any evidence at all. Everything is a crime which he chooses to call so, and all persons are condemned whom he pronounces to be guilty. He is not bound to keep any record, or make any report of his proceedings. He may arrest his victims wherever he finds them, without warrant, accusation, or proof of probable cause. If he gives them a trial before he inflicts the punishment he gives it of his grace and mercy, not because he is commanded so to do.

To a casual reader of the bill it might seem that some kind of trial was secured by it to persons accused of crime; but such is not the case. The officer "may allow local civil tribunals to try offenders," but of course this does not require that he shall do so. If any State or Federal court presumes to exercise its legal jurisdiction by the trial of a malefactor without his special permission he can break it up, and punish the judges and jurors as being themselves malefactors. He can save his friends from justice, and despoil his enemies contrary to justice.

It is also provided that "he shall have power to organize military commissions or tribunals;" but this power he is not commanded to exercise. It is merely permissive, and is to be used only "when in his judgment it may be necessary for the trial of offenders." Even if the sentence of a commission were made a prerequisite to the punishment of a party, it would be scarcely the slightest check upon the officer, who has authority to organize it as he pleases, prescribe its mode of proceeding, appoint its members from among his own subordinates, and revise all its decisions. Instead of mitigating the harshness of his single rule, such a tribunal would be used much more probably to divide the responsibility of making it more cruel and unjust.

Several provisions, dictated by the humanity of Congress, have been inserted in the bill, apparently to restrain the power of the commanding officer; but it seems to me that they are of no avail for that purpose. The fourth section provides: first, that trials shall not be unnecessarily delayed; but I think I have shown that the power is given to punish without trial, and if so, this provision is practically inoperative. Second, cruel or unusual punishment is not to be inflicted; but who is to decide what is cruel and what is unusual? The words have acquired a legal meaning by long use in the courts. Can it be expected that military officers will understand or follow a rule expressed in language so purely technical, and not pertaining in the least degree to their profession? If not, then each officer may define cruelty according to his own temper, and if it is not usual, he will make it usual. Corporal punishment, imprisonment, the gag, the ball and chain, and the almost insupportable forms of torture invented for military punishment lie within the range of choice. Third, the sentence of a commission is not to be executed without being approved by the commander, if it affects life or liberty, and a sentence of death must be approved by the President. This applies to cases in which there has been a trial and sentence. I take it to be clear, under this bill, that the military commander may condemn to death without even the form of a trial by a military commission, so that the life of the condemned may depend upon the will of two men instead of one.

It is plain that the authority here given to the military officer amounts to absolute despotism. But, to make it still more unendurable, the bill provides that it may be delegated to as many subordinates as he chooses to appoint; for it declares that he shall "punish or cause to be punished." Such a power has not been wielded by any monarch in England for more than five hundred years. In all that time no people who speak the English language have borne such servitude. It reduces the whole population of the ten States—all persons, of every color, sex, and condition, and every stranger within their limits—to the most abject and degrading slavery. No master ever had a control so absolute over his slave as this bill gives to the military officers over both white and colored persons.

It may be answered to this that the officers of the Army are too magnanimous, just, and humane to oppress and trample upon a subjugated people. I do not doubt that Army officers are as well entitled to this kind of confidence as any other class of men. But the history of the world has been written in vain if it does not teach us that unrestrained authority can never be safely trusted in human hands. It is almost sure to be more or less abused under any circumstances, and it has always resulted in gross tyranny where the rulers who exercise it are strangers to their subjects, and come among them as the representatives of a distant power, and more especially when the power that sends them is unfriendly. Governments closely resembling that here proposed have been fairly tried in Hungary and Poland, and the suffering endured by those people roused the sympathies of the entire world. It was tried in Ireland, and, though tempered at first by principles of English law, it gave birth to cruelties so atrocious that they are never recounted without just indignation. The French Convention armed its deputies with this power, and sent them to the southern departments of the republic. The massacres, murders, and other atrocities which they committed show what the passions of the ablest men in the most civilized society will tempt them to do when wholly unrestrained by law.

The men of our race in every age have struggled to tie up the hands of their Governments and keep them within the law; because their own experience of all mankind taught them that rulers could not be relied on to concede those rights which they were not legally bound to respect. The head of a great empire has sometimes governed it with a mild and paternal sway; but the kindness of an irresponsible deputy never yields what the law does not extort from him. Between such a master and the people subjected to his domination there can be nothing but enmity; he punishes them if they resist his authority; and if they submit to it he hates them for their servility.

I come now to a question which is, if possible, still more important. Have we the power to establish and carry into execution a measure like this? I answer, certainly not, if we derive our authority from the Constitution, and if we are bound by the limitations which it imposes. This proposition is perfectly clear: that no branch of the Federal Government, executive, legislative, or judicial, can have any just powers except those which it derives through and exercises under the organic law of the Union. Outside of the Constitution we have no legal authority more than private citizens, and within it we have only so much as that instrument gives us. This broad principle limits all our function and applies to all subjects. It protects not only the citizens of States which are within the Union, but it shields every human being who comes or is brought under our jurisdiction. We have no right to do in one place more than in another that which the Constitution says we shall not do at all. If, therefore, the southern States were in truth out of the Union, we could not treat their people in a way which the fundamental law forbids.

Some persons assume that the success of our arms in crushing the opposition that was made in some of the States to the execution of the Federal laws reduced these States and all their people, the innocent as well as the guilty, to the condition of vassalage, and give us a power over them which the Constitution does not bestow or define or limit. No fallacy can be more transparent than this. Our victories subjected the insurgents to legal obedience, not to the yoke of an arbitrary despotism. When an absolute sovereign reduces his rebellious subjects he may deal with them according to his pleasure, because he had that power before; but when a limited monarch puts down an insurrection he must still govern according to law. If an insurrection should take place in one of our States against the authority of the State government and end in the overthrowing of those who planned it, would they take away the rights of all the people of the counties where it was favored by a part or a majority of the population? Could they for such a reason be wholly outlawed and deprived of their representation in the Legislature? I have always contended that the Government of the United States was sovereign within its constitutional sphere; that it executed its laws like the States themselves by applying its coercive power directly to individuals; and that it could put down insurrection with the same effect as a State and no other. The opposite doctrine is the worst heresy of those who advocated secession, and cannot be agreed to without admitting that heresy to be right.

Invasion, insurrection, rebellion, and domestic violence were anticipated when the Government was framed, and the means of repelling and suppressing them were wisely provided for in the Constitution; but it was not thought necessary to declare that the States in which they might occur should be expelled from the Union. Rebellions, which were invariably suppressed, occurred prior to that out of which these questions grow; but the States continued to exist and the Union remained unbroken. In Massachusetts, in Pennsylvania, in Rhode Island, and in New York, at different periods in our history, violent and armed opposition to the United States was carried on; but the relations of those States to the Federal Government were not supposed to be interrupted or changed thereby after the rebellious portions of their population were defeated and put down. It is true that in these earlier cases there was no formal expression of a determination to withdraw from the Union; but it is also true that in the southern States the ordinances of secession were treated by all the friends of the Union as mere nullities, and are now acknowledged to be so by the States themselves. If we admit that they had any force or validity or that they did in fact take the States in which they were passed out of the Union, we sweep from under our feet all the grounds upon which we stand in justifying the use of Federal force to maintain the integrity of the Government.

This is a bill passed by Congress in time of peace. There is not in any one of the States brought under its operation either war or insurrection. The laws of the States and of the Federal Government are all in undisturbed and harmonious operation. The courts, State and Federal, are open and in the full exercise of their proper authority. Over every State comprised in these five military districts life, liberty, and property are secured by State laws and Federal laws, and the national Constitution is everywhere in force and everywhere obeyed. What, then, is the ground on which this bill proceeds? The title of the bill announces that it is intended "for the more efficient government" of these ten States. It is recited by way of preamble that no legal State governments "nor adequate protection for life or property" exist in those States, and that peace and good order should be thus enforced. The first thing which arrests attention upon these recitals, which prepare the way for martial law, is this: that the only foundation upon which martial law can exist under our form of Government is not stated or so much as pretended. Actual war, foreign invasion, domestic insurrection—none of these appear, and none of these in fact exist. It is not even recited that any sort of war or insurrection is threatened. Let us pause here to consider, upon this question of constitutional law and the power of Congress, a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, ex parte Milligan.

I will first quote from the opinion of the majority of the court:

"Martial law cannot arise from a threatened invasion. The necessity must be actual and present, the invasion real, such as effectually closes the courts and deposes the civil administration."

We see that martial law comes in only when actual war closes the courts and deposes the civil authority; but this bill, in time of peace, makes martial law operate as though we were in actual war, and become the cause instead of the consequence of the abrogation of civil authority. One more quotation:

"It follows, from what has been said on this subject, that there are occasions when martial law can be properly applied. If in foreign invasion or civil war the courts are actually deposed, and it is impossible to administer criminal justice according to law, then, on the theater of active military operations, where war really prevails, there is a necessity to furnish a substitute for the civil authority thus overthrown, to preserve the safety of the Army and society; and as no power is left but the military, it is allowed to govern by martial rule until the laws can have their free course."

I now quote from the opinion of the minority of the court, delivered by Chief Justice Chase:

"We by no means assert that Congress can establish and apply the laws of war where no war has been declared or exists. Where peace exists the laws of peace must prevail."

This is sufficiently explicit. Peace exists in all the territory to which this bill applies. It asserts a power in Congress in time of peace to set aside the laws of peace and substitute the laws of war. The minority, concurring with the majority, declares that Congress does not possess that power. Again, and if possible more emphatically, the Chief Justice, with remarkable clearness and condensation, sums up the whole matter as follows:

"There are under the Constitution three kinds of military jurisdiction—one to be exercised both in peace and war; another to be exercised in time of foreign war without the boundaries of the United States, or in time of rebellion and civil war within States or districts occupied by rebels treated as belligerents; and a third to be exercised in time of invasion or insurrection within the limits of the United States, or during rebellion within the limits of the States maintaining adhesion to the national Government, when the public danger requires its exercise. The first of these may be called jurisdiction under the military law, and is found in acts of Congress prescribing Rules and Articles of War, or otherwise providing for the government of the national force; the second may be distinguished as military government, superseding as far as may be deemed expedient the local law, and exercised by the military commander under the direction of the President, with the express or implied sanction of Congress; while the third may be denominated martial law proper, and is called into action by Congress, or temporarily, when the action of Congress cannot be invited, and in the case of justifying or excusing peril, by the President in times of insurrection or invasion or of civil or foreign war, within districts or localities where ordinary law no longer adequately secures public safety and private rights."

It will be observed that of the three kinds of military jurisdiction which can be exercised or created under our Constitution, there is but one that can prevail in time of peace, and that is the code of laws enacted by Congress for the government of the national forces. That body of military law has no application to the citizen, nor even to the citizen soldier enrolled in the militia in time of peace. But this bill is not a part of that sort of military law, for that applies only to the soldier and not to the citizen, while, contrariwise, the military law provided by this bill applies only to the citizen and not to the soldier.

I need not say to the representatives of the American people that their Constitution forbids the exercise of judicial power in any way but one, that is, by the ordained and established courts. It is equally well known that in all criminal cases a trial by jury is made indispensable by the express words of that instrument. I will not enlarge on the inestimable value of the right thus secured to every free-man or speak of the danger to public liberty in all parts of the country which must ensue from a denial of it anywhere or upon any pretense. A very recent decision of the Supreme Court has traced the history, vindicated the dignity, and made known the value of this great privilege so clearly that nothing more is needed. To what extent a violation of it might be excused in war or public danger may admit of discussion, but we are providing now for a time of profound peace, where there is not an armed soldier within our borders except those who are in the service of the Government. It is in such a condition of things that an act of Congress is proposed which if carried out would deny a trial by the lawful courts and juries to nine million American citizens and to their posterity for an indefinite period. It seems to be scarcely possible that any one should seriously believe this consistent with a Constitution which declares in simple, plain, and unambiguous language that all persons shall have that right, and that no person shall ever in any case be deprived of it. The Constitution also forbids the arrest of the citizen without judicial warrant, founded on probable cause. This bill authorizes an arrest without warrant, at the pleasure of a military commander. The Constitution declares that "no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on presentment by a grand jury." This bill holds every person not a soldier answerable for all crimes and all charges without any presentment. The Constitution declares that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." This bill sets aside all process of law, and makes the citizen answerable in his person and property to the will of one man, and as to his life to the will of two. Finally, the Constitution declares that "the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless when in case of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it;" whereas this bill declares martial law (which of itself suspends this great writ) in time of peace, and authorizes the military to make the arrest, and gives to the prisoner only one privilege, and that is, a trial "without unnecessary delay." He has no hope of release from custody, except the hope, such as it is, of release by acquittal before a military commission.

The United States are bound to guaranty to each State a republican form of government. Can it be pretended that this obligation is not palpably broken if we carry out a measure like this, which wipes away ever vestige of republican government in ten States, and put the life, property, liberty, and honor of all the people in each of them under the domination of a single person clothed with unlimited authority?

The Parliament in England, exercising the omnipotent power which it claimed, was accustomed to pass bills of attainder; that is to say, it would convict men of treason and other crimes by legislative enactment. The person accused had a hearing, sometimes a patient and fair one; but generally party prejudice prevailed instead of justice. It often became necessary for Parliament to acknowledge its error and reverse its own action. The fathers of our country determined that no such thing should occur here. They withheld the power from Congress and thus forbade its exercise by that body; and they provided in the Constitution that no State should pass any bill of attainder. It is therefore impossible for any person in this country to be constitutionally convicted or punished for any crime by a legislative proceeding of any sort. Nevertheless, here is a bill of attainder against nine million people at once. It is based upon an accusation so vague as to be scarcely intelligible, and found to be true upon no credible evidence. Not one of the nine millions was heard in his own defense. The representatives of the doomed parties were excluded from all participation in the trial. The conviction is to be followed by the most ignominious punishment ever inflicted on large masses of men. It disfranchises them by hundreds of thousands, and degrades them all—even those who are admitted to be guiltless—from the rank of freemen to the condition of slaves.

The purpose and object of the bill, the general intent which pervades it from beginning to end, is to change the entire structure and character of the State governments, and to compel them by force to the adoption of organic laws and regulations which they are unwilling to accept if left to themselves. The negroes have not asked for the privilege of voting; the vast majority of them have no idea what it means. This bill not only thrusts it into their hands, but compels them, as well as the whites, to use it in a particular way. If they do not form a constitution with prescribed articles in it, and afterward elect a Legislature which will act upon certain measures in a prescribed way, neither blacks nor whites can be relieved from the slavery which the bill imposes upon them. Without pausing here to consider the policy or impolicy of Africanizing the southern part of our territory, I would simply ask the attention of Congress to that manifest, well-known, and universally acknowledged rule of constitutional law which declares that the Federal Government has no jurisdiction, authority, or power to regulate such subjects for any State. To force the right of suffrage out of the hands of the white people and into the hands of the negroes is an arbitrary violation of this principle.

This bill imposes martial law at once, and its operations will begin so soon as the general and his troops can be put in place. The dread alternative between its harsh rule and compliance with the terms of this measure is not suspended, nor are the people afforded any time for free deliberation. The bill says to them, take martial law first, then deliberate. And when they have done all that this measure requires them to do, other conditions and contingencies, over which they have no control, yet remain to be fulfilled before they can be relieved from martial law. Another Congress must first approve the constitutions made in conformity with the will of this Congress, and must declare these States entitled to representation in both Houses. The whole question thus remains open and unsettled, and must again occupy the attention of Congress, and in the mean time the agitation which now prevails will continue to disturb all portions of the people.

The bill also denies the legality of the governments of ten of the States which participated in the ratification of the amendment to the Federal Constitution abolishing slavery forever within the jurisdiction of the United States, and practically excludes them from the Union. If this assumption of the bill be correct their concurrence cannot be considered as having been legally given, and the important fact is made to appear that the consent of three fourths of the States—the requisite number—has not been constitutionally obtained to the ratification of that amendment, thus leaving the question of slavery where it stood before the amendment was officially declared to have become a part of the Constitution.

That the measure proposed by this bill does violate the Constitution in the particulars mentioned, and in many other ways which I forbear to enumerate, is too clear to admit of the least doubt. It only remains to consider whether the injunctions of that instrument ought to be obeyed or not. I think they ought to be obeyed for reasons which I will proceed to give as briefly as possible.

In the first place, it is the only system of free government which we can hope to have as a nation. When it ceases to be the rule of our conduct we may perhaps take our choice between complete anarchy, a consolidated despotism, and a total dissolution of the Union; but national liberty, regulated by law, will have passed beyond our reach.

It is the best frame of government the world ever saw. No other is or can be so well adapted to the genius, habits, or wants of the American people. Combining the strength of a great empire with unspeakable blessings of local self-government, having a central power to defend the general interests, and recognizing the authority of the States as the guardians of industrial rights, it is "the sheet-anchor of our safety abroad and our peace at home." It was ordained "to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, promote the general welfare, provide for the common defense, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity." These great ends have been attained heretofore, and will be again, by faithful obedience to it; but they are certain to be lost if we treat with disregard its sacred obligations.

It was to punish the gross crime of defying the Constitution and to vindicate its supreme authority, that we carried on a bloody war of four years' duration. Shall we now acknowledge that we sacrificed a million lives and expended billions of treasure to enforce a Constitution which is not worthy of respect and preservation?

Those who advocated the right of secession alleged in their own justification that we had no regard for law, and that their rights of property, life, and liberty would not be safe under the Constitution as administered by us. If we now verify their assertion, we prove that they were in truth and in fact fighting for their liberty, and instead of branding their leaders with the dishonoring name of traitors against a righteous and legal Government, we elevate them in history to the rank of self-sacrificing patriots, consecrate them to the admiration of the world, and place them by the side of Washington, Hampden, and Sidney. No, let us leave them to the infamy they deserve, punish them as they should be punished, according to law, and take upon ourselves no share of the odium which they should bear alone.

It is a part of our public history which can never be forgotten that both Houses of Congress, in July, 1861, declared in the form of a solemn resolution that the war was and should be carried on for no purpose of subjugation, but solely to enforce the Constitution and laws, and that when this was yielded by the parties in rebellion, the contest should cease, with the constitutional rights of the States and of individuals unimpaired. This resolution was adopted and sent forth to the world unanimously by the Senate, and with only two dissenting voices in the House. It was accepted by the friends of the Union in the South, as well as in the North, as expressing honestly and truly the object of the war. On the faith of it many thousands of persons in both sections gave their lives and their fortunes to the cause. To repudiate it now by refusing to the States and to the individuals within them the rights which the Constitution and laws of the Union would secure to them is a breach of our plighted honor for which I can imagine no excuse, and to which I cannot voluntarily become a party.

The evils which spring from the unsettled state of our Government will be acknowledged by all. Commercial intercourse is impeded, capital is in constant peril, public securities fluctuate in value, peace itself is not secure, and the sense of moral and political duty is impaired. To avert these calamities from our country it is imperatively required that we should immediately decide upon some course of administration which can be steadfastly adhered to. I am thoroughly convinced that any settlement or compromise or plan of action which is inconsistent with the principles of the Constitution will not only be unavailing, but mischievous; that it will but multiply the present evils instead of removing them. The Constitution, in its whole integrity and vigor, throughout the length and breadth of the land, is the best of all compromises. Besides, our duty does not, in my judgment, leave us a choice between that and any other. I believe that it contains the remedy that is so much needed, and that if the coördinate branches of the Government would unite upon its provisions they would baffle broad enough and strong enough to sustain in time of peace the nation which they bore safely through the ordeal of a protracted civil war. Among the most sacred guarantees of that instrument are those which declare that "each State shall have at least one Representative," and that "no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate." Each House is made the "judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members," and may, "with the concurrence of two thirds, expel a member." Thus, as heretofore urged—

"In the admission of Senators and Representatives from any and all of the States there can be no just ground of apprehension that persons who are disloyal will be clothed with the powers of legislation, for this could not happen when the Constitution and laws are enforced by a vigilant and faithful Congress."

"When a Senator or Representative presents his certificate of election, he may at once be admitted or rejected; or, should there be any question as to his eligibility, his credentials may be referred for investigation to the appropriate committee. If admitted to a seat, it must be upon evidence satisfactory to the House of which he thus becomes a member, that he possesses the requisite constitutional and legal qualifications. If refused admission as a member for want of due allegiance to the Government, and returned to his constituents, they are admonished that none but persons loyal to the United States will be allowed a voice in the legislative councils of the nation, and the political power and moral influence of Congress are thus effectively exerted in the interests of loyalty to the Government and fidelity to the Union."

And is it not far better that the work of restoration should be accomplished by simple compliance with the plain requirements of the Constitution than by a recourse to measures which in effect destroy the States, and threaten the subversion of the General Government? All that is necessary to settle this simple but important question, without further agitation or delay, is a willingness on the part of all to sustain the Constitution and to carry the provisions into practical operation. If to-morrow either branch of Congress would declare that, upon the presentation of their credentials, members constitutionally elected and loyal to the General Government would be admitted to seats in Congress, while all others would be excluded, and their places remain vacant until the selection by the people of loyal and qualified persons; and if, at the same time, assurance were given that this policy would be continued until all the States were represented in Congress, it would send a thrill of joy throughout the entire land, as indicating the inauguration of a system which must speedily bring tranquillity to the public mind.

While we are legislating upon subjects which are of great importance to the whole people, and which must affect all parts of the country, not only during the life of the present generation, but for ages to come, we should remember that all men are entitled at least to a hearing in the councils which decide upon the destiny of themselves and their children. At present ten States are denied representation, and when the Fortieth Congress assembles on the 4th day of the present month, sixteen States will be without a voice in the House of Representatives. This grave fact, with the important questions before us, should induce us to pause in a course of legislation which, looking solely to the attainment of political ends, fails to consider the rights it transgresses, the law which it violates, or the institutions which it imperils.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, March 2, 1867.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill which has been returned by the President of the United States with his objections to this House in which it originated.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

An act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States.

The SPEAKER. The question under the Constitution is, "Will the House on reconsideration agree to the passage of this bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?"

Mr. STEVENS. I move that we proceed at once to consider that question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to allow me one minute of time.

Mr. STEVENS. Certainly.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The minority of this House are profoundly sensible that our official duty, the best interest of our common country would require us, if it were within our physical power, to defeat this bill; but we are equally conscious that no effort of ours can prevent its passage and the consequent accomplishment of what, as we think, it contemplates, a dissolution of the Union and the overthrow and abandonment of our Constitution of Government. We would most assuredly stop it if we could; but as we understand the views of the Speaker and the majority of this House of its rules, we have no power to resist their purposes and numbers. We can only, in the name of the Constitution, in the name of the Republic, in the name of all we hold dear on earth, earnestly, solemnly protest against this action of this Congress.

Mr. STEVENS. If I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDRIDGE,] members upon the other side are willing that this vote shall be taken without further delay. Am I correct in understanding that to be the case?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. That is so, only because you have the power.

Mr. ANCONA. I do not so understand it.

Mr. BOYER. Nor I.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I feel that we have no power to resist the purpose of the numbers on the other side of the House to destroy this Republic by the passage of this bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not wish to call the previous question unless it shall be necessary.

Mr. LE BLOND. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] allow me a moment?

Mr. STEVENS. Certainly.

Mr. LE BLOND. As one member on this side of the House, believing as I do, and as I have expressed myself upon a former occasion, that the passage of this bill would be the death-knell of republican liberty upon this continent, I have but few words to say. I say to gentlemen upon the other side, and I say it plainly and frankly, that if I had assurance now that a sufficient number on this side of the House would stand with me until the end of this session to resist the passage of this bill, it never, never should become a law. I would let the question go over to the next Congress, with sixteen of the States of this Union unrepresented, and leave it to that Congress to determine whether with that number of States unrepresented they would strike a death blow to this Government in the way that is now proposed. Whether that number are here or not, who are willing to stand by me until the end of this session, I know not. But if they are, this bill with my consent shall never pass the American Congress, unless we are overpowered from physical exhaustion or restrained by the rules of the House.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I am to understand that it is not agreed that the vote may be taken upon the passage of this bill without further delay. Am I correct in that?

Mr. LE BLOND. I do not know whether there are members enough on this side willing to join me. We have had no consultation upon the subject.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. With the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] I will say that we understand the Speaker will hold, and the majority of the House will sustain him in that ruling, that on this day you have the right under our rules to suspend all rules under which we can resist the passage of this bill by a resort to such measures as we have sometimes employed to delay action. That being so, we feel that it will be unavailing for us to make any effort to resist the proposed action of the House. And I understand from those friends near me, who think as I do in regard to this bill, in consideration of that view and that purpose expressed, as we understand it to have been, by the Speaker and those who have the power and the will to sustain him in his decision, that it is useless for us to make any effort for delay. Were it not so, could the rules not be suspended, I for one should feel it my duty to stand with the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LE BLOND,] and the few who agree with us, until the last hour of this expiring Congress should have passed, resisting by every power that God has given me the consummation of this unholy design to destroy the Republic.

Mr. BOYER. I desire to say that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] has spoken by no authority from me, and by no authority that I know of delegated to him by any of the gentlemen on this side of the House who surround me. For my own part I desire to say that I deem it my duty to employ all means within my power to defeat this bill; and I am willing to join those on this side of the House in order to effect that end by any legitimate means within our power. If there are not enough on this side to make such an effort effectual, or if physical inability should constrain us either not to begin it, or if after having begun it to cease our action, of course I must yield a reluctant assent. And that is all I desire to say at this time in reference to what I deem it the duty of members on this side to do; if the majority are determined to pass this bill, it shall not be done because I have voluntarily yielded, as a Representative of the people, anything which can in any way be used for the purpose of effecting its defeat.

Mr. STEVENS resumed the floor.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] allow the Chair to make a remark, as he has been alluded to by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDRIDGE?]

Mr. STEVENS. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has alluded to an anticipated ruling of the Chair as if it were something new. The Speaker has stated frankly to gentlemen on both sides of the House, members of the minority as well as of the majority, what all of them know, that every Speaker who has occupied this Chair, of whatever party, has held that on Mondays after the morning hour, and during the last ten days of the session, by the rules which we have ourselves adopted, two thirds of the members present can suspend all the rules in the entire Digest—every rule stands in the way of the immediate action on a bill which the House wishes to dispose of. It is not a new decision, but is as old as the history of the gentlemen who have occupied this chair.

Mr. FINCK. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me a moment.

Mr. STEVENS. Certainly.

Mr. FINCK. Mr. Speaker, in view of what has just been said by the Chair, and of the expression of my friends on this side of the House as to the method of further opposing the passage of this bill I feel it proper to say that I propose now as I have done heretofore, to stand firmly by the opponents of this measure and aid by every legitimate and parliamentary effort which may be employed to defeat this monstrous scheme to subvert constitutional government in this country.

Mr. THAYER. I hope we will have the question now. I think we have had enough of this entertainment.

Mr. ROSS. Will it be consistent with the views of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to postpone action on this until we dispose of the tax bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANLER. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow a test vote to be taken on the postponement of the further consideration of this subject.

Mr. STEVENS. I have listened with patience to gentlemen. I would not be discourteous to any of them, for I am aware of the melancholy feelings with which they are approaching this funeral of the nation. [Laughter.] I find there is difference of opinion among the mourners to an extent which we cannot expect to harmonize. I do not desire to lose the opportunity to pass the bill at once and send it to the Senate, and to proceed to other matters; and if my friend from Maine will offer the resolution he has in his hand I will be much obliged to him.

Mr. BLAINE. I move that the rules be suspended, so that the House shall immediately proceed to vote on the question as required by the Constitution: Will the House on reconsideration agree to the passage of House bill No. 1143, the President's objection to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. STEVENS. I believe such a motion does not require the previous question.

The SPEAKER. It is undebatable.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order, but the motion to suspend the rules has priority. It is to suspend the rule under which the bill may be laid on the table.

Mr. ANCONA. I move to lay the motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has repeatedly decided that a motion to lay on the table a motion for the suspension of the rules is not in order.

Mr. BLAINE. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to lay the bill on the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LE BLOND. I move to take a recess. The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain the motion for the reason that this is a motion to suspend the rules under which he can make that motion.

Mr. FINCK. From that decision I take an appeal.

Mr. LE BLOND demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ANCONA moved to lay the appeal on the table, but subsequently withdrew it.

The question was taken, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House? and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 173, nays 4, not voting 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Ancona, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Broomwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Campbell, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cooper, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Deffrees, Delano, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Garfield, Gossbrenner, Goodyear, Grinnell, Griswold, Abner C. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Rousseau, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Stilwell, Stokes, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, William B.

Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge—173.

NAYS—Messrs. Aaron Harding, Shanklin, Trimble, and Andrew H. Ward—4.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Culver, Dawson, Driggs, Hale, Harris, Hise, Kelso, Latham, Nicholson, Samuel J. Randall, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Whaley, and Wright—14.

So the decision of the chair was sustained.

During the roll-call,

Mr. FINCK said: I think the decision of the Chair is right, and I therefore vote "ay."

Mr. BOYER said: Upon reflection I think the decision of the Chair is right, and I vote "ay."

The result of the vote having been announced as above recorded, the question recurred on Mr. BLAINE'S motion to suspend the rules, upon which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 136, nays 43, not voting 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Deffrees, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hawkins, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Ketcham, Koontz, Kuykendall, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marquette, Marston, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, Raymond, Alexander H. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—136.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Campbell, Chanler, Cooper, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Gossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hise, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Hunter, Jones, Kerr, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Phelps, Radford, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, and Winfield—43.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Arnell, Culver, Driggs, Hale, Asahel W. Hubbard, Kelso, Latham, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, and Wright—12.

So (two thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended, and Mr. BLAINE'S motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. In accordance with the order incorporated in the motion first adopted the House will proceed immediately to vote on the question, "Will the House on reconsideration agree to the passage of the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?"

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I wish to inquire if the Chair will now entertain a motion to lay the bill upon the table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain that motion now.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is there any other motion that the Chair will entertain, or must the House come at once to a direct vote on the passage of the bill over the veto?

The SPEAKER. The order of the House is that the House shall proceed immediately to vote, under the Constitution on the question: Will the House pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? The Chair could not suspend that vote even if the hour for taking a recess had arrived, and the Constitution requires that the question shall be taken by yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—aye 135, nays 48, not voting 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and the Speaker—135.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Campbell, Chanler, Cooper, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Gossbrenner, Goodyear, Hale, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hawkins, Hise, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Hunter, Jones, Kerr, Kuykendall, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Phelps, Radford, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Stilwell, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, and Winfield—48.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Culver, Driggs, Kelso, Latham, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, and Wright—9.

The SPEAKER. On the question, "Will the House, on reconsideration, agree to the passage of an act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding—the yeas are 135, and the nays 48; so (two thirds having voted in the affirmative,) the bill has again passed the House." [Great applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

PAY OF A CONTESTANT.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to ask the consent of the House to correct a clerical error in the resolution passed this morning giving compensation to Mr. Thomas, who contested the seat of Mr. ARNELL. The resolution as adopted directed the Sergeant-at-Arms to pay him out of the contingent fund of the House. The Sergeant-at-Arms does not disburse the contingent fund of the House. I ask that the words "Sergeant-at-Arms" be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk of the House disburses the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. HILL. I will not object on condition that the gentleman intended to be the recipient of this money shall receive no part of it until he takes the test oath. If the resolution can be so modified I will not object.

Mr. DAWES. The oath that we take?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. DAWES. I have no objection to that. Mr. FINCK. I rise to a point of order. I would ask if such a thing was ever required of a contestant before?

The SPEAKER. That is hardly a question of order. It is for the House to determine whether they will require it or not.

Mr. FINCK. I submit that it has never been required heretofore.

Mr. DAWES. It never has been required, but there is no objection to it in this case.

Mr. FINCK. I suppose not, but I do not like the precedent.

The resolution adopted this morning was accordingly modified in the manner suggested by Mr. DAWES and Mr. HILL.

ARMY APPROPRIATION CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. STEVENS. I rise to a privileged question. I submit a report from the committee of conference, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1125) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with the following amendment: Strike out the words "and fifty," in line four, and add at the end of said amendment the following:

Resolved, That the ownership of said bridge shall be and remain in the United States, and the Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company shall have the right of way over said bridge for all purposes of transit across the island and river upon the condition that the said company shall, before any money is expended by the Government, agree to pay and shall secure to the United States—first, half the cost of said bridge, and second, half the expense of keeping said bridge in repair; and upon guarantying said conditions to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War by contract or otherwise, the said company shall have free use of said bridge for purposes of transit, but without any claim to the ownership thereof.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the sixth amendment of the Senate, with an amendment, as follows: strike out the words "the operations of;" and that the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the seventh amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the eighth amendment of the Senate.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the tenth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

And that the Senate recede from their third amendment to the bill.

THADDEUS STEVENS,
SAMUEL SHELLABARGER,
N. P. BANKS,
Managers on the part of the House.

HENRY WILSON,
H. S. LANE,
S. J. KIRKWOOD,

Mr. STEVENS. I demand the previous question on agreeing to the report.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was adopted—ayes 72, noes 30.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the House No. 589, to declare valid and conclusive certain proclamations of the President and acts done in pursuance thereof, or under his orders, in the suppression of the late rebellion against the United States.

COMPOUND-INTEREST NOTES.

Mr. PRICE submitted the following report from a committee of conference:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill No. 1220, entitled "An act to furnish ways and means for the payment of the compound-interest notes," after a full conference have agreed that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows: strike out "one hundred" in last line of first section of said amendment and insert "fifty;" and strike out the second section of said amendment, and that the Senate agree to the said amendments to their amendment.

HIRAM PRICE,
THEODORE M. POMEROY,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN SHERMAN,
REVERDY JOHNSON,
WILLIAM SPRAGUE,

The question was upon agreeing to the report of the committee.

Mr. ANCONA. I ask that the bill be read as proposed to be amended.

The SPEAKER. It will require unanimous consent to have the bill read at this time.

Mr. BEAMAN. I object.

Mr. ANCONA. Then I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] to explain the bill.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered by the House that the amendment of the Senate to the bill passed by the House provided that $100,000,000 of notes bearing interest at the rate of three per cent. be issued, which were intended to take the place of $100,000,000 of the compound-interest notes falling due within the year; that was the substance of the first section of the Senate amendment.

The second section of the amendment provided that no national bank should be allowed to keep its deposits in a bank that paid interest upon them; also, that no national bank should be allowed to keep, as a part of its reserve fund, any of the compound-interest notes now outstanding. The conferees on the part of the Senate have agreed to strike out of the Senate amendment that entire second section.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I must ask the Chair to enforce order. There is so much conversation here that we cannot hear what is said by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.]

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen must preserve order. Persons who desire to converse will retire to the cloak rooms.

Mr. PRICE. Might I be allowed to say a word or two parenthetically? And that is, that I thought about an hour since, that the House ought to congratulate itself upon the fact that while the message from the President was being read there was good order in this Hall for about three quarters of an hour. [Laughter.] I do not know when before I have witnessed such a thing, and I do not know that I shall ever witness it again.

The SPEAKER. The preservation of order in this Hall must depend upon the members themselves. The Chair can only admonish them; he cannot compel them to cease conversation.

Mr. PRICE. The Chair will understand that what I said was intended rather in justification of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood it.

Mr. PRICE. While my voice is not the strongest it certainly is not the weakest in this Hall, and when I speak, with ordinary attention on the part of members, I can be heard distinctly in every part of the House. But a few minutes since gentlemen not more than fifteen feet distant from me said they could not hear me.

I will now repeat, to some extent, my explanation of the amendment of the Senate, and the action recommended by the committee of conference. The amendment of the Senate as it came to us embraced two sections; the first section provided that $100,000,000 of notes bearing three per cent. interest should be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury to take the place of $100,000,000 of compound-interest notes now outstanding and falling due within the ensuing year. The second section provided that no national bank should be allowed to hold, as a part of its reserve fund, any compound-interest notes; and also that no national bank should be allowed to keep its deposits or balances with any bank that paid interest on such deposits or balances.

The action recommended by the committee of conference is simply this: to strike from the amendment of the Senate the entire second section, and to amend the first section by striking out $100,000,000 and inserting $50,000,000. Therefore the effect would be to authorize the issue of $50,000,000 of notes bearing three per cent. interest, to take the place of $50,000,000 of compound-interest notes, now supposed to be held by the national banks as a portion of their required reserve. So far as the effect of that is concerned it is simply to place a three per cent. note where a six per cent. note now is; neither contracting nor expanding the currency. As I have already said, these are the only changes recommended in the Senate amendment. The House bill provided for the retirement of $100,000,000 of compound-interest notes; this bill will provide for the retirement of only $50,000,000. That leaves the additional $50,000,000 with no provision whatever for their retirement, unless the House are willing to take the assurance of the gentlemen who composed the committee of conference on the part of the Senate, and who say—

A MEMBER. You have no right to state what they say.

Mr. PRICE. A friend near me says I have no right to state what they said. I suppose I have a right to say this: that the balance of these compound-interest notes can be taken up by using of the reserve fund in the Treasury the amount over and above that which is necessary to pay the accruing interest on the public debt; or they can be taken up under the provisions of the existing law, which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue $50,000,000 of legal-tender notes as a temporary loan.

Mr. GARFIELD. With the permission of the gentleman from Iowa, I wish to inquire of him whether there is anything in the bill, as agreed upon by the conference committee, which will legalize the keeping of compound-interest notes by the banks as a part of their reserve?

Mr. PRICE. The bill, if passed in the form agreed upon by the committee, will leave the law in that respect precisely as it has been from the beginning; there will be no change whatever in that respect.

Mr. ROSS. I would like to inquire of the gentleman whether he concurs in this report?

Mr. PRICE. I have signed the report.

Mr. THAYER. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the report does not surrender the whole principle contended for by the House in the bill which we passed?

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I have stated to the House the result of the action of the conference committee. I have asked no gentleman to vote for the adoption of this report; and I wish to say now that it does not make a particle of difference to me whether members vote for it or not. I am not here to advocate it further than to say this: if we make no new provision we allow the Secretary of the Treasury to issue $100,000,000 of five-twenty bonds to take up $100,000,000 of compound-interest notes; and if that be done the currency will be contracted to the extent of $100,000,000 within the next year. Under the arrangement embodied in the report $50,000,000 of this amount will be provided for, while the other $50,000,000 may be taken up either in that way or in the manner I have already indicated. It is for the House to decide whether it will adopt the report of the conference committee, as giving us a bill which is better than no legislation, or whether it will reject the report and allow the law to stand as it now is.

Mr. LYNCH. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa whether this report of the conference committee does not provide for a contraction of the currency to the amount of $50,000,000 more than the bill which we voted down; whether the issuing of $50,000,000 of these demand notes instead of $100,000,000 will not necessitate the substitution of $50,000,000 of legal-tender notes by the banks, instead of the $50,000,000 of these demand notes, which the other bill provided for?

Mr. PRICE. I will try to answer that question, although I thought I had already made the matter plain.

There are, in round numbers, $100,000,000 of these compound-interest notes to be provided for; in fact, the amount is much more than that, but we call it that. This amount must be taken up within the present year. If we take them up with long bonds, we contract the currency to the extent of $100,000,000. That is so plain that no man can mistake it. If we take up $50,000,000 of these compound-interest notes with these other notes, then, so far as concerns those $50,000,000, there is neither contraction nor expansion, but the volume of the currency is left precisely as it was. In reference to the other $50,000,000, it will depend entirely upon the Secretary of the Treasury as to how they shall be taken up. If he takes them up with bonds bearing six per cent. interest then there will be a contraction of the currency to that extent. If he takes them up with money now on hand, or money which under existing laws he is authorized to use in that way, then there will be no contraction. I leave the question with the House, which it will decide for itself.

Mr. THAYER. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether he does not regard it as morally certain that the Secretary of the Treasury will not take up the compound-interest notes with legal-tender notes?

Mr. PRICE. Every gentleman must decide that question for himself.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I ask the gentleman from Iowa whether I am to understand that this report of the committee of conference is $50,000,000 worse than the bill we have passed and $50,000,000 better than none at all? I understand if we pass this we are better by $50,000,000 than if we reject it.

Mr. PRICE. I will answer the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ROSS. Let the gentleman also tell us whether one committee of conference has not surrendered.

Mr. PRICE. I will answer the gentleman from New York. He asks whether the report of the committee of conference is not $50,000,000 worse than the bill passed by the House, and $50,000,000 better than nothing at all. That is pretty nearly true, but not entirely so. It is $50,000,000 better than nothing, but not $50,000,000 worse than the bill passed by the House, for the reason that the Secretary of the Treasury may take up the compound-interest notes with the money he has now on hand. I yield now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is a member of the conference committee.

Mr. STEVENS. I have risen to state exactly the condition of the compromise, not to argue it, as I did not sign the report. Our bill provided for redeeming $100,000,000 of compound-interest notes by issuing non-interest-bearing notes to that amount to take their place. The Senate provided three per cent. scrip instead of legal-tender notes, and they were to be held as reserve by the bank. The committee of conference have not adopted the principle of the House, but have surrendered it so far as to agree to one half of the amount, not one half of the principle of the Senate, but the one half of the sum. I now call the previous question.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that he was directed to communicate to it Senate bill No. 453, concerning the tenure of certain civil offices, with the message of the President returning the same with his objections, and the proceedings of the Senate thereon.

COMPOUND-INTEREST NOTES—AGAIN.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. LYNCH moved to lay the report of the committee of conference on the table.

The motion was disagreed to.

The question then recurred on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. BENJAMIN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 83, nays 83, not voting 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Bergen, Bidwell, Blaine, Boyer, Brandegee, Broomall, Campbell, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Cooper, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Eliot, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Henderson, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Wilson, and Windom—83.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Blow, Culver, Denison, Driggs, Aaron Harding, Demas Hubbard, Kelso, Latham, Longyear, Marquette, McCullough, McIndoe, Phelps, Plants, Samuel J. Randall, Rousseau, Strouse, Nelson Taylor, John L. Thomas, Robert T. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Woodbridge, and Wright—25.

There being a tie, The SPEAKER voted in the affirmative. So the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed to the report of the committee of conference; and also to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. THAYER. On the latter motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONKLING. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I renew it.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman vote with the majority?

Mr. INGERSOLL. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. Then he cannot make it.

Mr. ROGERS. I voted with the majority and I make the motion to reconsider.

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER. I move to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. THAYER. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 72, nays 82, not voting 37; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Arnell, Baldwin, Banks, Bergen, Bidwell, Blaine, Brandegee, Broomall, Campbell, Chanler, Conkling, Cooper, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Dodge, Eliot, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hart, Henderson, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Randall, Rousseau, Stillwell, Stokes, Strouse, Nelson Taylor, John L. Thomas, Robert T. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Woodbridge, and Wright—37.

So the motion to reconsider was not laid on the table.

During the call of the yeas and nays, the hour of half past four having arrived, the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, the papers in the case of Mary N. Stickney, heir of John Burrett, were withdrawn from the files of the House.

On motion of Mr. SPALDING, the application of the owners of the bark Thermite, the schooner Widderlite, and the schooner Etowah for registers were withdrawn from the files of the House.

On motion of Mr. PIKE, the papers in the case of the owners of the bark Ange Gardien, were withdrawn from the files of the House.

On motion of Mr. VAN AERNAM, the papers in the case of William G. Ingraham were withdrawn from the files of the House.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. RICE, by unanimous consent, the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1176) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1868, were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER stated that the pending question before the House was on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House this afternoon agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill in relation to compound-interest notes.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. As the House is not yet full, if there is no objection, I move to take up the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 1173, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes. No objection being made the amendments of the Senate were taken up from the Speaker's table and considered.

Sundry verbal amendments were concurred in or non-concurred in upon the recommendation of the committee; other amendments were acted upon as follows:

Thirteenth amendment:

Insert:
For a new light-house at Punta Arenas, California, $64,000.

The committee recommend concurrence.
The amendment was concurred in.

Fourteenth amendment:

Insert:
For a new light-house at Cape Blanco, Oregon, $75,000.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.
The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixteenth amendment:

Insert:
For purchase of a site and erection of a building for custom-house and post office at Machias, Maine, $20,000.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.
The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventeenth amendment:

Insert:
For custom-house and post office at Astoria, Oregon, $25,000: Provided, That vessels may load and unload at the city of Portland, in said State, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.
The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twenty-ninth amendment:

Insert:
For construction of a new greenhouse, with central dome and a wing to correspond in size with the present greenhouse in the Botanic Garden, to be built of iron and glass, according to a plan prepared by the architect of the Capitol extension, and approved by the joint Committee on the Library, $35,000, the same to be expended under the direction of the joint Committee of the Library of Congress.

The committee recommend concurrence.

On concurring in the amendment no quorum voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ASHLEY, of Ohio, and WARD, of New York, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 50.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-eighth amendment:

Insert:
To enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to erect a Department of Agriculture on reservation No. 2, in the city of Washington, according to the plan proposed by him, to be constructed under the general supervision of law relative to construction of public buildings, $100,000.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. DELANO. I understand this is an appropriation introduced by the Senate for the purpose of erecting a building for the Agricultural Department. The importance of the interest which is represented by this Department demands our fostering care and attention, although I am not, as I think I do not intend to be, prodigal of the public funds, yet I believe this appropriation is demanded. I hope ere long that the time will come when this Government will have a department of industry when this agricultural bureau will become one of the bureaus of that department, and I think this is a proper time to commence this work.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would inquire whether this contemplates the beginning of another large public building or whether it is merely laying the corner-stone?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It is only for a survey of the ground. [Laughter.]

Mr. DELANO. I do not understand that it contemplates a large public building, but one that will accommodate the necessities of this Department. It has now no building and no place commensurate with its wants and necessities, and unless we intend to do as the Government has heretofore done, ignore the agricultural interest of the country, I hope we shall vote for this appropriation.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not propose to argue this question. It contemplates, as I understand, the erection of another public building. I think it is hardly a suitable time, at this period of the session, to enter upon such a work, and that we had better postpone it till the next Congress, when it can be considered more maturely. It is a work not for a few years, but for the far distant future of this great capital of the nation.

Mr. BIDWELL. I hope the House will concur in this amendment. It is certainly necessary, if there is to be a Department of Agriculture, to have some building in which to transact the business of that Department. The present accommodations are wholly unsuited for the wants of the bureau. I believe that $100,000 laid out according to the plan proposed, which I have seen, will make a building that will answer for a number of years for the Department. Unless you begin now to do something to answer the agricultural wants of the country they will outgrow the means provided by Congress. It seems to me that of all the Departments of the Government none deserves greater encouragement than that of agriculture. I am looking forward to the time when that will be one of the Executive Departments of the Government. Do gentlemen say that the great agricultural interest of this country ought not to be represented in the Cabinet? If so what interest ought to be there represented? I hope the House will concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. STEVENS. I cannot at this late hour afford to talk. I move the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof, there were—ayes 30, noes 69.

Mr. BIDWELL. I call the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. ANCONA. I call for tellers on concurring in the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. ANCONA and ELIOT.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes thirty-two, noes not counted.

So the amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed to the appropriation of $35,000 for the erection of a Government greenhouse. I think the amendment was not understood. Some gentlemen thought it was for repairs of the greenhouse and the White House, others that it was for some other purpose.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I only want a vote by division or tellers.

Mr. STEVENS. With that understanding I withdraw it.

The question being put, there were—ayes 53, noes 62.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I call the yeas and yeas.

On ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes sixteen.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I call for tellers. I dislike to consume the time, but I hope we shall vote this down.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. SCOFIELD and STEVENS.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 68.

So the motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

Forty-third amendment:

On page 21, after line seventeen, insert the following additional section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings is hereby abolished; and it shall be the duty of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a competent civil engineer, whose compensation shall be $4,000 per annum, who shall perform all the duties now required by law of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, and who shall also have the superintendence of the Washington aqueduct and of all public works and improvements of the Government of the United States in the District of Columbia, unless otherwise provided by law; and the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall hereafter appoint the members of the Capitol police.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-sixth amendment:

On page 23, line three, after "number" insert "now allowed by law."

The committee recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-seventh amendment:

On page 23, line three, after "number" strike out all to "in" on line five.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-eighth amendment:

On page 23, line fourteen, after "exceeding" insert "two dollars per page for the publication of treaties and laws, and not exceeding."

The committee recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-ninth amendment:

On page 23, line fifteen, after "space" insert "for the publication of advertisements."

The committee recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifty-second amendment:

On page 24, after line three, insert: Provided, That the rates fixed in this section to be paid for the publication of the treaties and laws of the United States in the States therein designated, shall also be paid for the same publication in all the States not designated in this section.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifty-third amendment:

At the end of the bill add the following new section: SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay to such persons as were actually employed as assistant assessors in the collection of internal revenue in the rebel States prior to the 1st day of August, 1866, compensation at the rate prescribed by law; and an amount sufficient for that purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 793) to provide increased revenue from imported wool, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 859) to declare valid and conclusive certain proclamations of the President, and acts done in pursuance thereof, or of his orders, in the suppression of the late rebellion against the United States; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 300) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of John Sedgwick, collector of internal revenue for the third collection district of California.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

The House resumed the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the miscellaneous appropriation bill.

Fifty-fourth amendment:

Add the following new section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to sell at public auction the following property belonging to the United States, namely: the building and grounds known as the old custom-house at Alexandria, Virginia; the building and grounds known as the old custom-house at New Haven, Connecticut; the building and grounds known as the old custom-house at Portsmouth, New Hampshire; the parcel of ground known as the old custom-house lot at Norfolk, Virginia; the parcel or lot of ground purchased in the city of Perth Amboy, New Jersey, for the erection of a custom-house, and the custom-house and grounds at Sackett's Harbor, New York; and is hereby authorized to make, execute, and deliver the needful conveyances to the purchaser or purchasers thereof.

The committee recommend concurrence.

Mr. LE BLOND. I suppose if the question is raised in regard to that not being germane to this bill, it would perhaps be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. Points of order cannot be made on amendments made by the Senate in accordance with their rules.

Mr. LE BLOND. I understand that this is an amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. This is a Senate amendment.

Mr. LE BLOND. I would inquire if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. STEVENS] what is the reason for this appropriation?

Mr. STEVENS. This amendment originated with the Senate, and not in our committee. It is now held by the authorities, I understand, that this property is no longer necessary for the purposes of the Government.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-fifth amendment:

Add the following new section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to procure an examination to be made of the condition of the public buildings in the Territory of New Mexico, and report to the next Congress an estimate of what amount is necessary to complete the same.

The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-sixth amendment:

Add the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That all advertisements, notices, and proposals for contracts for all the Executive Departments of the Government and the laws passed by Congress, and executive proclamations and treaties, shall hereafter be advertised by publication in the two daily papers published in the District of Columbia, now selected under the act of the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, making appropriation for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1867, and for other purposes, until otherwise ordered by Congress, and in no other District of Columbia papers: Provided, That the charges for such publications shall not be higher than such as are paid by individuals for advertising in said papers: And provided also, That the same publications shall be made in each of said papers equally as to frequency.

The committee recommend concurrence, with an amendment, adding the following:

Provided, That whenever any of the Executive Departments shall order any printing of any kind which cannot be done at the Public Printing Office, the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate shall name the printing office at which it shall be executed; and the rates therefor shall not exceed such as are paid by individuals for advertising in said papers.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, joint resolutions and bills of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 282) for the relief of James J. Hudnall;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 254) for the relief of Almansor Eaton, receiver of public money for the Land Office at Stevens' Point, Wisconsin;

An act (H. R. No. 483) for the relief of Norman J. Hall;

An act (H. R. No. 1168) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth F. Chipman, widow of Major Charles Chipman, deceased;

An act (H. R. No. 825) for the relief of Henry Rudd, of Henry county, Iowa;

An act (H. R. No. 346) for the relief of Hugh Leddy; and

An act (H. R. No. 966) for the relief of Ernest F. Kleinschmidt, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed an act (H. R. No. 1095) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay a certain draft to W. W. Potter, late military agent of the State of New York, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. NIBLACK. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what two papers the amendment refers to as having been selected under the act of last session for the publication of these advertisements?

Mr. STEVENS. The two papers having the largest circulation have been the Star and the Chronicle. They are the papers which have been selected.

Mr. NIBLACK. Well, sir, I think it is an extraordinary proposition that the heads of the Executive Departments shall not be allowed to control the little patronage that may grow out of this matter of printing. I believe that this is the first time in the history of any Administration that the attempt has been made to deprive the executive officers of this Government of the privilege of distributing their little patronage of this sort to whomever they may feel inclined to give it. They are charged with the execution of the laws in this respect; they are charged with the making of these contracts; they are held responsible to the country to some extent for the enforcement of these laws and the proper making of these contracts; and as an incident to the exercise of their official duties they ought certainly to be allowed the poor privilege of designating what particular printing offices shall do the little work that is necessary in the way of publication of notices, &c.

We have a law, or at least a bill which we have passed on this subject will very soon be a law, preventing these executive officers from being removed except with the consent of the Senate. The Senate, therefore, is to have under its charge the appointment of these executive officers, or at least is to control their appointment in this negative way. We permit them to control the appointments to office under them, to appoint whomever they choose, and yet, as I have already said, they are to be denied the poor privilege of saying who shall do their printing.

I understand no further amendment is in order; but I would suggest to the chairman to modify the last proviso so as to say that the printing shall not be done in any paper in which the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of this House has an interest. The position of those gentlemen would suggest this modification. Delicacy on their part would seem to demand it, although I do not understand this House is much affected by delicacy on any subject. One of them, at least, ought not to be put in the position of selecting his own paper in which these advertisements shall be published, as his duty to his party might seem to him to require. I think the whole thing is extraordinary.

Mr. LE BLOND. I think the gentleman who owns the Chronicle was never known to have any kind of delicacy, and of course he would decide for himself.

Mr. NIBLACK. It is an innovation which I for one cannot favor. My object in rising was to hear what the chairman of the committee had to say. I was not present when the proviso was adopted in committee.

Mr. STEVENS. In regard to advertisements there is a law long since passed in conformity with this arrangement that these advertisements should be published in the two papers having the largest circulation. That law is not altered at all.

While I am up I will say there is an error in transcribing; it should be "Government Printing Office" instead of the "Public Printing Office."

The residue of the provision is for printing blanks, not advertisements, as they are provided for by the law, but for the printing of blanks, ordered largely by the Departments.

I will say frankly to the gentleman it has been found on inquiry, ever since the late rebellion, in our party none of the Executive Departments have permitted a single blank to be printed in a Republican office. They have sent every blank in the last two years to the Republican, an apostate paper in this town, to the National Intelligencer, and to another paper more legitimately the organ of the present Administration, the Constitutional Union. Every blank, without a single exception, has been sent to this office ever since the time I have spoken of. It is to control that, I confess, this provision has been put into this bill. It is a matter of strict justice to the large part of the community represented in this House.

Before sitting down, as I cannot modify the amendment of the committee, I move to strike out "Secretary of the Senate." I now call the previous question.

The amendments to the Senate amendment were severally agreed to; and then the amendment of the Senate, as amended, was concurred in.

Fifty-seventh amendment:

Insert:

And be it further enacted, That all laws and parts of laws conflicting with the above provisions with respect to the official advertising in the District of Columbia be, and are hereby, repealed.

The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-eighth amendment:

Add:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War is authorized at his discretion to increase the pay of the clerks at the United States armory at Springfield, Massachusetts, to $1,200 per annum, instead of $800, as now fixed by law.

The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-ninth amendment:

Add:

And be it further enacted, That the laws relating to the Army, the Navy, the Militia, and the Marine corps of the United States be published officially in the "United States Army and Navy Journal," at such rates as are fixed by the Secretary of State for publishing the laws of the United States.

The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. STEVENS moved that a committee of conference be requested on the disagreeing votes between the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. STEVENS, Mr. VAN AERNAM, and Mr. NIBLACK as managers of said conference on its part.

COMPOUND-INTEREST NOTES.

The SPEAKER stated the question recurred on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House adopted the report of the committee of conference on the compound-interest note bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. Then the report stands agreed to.

TENURE OF CIVIL OFFICES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message of the Senate:

IN SENATE, March 2, 1867.

The President of the United States having returned to the Senate, in which it originated, bill entitled "An act regulating the tenure of certain civil offices," with his objections thereto, the Senate proceeded in pursuance to the Constitution to reconsider the same, and resolved said bill pass, two thirds agreeing to pass the same.

The SPEAKER then laid before the House the following veto message of the President of the United States:

To the Senate of the United States:

I have carefully examined the bill to regulate the tenure of certain civil offices. The material portion of the bill is contained in the first section, and is of the effect following, namely:

That every person holding any civil office to which he has been appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and every person who shall hereafter be appointed to any such office, and shall become duly qualified to act therein, is and shall be entitled to hold such office until a successor shall have been appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and duly qualified; and that the Secretaries of State, of the Treasury, of War, of the Navy, and of the Interior, the Postmaster General, and the Attorney General, shall hold their offices respectively for and during the term of the President by whom they may have been appointed, and for one month thereafter, subject to removal by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

These provisions are qualified by a reservation in the fourth section, "that nothing contained in the bill shall be construed to extend the term of any office the duration of which is limited by law." In effect the bill provides that the President shall not remove from their places any of the civil officers whose terms of service are not limited by law without the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States. The bill, in this respect, conflicts, in my judgment, with the Constitution of the United States. The question, as Congress is well aware, is by no means a new one. That the power of removal is constitutionally vested in the President of the United States is a principle which has been not more distinctly declared by judicial authority and judicial commentators than it has been uniformly practiced upon by the legislative and executive departments of the Government. The question arose in the House of Representatives so early as the 16th day of June, 1789, on the bill for establishing an executive Department, denominated "The Department of Foreign Affairs." The first clause of the bill, after recapitulating the functions of that officer and defining his duties, had these words: "To be removable from office by the President of the United States." It was moved to strike out these words, and the motion was sustained with great ability and vigor. It was insisted that the President could not constitutionally exercise the power of removal exclusive of the Senate; that the Federalist so interpreted the Constitution when arguing for its adoption by the several States; that the Constitution had nowhere given the President power of removal, either expressly or by strong implication; but, on the contrary, had distinctly provided for removals from office by impeachment only. A construction which denied the power of removal by the President was further maintained by arguments drawn from the danger of the abuse of the power; from the supposed tendency of an exposure of public officers to capricious removal, to impair the efficiency of the civil service; from the alleged injustice and hardship of displacing incumbents, dependent upon their official stations, without sufficient consideration; from a supposed want of responsibility on the part of the President, and from an imagined defect of guarantees against a vicious President, who might incline to abuse the power.

On the other hand, an exclusive power of removal by the President was defended as a true exposition of the text of the Constitution. It was maintained that there are certain causes for which persons ought to be removed from office without being guilty of treason, bribery, or malfeasance, and that the nature of things demands that it should be so. "Suppose," it was said, "a man becomes insane by the visitation of God, and is likely to ruin our affairs: are the hands of Government to be confined from warding off the evil? Suppose a person in office not possessing the talents he was judged to have at the time of the appointment, is the error not to be corrected: suppose he acquire vicious habits and incurable indolence, or totally neglect the duties of his office, which shall work mischief to the public welfare, is there no way to arrest the threatened danger? Suppose he become odious and unpopular by reason of the measures he pursues, and this he may do without committing any positive offense against the law, must he preserve his office in despite of the popular will? Suppose him grasping for his own aggrandizement and the elevation of his connections by every means short of the treason defined by the Constitution, hurrying your affairs to the precipice of destruction, endangering your domestic tranquility, plundering you of the means of defense, alienating the affections of your allies, and promoting the spirit of discord, must the tardy, tedious, desultory road, by way of impeachment, be traveled to overtake the man who, barely confining himself within the letter of the law, is employed in drawing off the vital principle of the Government?" The nature of things, the great objects of society, the express objects of the Constitution itself require that this thing should be otherwise. To unite the Senate with the President "in the exercise of the power," it was said, "would involve us" in the most serious difficulty. "Suppose a discovery of any of these events should take place when the Senate is not in session, how is the remedy to be applied? The evil could be avoided in no other way than by the Senate sitting always." In regard to the danger of the power being abused if exercised by one man, it was said "that the danger is as great with respect to the Senate, who are assembled from various parts of the continent, with different impressions and opinions;" that such a body is more likely to misuse the power of removal than the man whom the united voice of America calls to the presidential chair. As the nature of Government requires the power of removal, it was maintained "that it should be exercised in this way by the hand capable of exerting itself with effect, and the power must be conferred on the President by the Constitution as the executive officer of the Government." Mr. Madison, whose adverse opinion in the Federalist had been relied upon by those who denied the exclusive power, now participated in the debate. He declared that he had reviewed his former opinions, and he summed up the whole case as follows:

"The Constitution affirms that the executive power is vested in the President. Are there exceptions to this proposition? Yes, there are. The Constitution says that in appointing to office the Senate shall be associated with the President, unless in the case of inferior officers, when the law shall otherwise direct. Have we (that is, Congress) a right to extend this exception? I believe not. If the Constitution has invested all executive power in the President, I return to assert that the Legislature has no right to diminish or modify his executive authority. The question now resolves itself into this: is the power of displacing an executive power? I conceive that if any power whatever is in the Executive, it is in the power of appointing, overseeing, and controlling those who execute the laws. If the Constitution had not qualified the power of the President in appointing to office by associating the Senate with him in that business, would it not be clear that he would have the right by virtue of his executive power to make such appointment? Should we be authorized, in defiance of that clause in the Constitution—'the executive power shall be vested in the President'—to unite the Senate with the President in the appointment to office? I conceive not. It is admitted that we should not be authorized to do this. I think it may be disputed whether we have a right to associate them in removing persons from office, the one power being as much of an executive nature as the other; and the first is authorized by being excepted out of the general rule established by the Constitution in these words: 'The executive power shall be vested in the President.'"

The question thus ably and exhaustively argued was decided by the House of Representatives, by a vote of 34 to 20, in favor of the principle that the executive power of removal is vested by the Constitution in the Executive, and in the Senate by the casting vote of the Vice President. The question has often been raised in subsequent times of high excitement, and the practice of the Government has nevertheless conformed in all cases to the decision thus early made.

The question was revived during the Administration of President Jackson, who made, as is well recollected, a very large number of removals, which were made an occasion of close and rigorous scrutiny and remonstrance. The subject was long and earnestly debated in the Senate, and the early construction of the Constitution was nevertheless freely accepted as binding and conclusive upon Congress.

The question came before the Supreme Court of the United States in January, 1839, ex parte Herren. It was declared by the court on that occasion that the power of removal from office was a subject much disputed, and upon which a great diversity of opinion was entertained in the early history of the Government. This related, however, to the power of the President to remove officers appointed with the concurrence of the Senate, and the great question was whether the removal was to be by the President alone or with the concurrence of the Senate, both constituting the appointing power. No one denied the power of the President and Senate jointly to remove where the tenure of the office was not fixed by the Constitution, which was a full recognition of the principle that the power of removal was incident to the power of appointment; but it was very early adopted as a practical construction of the Constitution that this power was vested in the President alone, and such would appear to have been the legislative construction of the Constitution, for in the organization of the three great Departments of State, War, and Treasury, in 1789, provision was made for the appointment of a subordinate officer by the head of the Department, who should have charge of the records, books, and papers appertaining to the office when the head of the Department should be removed from office by the President of the United States. When the Navy Department was established, in the year 1798, provision was made for the charge and custody of the books, records, and documents of the Department in case of vacancy in the office of Secretary, by removal or otherwise. It is not here said "by removal of the President," as it is done with respect to the heads of the other Departments; yet there can be no doubt that he holds his office with the same tenure as the other Secretaries, and is removable by the President. The change of phraseology arose probably from its having become the settled and well-understood construction of the Constitution that the power of removal was vested in the President alone in such cases, although the appointment of the officer is by the President and Senate. (13 Peters, page 139.)

Our most distinguished and accepted commentators upon the Constitution concur in the construction thus early given by Congress, and thus sanctioned by the Supreme Court. After a full analysis of the congressional debate to which I have referred, Mr. Justice Story comes to this conclusion:

"After a most animated discussion, the vote finally taken in the House of Representatives was affirmative of the power of removal in the President without any cooperation of the Senate, by the vote of 34 members against 20. In the Senate the clause in the bill affirming the power was carried by the casting vote of the Vice President. That the final decision of this question so made was greatly influenced by the exalted character of the President then in office was asserted at the time, and has always been believed; yet the doctrine was opposed as well as supported by the highest talent and patriotism of the country. The public have acquiesced in this decision, and it constitutes perhaps the most extraordinary case in the history of the Government of a power conferred by implication on the Executive by the assent of a bare majority of Congress which has not been questioned on many other occasions."

The commentator adds:

"Nor is this general acquiescence and silence without a satisfactory explanation."

Chancellor Kent's remarks on the subject are as follows: "On the first organization of the Government it was made a question whether the power of removal in case of officers appointed to hold at pleasure resided nowhere but in the body which appointed," and of course whether the consent of the Senate was not requisite to remove. This was the construction given to the Constitution while it was pending for ratification before the State conventions by the author of the Federalist. But the construction which was given to the Constitution by Congress after great consideration and discussion was different. The words of the act (establishing the Treasury Department) are, 'and whenever the same shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, or in any case of vacancy in the office, the assistant shall act.' This amounted to a legislative construction of the Constitution, and it has ever since been acquiesced in and acted upon as a decisive authority in the case.

It applies equally to every other officer of the Government appointed by the President whose term of duration is not specially declared. It is supported by the weighty reason that the subordinate officers in the executive department ought to hold at the pleasure of the head of the department, because he is invested generally with the executive authority, and the participation in that authority by the Senate was an exception to a general principle, and ought to be taken strictly. The President is the great responsible officer for the execution of the law, and the power of removal was incidental to that duty, and might often be requisite to fulfill it. Thus has the important question presented by this bill been settled, in the language of the late Daniel Webster, (who, while dissenting from it, admitted that it was settled,) by construction, settled by the practice of the Government, and settled by statute. The events of the last war furnished a practical confirmation of the wisdom of the Constitution as it has hitherto been maintained in many of its parts, including that which is now the subject of consideration. When the war broke out rebel enemies, traitors, abettors, and sympathizers were found in every department of the Government, as well in the civil service as in the land and naval military service. They were found in Congress and among the keepers of the Capitol, in foreign missions, in each and all of the Executive Departments, in the judicial service, in the Post Office, and among the agents for conducting Indian affairs, and upon probable suspicion they were promptly displaced by my predecessor, so far as they held their offices under executive authority, and their duties were confided to new and loyal successors. No complaints against that power or doubts of its wisdom were entertained in any quarter. I sincerely trust and believe that no such civil war is likely to occur again. I cannot doubt, however, that in whatever form and on whatever occasion sedition can rise, an effort to hinder or embarrass or defeat the legitimate action of this Government, whether by preventing the collection of revenue or disturbing the public peace, or separating the States or betraying the country to a foreign enemy, the power of removal from office by the Executive, as it has heretofore existed and been practiced, will be found indispensable. Under these circumstances, as a depository of the executive authority of the nation, I do not feel at liberty to unite with Congress in reversing it by giving my approval of the bill.

At the early day when the question was settled, and indeed at the several periods when it has subsequently been agitated, the success of the Constitution of the United States as a new and peculiar system of free representative government was held doubtful in other countries, and was even a subject of patriotic apprehension among the American people themselves. A trial of nearly eighty years, through the vicissitudes of foreign conflicts and of civil war, is confidently regarded as having extinguished all such doubts and apprehensions for the future. During that eighty years the people of the United States have enjoyed a measure of security, peace, prosperity, and happiness never surpassed by any nation. It cannot be doubted that the triumphant success of the Constitution is due to the wonderful wisdom with which the functions of government were distributed between the three principal departments—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial—and to the fidelity with which each has confined itself or been confined by the general voice of the nation within its peculiar and proper sphere.

While a just, proper, and watchful jealousy of executive power constantly prevails, as it ought ever to prevail, yet it is equally true that an efficient Executive, capable, in the language of the oath prescribed to the President, of executing the laws within the sphere of executive action, of preserving, protecting, and defending the Constitution of the United States, is an indispensable security for tranquility at home, and peace, honor, and safety abroad. Governments have been erected in many countries upon our model. If one or many of them have thus far failed in fully securing to their people the benefits which we have derived from our system, it may be confidently asserted that their misfortune has resulted from their unfortunate failure to maintain the integrity of each of the three great departments while preserving harmony among them all.

Having at an early period accepted the Constitution in regard to the executive office in the sense in which it was interpreted with the concurrence of its founders, I have found no sufficient grounds in the arguments now opposed to that construction or in any assumed necessity of the times for changing those opinions. For these reasons I return the bill to the Senate, in which House it originated, for the further consideration of Congress, which the Constitution prescribes. Inasmuch as the several parts of the bill which I have not considered are matters chiefly of detail, and are based altogether upon the theory of the Constitution from which I am obliged to dissent, I have not thought it necessary to examine them with a view to make them an occasion of distinct and special objections. Experience, I think, has shown that it is the easiest, as it is also the most attractive, of studies to frame constitutions for the self-government of free States and nations.

But I think experience has equally shown that it is the most difficult of all political labors to preserve and maintain such free constitutions of self-government when once happily established. I know no other way in which they can be preserved and maintained except by a constant adherence to them through the various vicissitudes of national existence, with such adaptations as may become necessary, always to be effected, however, through the agencies and in the forms prescribed in the original constitutions themselves. Whenever administration fails or seems to fail in securing any of the great ends for which republican government is established, the proper course seems to be to renew the original spirit and forms of the Constitution itself.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, March 2, 1867.

The SPEAKER. The question under the Constitution is: "Will the House, on reconsideration, agree to the passage of the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?"

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, this bill and another covering the same subject occupied the attention of this House for many days and received a full and thorough discussion. At this hour of the session it is not of course expected that it is possible that that discussion can be renewed. I presume there will be no disposition on the part of the House, or any portion of it, to reopen the discussion or to take any other course upon the bill than to come at once to the vote provided by the Constitution; and for the purpose of obviating the necessity of all formal motions by way of the previous question or otherwise, I ask, unless there are gentlemen who have suggestions to make, which I will listen to if desired, that by unanimous consent the bill be put at once upon its passage in the form prescribed by the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is: "Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?" The Constitution requires that that question shall be taken by yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 133, nays 37, not voting 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Defrees, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hawkins, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Ketchum, Koons, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marquette, Marston, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Mercut, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Stokes, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—133.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Campbell, Chanler, Cooper, Dawson, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Hise, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Hunter, Jones, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Radford, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, and Winfield—37.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Blow, Culver, Denison, Driggs, Harris, Demas Hubbard, Kelso, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, Noell, Phelps, Samuel J. Randall, Rousseau, Stevens, Stillwell, Nathaniel G. Taylor, John L. Thomas, Elihu B. Washburne, Whaley, and Wright—21.

The SPEAKER. Two thirds having voted in the affirmative, and it having been certified that the Senate of the United States, after considering the objections of the President, by a two-third vote agreed, on reconsideration, to the passage of the bill, and the House on similar reconsideration having agreed to its passage by a similar vote, I do by the authority of the Constitution declare that an act regulating the tenure of certain civil offices has become a law, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding. [Slight applause.]

Mr. HALE. Is a motion to reconsider and lay on the table necessary?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The vote cannot be reconsidered.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KASSON, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the amendments of the Senate to bill of the House No. 1176, making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending 30th June, 1868.

The Clerk read the first amendment of the Senate, as follows:

Page 2, after line eleven insert:
For purchase of wharf adjoining the navy-yard at Charlestown, Massachusetts, $135,000: Provided, That this sum shall cover the whole cost of the property and it can be acquired on terms satisfactory to the Secretary of the Navy.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence in the amendments.

Mr. BANKS. I rise to a question of order. This amendment makes an appropriation. I submit that it is necessary that it shall be first considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that unless the rules be suspended this amendment with the other amendments to this bill must be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. KASSON. Then I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. BANKS. I trust the rules will not be suspended for that purpose.

Mr. KASSON. I know of no other way in which the necessary appropriations for carrying on the naval Department can be made.

Mr. BANKS. This is not a necessary appropriation. It has been defeated in two Congresses.

Mr. KASSON. The fate of the whole bill is involved, and if objection is made to the consideration of the amendments in the House I shall move to suspend the rules.

Mr. BANKS. I object.

Mr. KASSON. Then I move to suspend the rules, so that the amendments may be considered in the House.

The question was put; and there were—ayes 52, noes 44.

So (two thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

Mr. BANKS. If the gentleman will waive this amendment I will not object to the consideration of the others in the House.

Mr. KASSON. I am perfectly willing to have a separate vote on the question of concurrence. We must have it in fact and we may as well have it in the House.

If I could see any object in going into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union I should not object. The whole question of the appropriations necessary for the support of the Navy is united in this bill, and we can have a separate vote in the House on this amendment.

Mr. BANKS. I will not waive the point of order if this appropriation is to be forced upon the House. It is an unjust appropriation, unjust to the people of Charlestown, unnecessary to the Government, and a waste of money.

Mr. STEVENS. May I say that this objection may involve the loss of the whole bill.

Mr. BANKS. I would rather that the bill should be lost than this appropriation should be made.

Mr. STEVENS. We can have a separate vote on this amendment.

Mr. BANKS. I must persist in my objection if this amendment is to be pressed. If gentlemen will agree to a non-concurrence in the amendment I will not insist on the objection.

Mr. KASSON. We agree that there shall be a vote on it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if the bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union it will come up for consideration after the deficiency bill is disposed of. The deficiency bill is now pending unfinished in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. KASSON. There is a great deal of labor to be done by the Clerks in engrossing the bill, and it is of great importance that it should be put in hand at an early time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts insists on his objection, and the amendments of the Senate are referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

TOWNS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. BIDWELL. I ask unanimous consent for the House to take from the Speaker's table and consider the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the bill of the Senate No. 532, for the relief of the inhabitants of cities and towns upon the public lands.

No objection was made.

The amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House, was as follows:

Add to the end of the amendment of the House, as follows:

And provided further, That no titles shall be acquired under the provisions of this act to any mine of gold, silver, cinnabar, or copper.

Mr. BIDWELL. I move the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BIDWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended, and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ALLISON in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 1227, making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes.

The pending paragraph was the following:

For the purpose of aiding the American Colonization Society by furnishing conveyance and support to such parties as may desire to emigrate to the republic of Liberia, $50,000.

The pending question was upon the amendment of Mr. DAVIS, to add to the paragraph the following:

Provided, however, That no portion of the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended or drawn from the Treasury until after the existing laws of the republic of Liberia excluding white men from the right of suffrage, on account of color, shall be repealed, and official evidence of such repeal shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State of the United States.

Mr. DAVIS. I have ever been a supporter of the American Colonization Society. I believe it has conferred vast benefits upon the people of Africa as well as upon the colored people in this country. And if this Government were now in a condition to make an appropriation of $50,000, $100,000, or $200,000 for the benefit of this society in Africa I should feel I was doing a just and proper missionary work in voting for it. But in the present condition of the country I think we would be unwise to make this appropriation; especially when we know that the republic of Liberia excludes from the right of the elective franchise any man who is not an African by blood; no white man is allowed to exercise the right of franchise within the domain of that republic.

Now, in this country we have been setting an example which I think they should follow before we expend any money for their benefit. We have opened the gates wide in the District of Columbia and allowed men to vote without reference to their race or color; and I have no doubt we will soon allow all people to vote without regard to sex.

I think it would be unwise to make this appropriation at this time; and I shall vote against the appropriation with or without the amendment which I have offered, because I do not believe that when a public debt of vast magnitude is pressing upon the country, I am opposed to it, especially when we have refused to adopt measures to increase our revenue by a proper protection of our national industry; when we have failed to adopt legislation which would invite enterprise and capital to our country. Therefore I do not think we should now go into business as a missionary society. If we have any money to appropriate for missionary services, I recommend that it should be applied in this country, and that, too, not a great way from the capital of this Republic.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will say that if we have money to appropriate for the Freedmen's Bureau we can certainly appropriate some money for this colonization society, for in my humble judgment this is the most economical mode in which we can dispose of our money. I simply desire to say that in my judgment $50,000 expended in this way is more economically, wisely, and justly expended than the same amount possibly can be for the Freedmen's Bureau.

I now append to my remarks, and make a part of them, the following address of our former consul-general at Liberia, Mr. Hanson:

Address of Hon. Abraham Hanson, consul general from the United States:

"In order to assure you how far you may give credence to my words, suffer me to state what means of information I have had.

"In May, 1862, I accepted the humble, but honorable office of commercial agent of the United States in Monrovia. In December, 1863, the position of Commissioner and consul general of the United States to the republic of Liberia was intrusted to my hands, the duties of which I still continue to discharge. I have resided in Liberia about three years. During this time I have interested myself in whatever promised to extend and strengthen the commercial and friendly relations between the two countries. I have made several visits along the coast and up the rivers, going from farm to farm, and from house to house, and thus, from verbal statements and personal observation, have acquired a knowledge of the industrious habits and domestic comforts of the citizens.

"In every direction new plantations are being commenced, and old ones materially enlarged and improved, so that I can testify that the progress in this department promises well for the future, and full development of the rich resources of the prolific soil.

"Coffee bids fair to become the basis of many an independent fortune. It is cultivated with care, and with comparatively small expense. Its maturity and fruitfulness are not retarded, but rather advanced, by the use of the intervening space for the growth of smaller plants. The entire lack of suitable machinery for milling has heretofore deterred many from engaging in this branch of agriculture; but this want, I am happy to state, is soon to be supplied, and you may expect in a few years a regular shipment of large quantities of coffee, as palatable and nutritious as any that is produced in any other part of the world.

"Sugar-cane has, I think, received a much larger share of attention than coffee, owing chiefly to the fact that it yields an earlier return. There are four steam sugar-mills along the banks of the St. Paul's river, besides several wooden mills. Had I been a commercial man I would have brought home orders for a dozen mills from parties who are generally responsible, and who offer a reasonable guarantee to secure the payment. Specimens of cane have been brought to my office more than sixteen feet in length and from seven to eight inches in circumference at the base, of one season's growth. More than one third of the juice of such cane is lost to those who have only wooden mills to express it.

"The article of cotton is not yet extensively cultivated, though I believe it is attracting more attention than formerly, and that which has been exported has commanded a high price and much praise for its superior staple.

"But it would be presumptuous in me to enter into minute details of the various productions of the soil of Liberia before such an audience as I conceive this to be. I may say for the satisfaction of the officers and members, as well as patrons of this society, that I know from observation that the glowing reports which now come to you from month to month, and which appear in your various periodicals and magazines, are in the main founded upon tangible facts.

"There is not, there need not be on all this globe, a richer soil, a soil which yields more prompt and ample returns to the labor of the industrious husbandman than that of Liberia. She has land enough to give a free home to millions who may go hence to aid in her future progress; a home where numerous, various, and substantial products may be obtained with less than half the labor required in many other countries. And, moreover, it is obvious to those who know the habits of the aborigines, their aptitude to trade, especially, that as Christian civilization and commerce advance, the door of the almost limitless interior will be thrown open, not by force of arms, by deeds of blood, or exterminating influences, but by the firm and steady progress of the arts and sciences.

"The present condition of the people of this republic is encouraging. On every hand I have seen the proofs of useful industry. All along the rivers, as well as in the settlements on the coast, the bamboo hut, the log-cabin, and sometimes the frame house, begin to give way for the commodious and substantial stone or brick edifice. They are furnished as good taste would dictate, not with what is usually termed elegance, but with modern conveniences to an extent beyond what many would expect to find in that far-off land. In accepting of the generous hospitalities of Liberian merchants and planters I have always found their tables supplied with the substantial elements of food.

"Perhaps it is expected that I should say something in reference to the climate of Liberia. From its location on the globe you will naturally infer that it is uniformly warm. My residence in Monrovia is in six degrees and nine minutes north latitude, but though so near the equator the air is tempered daily by breezes from the sea. The seasons of the year are two, the rainy and the dry; the former commences with May, and the latter with November. The thermometer averages about seventy-five degrees Fahrenheit, and seldom rises above ninety degrees in the shade. Yet, with all these elements of comfort, it is not the white man's home. Africans, who have descended from an ancestry absent from the continent for from one to two centuries, can, with good habits and proper care, survive the change and enjoy health, while the white man droops and dies.

"My observation leads me to the conclusion that a greater amount of mortality is occasioned by unreasonable anxiety, unfounded apprehensions of danger, unreasonable and immoderate bodily exercise, want of abstinence from improper food during convalescence, the want of suitable remedies during the fiercest attacks of fever, than from the actual and, if I may use the term, the unavoidable or curable effects of fever.

"Hear what the eloquent and learned Hon. E. W. Blyden said to his fellow-citizens, on the 26th of July last, the anniversary of the independence of the nation which he serves as secretary of state. Speaking of their location on the coast, he says: 'Here is a land adapted to us, given to us by Providence—peculiarly ours, to the exclusion of alien races. On every hand we can look and say it is ours. Ours are the serene skies that bend above us; ours the twinkling stars and brilliant planets, Pleiades and Venus and Jupiter; the thunder of the clouds; the roaring of the sea; the rustling of the forest; the murmur of the brooks; and the whispers of the breeze.'

"The Liberia college stands as a noble monument of the munificence of its founders. Under the presidency of Hon. J. J. Roberts, the benefactor of his race, and with the coöperation of the able faculty, a foundation is being laid, broad, deep, extensive, and permanent, to raise up instruments for Africa's redemption from thralldom and from darkness.

"As the immigrant plants his feet upon the soil of his ancestors, and directs his wandering gaze from point to point, he beholds Christian temples rearing their humble but inviting fronts. He listens to the 'church-going bell.' He hears voices, joining in hallelujahs to God, which reach the still air, and ascend as incense to the skies; while countenances irradiated with ineffable, heaven-born brightness, assure him that here Jehovah is known and worshipped; that Christ is honored and adored; and that the Holy Ghost diffuses his convincing, quickening, regenerating, sanctifying, saving power. Among all classes in Liberia, from the president down to the humblest walks of life, you can find those upon whom the badge of Christian discipline is placed with honorable prominence.

"And now I must close by asking, who can take a careful glance at what the people of Liberia were; at the circumstances which have surrounded them; at what they have accomplished, and at what they are, and what they are doing to-day, and not pause and wonder, and give God thanks, and take courage? Liberia lives, yonder, a striking monument, not less remarkable to me than the bush burning with fire, yet unconsumed! And what is more, my humble faith in the immortal promises of God assures me that she shall continue to live and grow, for she is emphatically a foster-child of Providence. In spite of the supineness of some of her professed friends, and the sneers and open opposition of her cruel foes, she is stronger to-day in moral power and political wisdom than ever she has been before.

"Were I a member of that race, with my knowledge of the tremendous weight that still oppresses them, and of the illimitable field which invites them to Liberia, with its innumerable facilities for comfort, independence, and usefulness, I should gather my family around me, and embark on board the first vessel bound for that distant shore, even if I had to avail myself of the generous aid which the Colonization Society offers."

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is closed by order of the House upon the pending paragraph and amendment.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. DAVIS.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. THAYER, to strike out the paragraph.

On the amendment there were—ayes 77, noes 22.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROSS. I move to amend by inserting in lieu of the paragraph just stricken out, an appropriation of $25,000 for the same purpose.

I offer this amendment for the purpose of saying—

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order, debate having been closed on the paragraph.

Mr. ROSS. Then, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SLOAN. I move to amend by inserting the following as a new paragraph:

No money shall be paid out of the Treasury toward the construction of the new jail for the District of Columbia, unless the letting of the contract for the building of said jail shall be suspended and delayed until perfected plans for the entire work shall have been completed and approved by a board of three, composed of disinterested and competent engineers, of which Quartermaster General Meigs shall be one; nor unless the letting of such contract shall have been open to fair and equal competition, on reasonable notice, printed in two leading newspapers published in the city of Washington after such approval of such new and perfected plans.

On agreeing to the amendment there were—ayes twenty-five, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The committee rose informally, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 1161) to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed an act (H. R. No. 1166) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending 30th June, 1868, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had postponed indefinitely bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 531) for the relief of the legal representatives of Major John A. Whitall, late paymaster in the United States Army, deceased, on account of lost or stolen vouchers; and

An act (H. R. No. 824) for the relief of Edward Blanchard.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendments bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 1059) for the relief of Sylvanus Sawyer and William E. Ward;

An act (H. R. No. 710) to pay and discharge certain debts and expenditures to the corporation of the city of Washington; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 174) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and pay the claim of John R. Beckley.

DEFICIENCY BILL—AGAIN.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1227) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the following:

For dredging and maintaining the channel of the river Thames, near Norwich, in the State of Connecticut, to complete the work, $35,000.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the paragraph just read the following:

For deepening and improving Westport Harbor, Connecticut, $2,500.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If my colleague insists on that amendment, I shall be under the necessity of raising the point of order that this is not a proper amendment to the pending paragraph, but should appropriately be introduced as a distinct paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is in order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, sir, I appeal to my colleague not to prejudice the appropriation which the committee has reported by the amendment which he offers.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. I do not think that this amendment will prejudice the appropriation reported by the committee, because the House can adopt or reject the amendment as it sees fit.

Now, sir, I desire to say with reference to this amendment, that some time since an appropriation of $8,000 was made for the purpose of cutting a channel in this harbor. I am now informed and believe that unless this small appropriation of $2,500 be made for the purpose of completing this work the original appropriation will be wasted. I believe that in proposing this amendment I have the concurrence of the Committee on Appropriations. I have also a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury recommending this appropriation. The amount is but small, and I hope the House will agree to it.

Several MEMBERS. All right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DODGE. I move to insert the following:

For removing the wreck of a vessel and the sand bar occasioned thereby in the main ship channel off Sandy Hook in accordance with the report of General Humphrey, chief of the United States Engineers, and to be expended under the direction of the War Department, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I rise to a point of order. The amendment is not germane to the bill. It is not in pursuance of any law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ROSS. I move to insert the following:

SEC. — That the republic of Liberia constitute the sixth military district under the military bill just passed, and that a brigadier general be at once assigned to take control of the same.

[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For services rendered by the late F. M. Rotch, in furnishing an original article "on cattle" for the Agricultural Report of 1861, $212 50, to be paid to the widow.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I make the point of order that this paragraph is not in order in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes too late.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I move to insert the following:

To enable the Commissioner of Public Buildings to pay to M. Reynolds, John McNally, Patrick Kilfoie, Peter Cole, and John McCarthy $100 for extra labor on President's garden and grounds prior to 4th of March, 1865, $500.

This amendment has been recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. These five men were laborers upon the grounds of Mr. Lincoln while he was President during the troublous times of the war.

It is in evidence that Mr. Lincoln agreed they should have extra compensation. We have given them $100 each. The services rendered were meritorious. My judgment is the amount is too small.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYES. I move the following amendment:

To enable the Committee on the Library to pay the balance due to P. R. Fendall for labor performed in editing the Writings of James Madison, $2,100.

The Committee on the Library was authorized to publish these Writings, and Mr. Fendall was employed to do a part of the work, and he did it, as every man familiar with the work knows, well. The compensation given to him is only fair and proper.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEY. In order to stop one of the leaks in the Treasury I offer the following amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the paragraph of section five of an act entitled "An act to increase duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, as follows, to wit:

"On lastings, mohair cloth, silk twist, wool, or other manufactured cloth woven or made in patterns of such size, shape, and form, or cut in such manner as to be fit for shoes, slippers, booties, gaiters, and buttons exclusively, not combined with India-rubber, ten per cent. ad valorem," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. KASSON. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For defraying the expenses incurred by the Department of State by sending telegraphic dispatches over the Atlantic cable, $30,000 for the current year.

Mr. SLOAN. I move to strike out $30,000 and insert $15,000.

Mr. SCOFIELD. When $250,000 was appropriated for the contingent fund of the State Department I inquired of my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, what it was for. He said among other things it was for telegraphic dispatches over the Atlantic cable, law suits, &c. If we appropriated for it, then why should we again appropriate for the same purpose?

Mr. CONKLING. That was before the "long dispatch" was sent. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCOFIELD. I understand McCracken's letter came by mail, but that the inquiries to our ministers were sent by telegraph. Now, I would like to know from the Committee on Appropriations, when the State Department has already had $250,000, why he proposes to give it $30,000 more for telegraphing.

Mr. STEVENS. The reason is that none of it is found to be applicable to that. This amount of $30,000 is to pay for what we have already incurred, what we owe to that company. I will say that there was one dispatch that cost $17,000.

Mr. CONKLING. To whom was that sent?

Mr. STEVENS. To our minister in France.

Mr. CONKLING. Not to McCracken.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether, under the practice of the Government, any person has any knowledge of the manner in which the contingent fund of the civil department is expended.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman knows as well as I do that the contingent fund is not audited by any committee of Congress.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think there is a necessity for some process by which at least a committee of this House shall know how the contingent fund of the civil department of the Government is expended—the secret service money that has been expended during the present Administration.

Mr. MAYNARD. I understand it is the business of the House Committee on Expenditures in the State Department to examine and report on that subject.

Mr. BOUTWELL. If that committee has not examined the matter, then the proper authority should take proper means to have an examination.

Mr. STEVENS. There is no instance since the foundation of the Government where a report has been made upon the disposition of the secret service fund.

Mr. SLOAN's amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improvements in the Supreme Court room, and the stairway and passages connected therewith, and in the manner of heating and ventilating the same, $15,000.

Mr. KASSON. I move to strike out that paragraph; the same provision has been made in another bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I propose the following amendment as a new paragraph:

For furnishing rooms for the court of the United States at Charleston, South Carolina, $5,000.

At the present time there are neither rooms nor any conveniences whatever for the courts in the district of South Carolina. The Secretary of the Interior has apartments which he can use, but he has no money for furnishing them. The Committee on the Judiciary are satisfied that an expenditure of this sort ought to be made. The sum is believed to be reasonable, and I trust the Committee on Appropriations will not oppose it.

Mr. STEVENS. The collector of the port of Charleston was before the committee and asked for $10,000 to provide accommodations for his business in the custom-house, to repair the roof which had been injured by bombardment. The committee put in $25,000 to provide all suitable offices, being $15,000 beyond what was asked for by the collector.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will withdraw this amendment and ask to have some words inserted in the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For preservation and care of the unfinished custom-house building at Charleston, South Carolina, and fitting up the interior to provide suitable offices for the use of the United States, $25,000.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to insert after the word "offices" the words "including court-rooms."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDWELL. I move the following amendment as a new paragraph:

For the payment of outstanding California war bonds, the unexpended balance of the sum heretofore appropriated for that purpose and carried to the surplus fund 30th June, 1863, namely, $10,196 63.

Mr. STEVENS. I raise the point that this is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Light-House Board to erect in the lower bay of New York one or more permanent beacons, $45,000.

Mr. ALLEY. I move to strike out the word "forty," and for the reason that I do not think the Government can afford to pay that sum unless it shall adopt a proviso which I will send to the Chair. I will give my reasons for so doing, after which I will offer the proviso, believing that no gentleman upon this floor will object to its insertion here. About twenty years ago under the tariff which was passed at that time a provision was inserted that lasting, mohair cloth, and shoe-lacings—

Mr. SLOAN. I raise the point that this discussion is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman is in order.

Mr. ALLEY. I am giving my reasons why I move to strike out the word "forty." I say that the Government cannot afford to pay $45,000 unless it will stop some leakages and prevent certain frauds upon the Treasury, among which is the one to which I refer. It occurs in this manner: under the tariff of 1846 it was provided that lasting, mohair cloth, and shoe-lacings should be imported at a duty of ten per cent. provided they were used exclusively for shoes, cut into patterns so that they could be used for no other purpose.

Mr. RADFORD. I raise the point of order that the gentleman is not confining himself to the amendment under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point.

Mr. ALLEY. If they were imported in the piece they were to come in under a twenty per cent. duty. As long as it remained at twenty per cent. it was no inducement for the importers or manufacturers to import them in patterns cut expressly for shoes. But after that duty was raised to fifty per cent. a very few manufacturers in some of the large cities sent their—

Mr. HILL. I raise the point of order, that the gentleman is neither discussing his amendment nor anything pertaining to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase the stereotype plates and copyright of the American Coast Pilot, $20,000.

Mr. LAFLIN. I move the following as an additional paragraph:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to settle with Louis Heyl for services rendered in the compilation of "The Digest of the Statutes of the United States upon Imports," upon such terms as in his judgment shall be just and equitable: Provided, That the amount paid by him shall be in full satisfaction of the above-named services, the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. SPALDING. That is already in one of the bills.

Mr. LAFLIN. I think the gentleman is very much mistaken.

Mr. SPALDING. We passed upon it this very day.

Mr. LAFLIN. If that is so I withdraw it. The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry into effect the provision of the seventh section of the act of Congress entitled "An act granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners over public lands, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1866, $36,000.

Mr. DAVIS. I would like some information as to where the expenditure is to be made.

Mr. HIGBY. The title of the law that we passed rather tends to mislead. It has reference to the mineral land. The law which was passed last session provided for the sale of mineral lands embracing many thousands of square miles.

Mr. LOAN. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That the unexpended balance of the appropriation made for defraying the expenses of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Nebraska, is hereby directed and set aside for the purpose of procuring a geological survey of Nebraska, said survey to be prescribed under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I have examined the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DODGE] and I am satisfied it ought to pass. I therefore withdraw my objection on the point of order I raised, so that the gentleman may offer his amendment.

Mr. DODGE. I offer the following amendment as an additional paragraph:

For removing wreck of a vessel and the sand-bar occasioned thereby in the main ship-channel of Sandy Hook, in accordance with the report of General Humphrey, chief of the United States Engineers, to be expended under the direction of the War Department $6,000, or so much of said sum as may be necessary.

I wish to say to the House that this is to remove the wreck of a large schooner that was sunk directly across the channel of Sandy Hook. The Government engineer reports that a sand-bar six feet high has already accumulated. It is a matter of importance, and the Committee on Commerce recommend that it shall be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move the following section, to be inserted after the paragraph last read:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That to enable the Secretary of War to carry out the award of the Department in favor of the heirs and legal representatives of George Fisher, deceased, for military spoils taken by the United States troops during the war with the Creek Indians, the appropriation contained in the first section of the original act for the relief of the claimants, approved April 12, 1848, shall not be allowed to lapse in consequence of a delay in the adjustment; and the same is hereby reenacted and made available; and that the rescinding resolution approved March 2, 1861, suspending the case be, and is hereby, repealed: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall examine the said award and see that no taint of fraud or mistake in calculation attaches thereto.

I wish I had an opportunity to submit the papers upon this subject which I have examined, and which have been submitted to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. STEVENS.] I will state very briefly what this amendment means. The estate of Mr. Fisher, represented by Mr. Gordon, the administrator, had a claim against the Government for spoils committed in the Creek war. The claim being recognized by Congress, a joint resolution was passed authorizing the adjustment of this claim upon the submission of the whole matter to the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War examined the whole matter, and made an award of $34,000. All of that award has been paid except about $7,000.

In the mean time it was suggested to Congress by some one that there was a miscalculation made by the Secretary of War; that there was something in the award made by him arising out of the wrong calculation which was made, and a new resolution was proposed rescinding the former action of Congress upon the subject. But it was thought by some that, notwithstanding this action, the right to the whole of the $34,000 had accrued, and that the Court of Claims could award it to the claimants. The Court of Claims, however, have decided that the only remedy is in Congress; that they consider the last resolution of Congress as preventing any action on their part.

Now, what is proposed by the amendment which I have offered is to go back and let the whole matter in regard to this remaining claim of $7,000 be submitted to the Secretary of War to make an award and see that there is no fraud or miscalculation in the award that he makes. The amendment does not make any appropriation, but proposes to allow the present Secretary of War, or any future Secretary of War before whom the case might come, to make an investigation and award as originally proposed by Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SLOAN. I move as an amendment to insert the following:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That no money shall be paid out of the Treasury toward the construction of the new jail for the District of Columbia unless the letting of the contract for the building of the said jail shall be suspended and delayed until perfected plans for the entire work shall have been completed and approved by a board of three, composed of disinterested and competent engineers and architects, of whom Quartermaster General M. C. Meigs and A. B. Mullett, architect of the Treasury Department, shall be two; nor—

Mr. STEVENS. I must interrupt the gentleman by rising to a point of order. My point of order is that this amendment is not germane to the bill, and is therefore not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order; and rules that the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SLOAN] is not in order.

Mr. HILL. I move to amend line one hundred and eighty-four by striking out the word "thirty," with a view of making an inquiry and obtaining some information upon this subject. At the last session of Congress we passed an act, of which the seventh section is as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to establish additional land districts and to appoint the necessary officers under existing laws, wherever he may deem the same necessary for the public convenience in executing the provisions of this act."

Mr. KASSON. I am not able to hear the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HILL] well enough to determine whether the proposition he has made is in order or not. I mention this for the purpose of saying that I wish to reserve to myself the right to object to it as soon as I can find out what his proposition is.

Mr. HILL. I have made a motion to strike out the word "thirty" in line one hundred and eighty-four rather to get information than on account of any hostility to this provision.

Mr. KASSON. I thought this had been passed over entirely, and that we had been acting upon additional sections.

Mr. HILL. That point had been already made and decided in my favor before the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] arose.

Mr. KASSON. That is in consequence of the difficulty of hearing here.

Mr. HILL. I will now proceed with my remarks. I am unable to see the necessity of appropriating $36,000 to carry out the provisions of the law referred to in this provision, when it does not appear that any such offices have been established.

The clause of this bill to which I refer is in the following words:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry into effect the provisions of the seventh section of the act of Congress entitled "An act granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners over public lands, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1866, $36,000.

Now, I am willing to yield to any gentleman here who can give me the information I desire.

Mr. KASSON. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HILL] that under that act the establishment of land offices in a great many of the Territories where they did not exist then were provided for. How many of these land offices will be required to be established it is not possible now to state. The demand for new lands in these new Territories for settlers is increasing very rapidly; and the opinion of the Commissioner of Public Lands is that it will be necessary to establish a considerable number of these land offices; and he has asked for money enough to establish all that may be found necessary within the terms of the act that gives the authority for their establishment.

Now, the Commissioner of Public Lands has shown a disposition to economize in the disbursement of the public moneys committed to his charge. I am glad to be able to say of him that I believe him to be a thoroughly economical officer. And in view of the facts represented by him, as well as by others, the committee have thought it their duty to give him the means to carry into effect the provisions of this law. The words "or so much thereof as may be necessary" should have been inserted in this clause; but that is implied, as a matter of course. The amount proposed to be appropriated is all that is required we think to perfect the law. It may all be used, or only half of it may be used, according to the demand for perfected titles to land by new settlers in these Territories.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has expired on this amendment.

Mr. HILL. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I move to amend by striking out "thirty-six" and inserting "thirty-two." And I now yield to my colleague, [Mr. HILL.]

Mr. HILL. All I desire to say in reply to the explanation of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] is that it does not appear that this is a proper item to be placed in an appropriation bill.

Mr. HIGBY. This bill cannot be rightly understood by reference to its title. It is really a bill to divide the agricultural lands from the mineral lands and bring them into market.

Mr. HILL. It does not appear by the section referred to that any such division as is spoken of by the gentleman from California [Mr. HIGBY] was in contemplation; at least we get no light from the section of the bill referred to.

Mr. HIGBY. The section is as follows:

That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to establish additional land districts and to appoint the necessary officers under existing laws, wherever he may deem the same necessary for the public convenience in executing the provisions of this act.

This act is to authorize the segregation of the agricultural lands in the mineral districts throughout the United States. And it is to carry out the provisions of this seventh section that this $36,000 is put into this bill.

Mr. HILL. I withdraw my amendment.

No further amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That upon all merchandise gaugable by law hereafter exported upon which drawback or return duty is allowed, and upon all goods gaugable by law withdrawn from bonded warehouses for export, there shall be levied and collected by the collectors of the several ports twelve cents per cask; and the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to adjust and refund to the proprietors of the Liverpool, New York, and Philadelphia steamship line the amount of the duties paid by them on foreign coals which were consigned exclusively for the use of their steamships, and were never delivered on shore in the United States, but were transhipped in harbor, on board said steamships, and actually consumed by them without the United States and on the high seas; and the requisite amount is hereby appropriated therefor.

Mr. MORRILL. Before the words "cents per cask" I move to strike out "twelve" and insert "ten."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEY. I move to add the following:

That the paragraph of section five of an act entitled "An act to increase duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, as follows, to wit: "On lastings, mohair cloth, silk twist, wool, or other manufactured cloth woven or made in patterns of such size, shape, and form, or cut in such manner as to be fit for shoes, slippers, booties, gaiters, and buttons exclusively, not combined with India-rubber, ten per cent. ad valorem," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to say that I think the perseverance of the gentleman from Massachusetts deserves success, and I make no point of order.

Mr. UPSON. I make the point of order that it is not in order to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order.

Mr. MORRILL. I perceive this is a miscellaneous section. I do not see why anything under Heaven cannot be introduced if this be in order. If members only understood the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts I am sure they would not object to it. It will bring in more money than it will take out. These goods are taken across in the piece and cut into patterns and then brought back again only liable to ten per cent. duty.

Mr. ROSS. I rise to a point of order, that this debate is not in order.

Mr. MORRILL. If this is not in order then the section is not in order.

Mr. ALLEY. Does the Chair decide my amendment to be out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so decided.

Mr. ALLEY. I did not offer it until I had consulted several of the best parliamentarians in this House, and they told me it was in order. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The decision of the Chair was sustained.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. McDONALD, its Chief Clerk, notifying the House that that body insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House, and that it asked for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. NESMITH managers of said conference on its part.

DEFICIENCY BILL—AGAIN.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HILL. I move to strike out the pending section. This is no part of a deficiency appropriation bill, but properly belongs to a tariff bill.

Mr. KASSON. The section is properly in the bill, and the point of order could only be taken when the bill was introduced. It is properly here in the deficiency bill. It is to complete the service for this fiscal year by adjusting the amount in the manner proposed. A precedent has been set in another case, which I can cite if necessary.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move to strike out these words:

And the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to adjust and refund to the proprietors of the Liverpool, New York, and Philadelphia steamship line the amount of the duties paid by them on foreign coals which were consigned exclusively for the use of their steamships, and were never delivered on shore in the United States, but were transhipped in harbor, on board said steamships, and actually consumed by them without the United States and on the high seas; and the requisite amount is hereby appropriated therefor.

I know not how old that company is, but I suppose this will go back to its beginning. I would like to have what seems to be a job put in here after this other matter is struck out. It seems that we are to pay back to this company all the duties paid by them upon coal. It does not say how much. We have no report of the facts. This steamship comes here by its agent and goes around loose, in the committee-room and elsewhere, and now we find this appropriation inserted in this bill in violation of the rules of the House. It is a claim that ought to have been referred to the Committee of Claims. It is to the honor of the chairman that every rotten claim dodges his committee and seeks lodgment in some miscellaneous bill. I hope this claim will be stricken out and referred to the proper committee for investigation.

Mr. KASSON. I was not surprised at the gentleman's objection when I recollected that duty on coal was involved here, but I assure him, as his colleague from Pennsylvania is chairman of that committee, this did not pass without critical examination. The facts are simple and clear. This company was established in competition with the British steamers, which have been sustained by a subsidy. At first they started with British engines, and some place, I do not know whether they call it flue or furnace, which required coal to give a high flame, and for that purpose they used Welsh coal, as did the Cunard line. They subsequently found that this was a troublesome and expensive business, the importation of this foreign coal, and they determined to abandon it. They were therefore put to the expense of changing entirely their engines or furnaces, or whatever you may call them, and of fitting them for the use of American coal; but they made that change, and they have been for two or three years, and they now are, using furnaces to which Pennsylvania coal is supplied and in which none other than Pennsylvania coal is consumed, as was clearly shown to the committee by the evidence upon that subject. The claim in this case is the same as the claim that was made by the Cunard line.

Now, as to the necessity for this legislation. Our revenue laws require when goods are imported for reimportation that bonds shall be given; and if it be afterward shown that they have been exported, and the fact of their arrival at some foreign port be shown by the certificate of the American consul at that port, then the duties are refunded. But in this case they were unable to produce the coals at Liverpool because they had been consumed on the voyage; and consequently they were unable to produce the certificate of the American consul there as in the Cunard case. The Cunard line gave bonds, and they were released from those bonds by an act of Congress upon establishing the facts in the case. Now, it is only proposed to deal with this unsubsidized line upon the same terms with the Cunard line; and I think it is a fair case.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to amend by striking out the last paragraph, the words, "and the requisite amount is hereby appropriated therefor;" and I ask to have read at the Clerk's desk Rule 120 of the House.

The Clerk read the rule as follows:

"120. No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, and for the contingencies for carrying on the several departments of the Government."

Mr. MAYNARD. Now, Mr. Chairman, this proposition that has been introduced here is in utter defiance of that rule, a rule which has been established and recognized as a rule of this House for thirty years.

This is simply a private claim which comes here without any report, without any evidence to sustain it, and which is crowded into this bill in utter defiance of the rules of the House and its established modes of doing business. I protest against any such proposition being forced upon us in this way. What evidence have we that it is right? None whatever, no witness called, no documentary evidence produced, not even a statement of the amount that we are required to appropriate. It is all guess work, mere blind guess work. We are told that it is to help a rival to the Cunard line. Then refer it to your Committee on Postal Affairs and let them examine it. Or if it is merely a claim arising out of the dealings of these parties with the Government then refer it to the Committee of Claims and let them report it upon the evidence adduced before them. This whole section is wrong. It has no business here. Under the well-settled rules of this House it ought not be permitted to stay here one moment; and I trust that the House will give force and effect to its own laws by erasing it. Then, if there is any virtue or merit in the claim, let it come in at the front door, where it ought to come in, and not as it now comes, sneaking in at the back door and through a very small hole at that. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of taking action upon the conference report in reference to the tax bill. It is very important that this bill should go to the Clerks so that they may be able to engross it. I think we can dispose of it in ten minutes.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Let us do it.

Mr. KASSON. Before that motion is put I deem it my right to be permitted to answer the observation of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] in reference to this claim. He says that it was brought in here in violation of a rule of the House. That gentleman certainly knows very well that there is hardly ever a regular appropriation bill brought into the House in which there are not such items as this; and in all such cases, if any gentleman desires to reserve the point of order, he does it at the time the bill is introduced, and before it goes to the committee. It is inevitable, in the course of legislation, that new cases shall continue to be presented even up to the time of the passage of the last bill. We have habitually taken notice of such cases; and protests have been made merely as a species of side debate, without reference to the real merits of the cases presented. If the gentleman from Tennessee had made his point at the time the bill was introduced, that it was entirely new legislation, and not, as I claim, an appropriation to provide for a deficiency, then his point would have been in order. But as it is, the case is properly before the committee, and I only ask that it shall be decided upon its merits.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman state when this claim accrued?

Mr. KASSON. It accrued, I think, in 1862 or 1863.

Mr. MILLER. What is the amount of it?

Mr. KASSON. I cannot tell that exactly; but no great amount. The amount is not yet adjusted; the law provides that it is to be adjusted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I ask the gentleman to yield to me a moment. I wish to make an inquiry.

Mr. KASSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SCOFIELD. The first six lines of this section provide for levying a little tax of ten cents a cask upon casks that have been taken out of bond—casks first put in bond for exportation and then taken out. That, I suppose, is for handling the casks. But what I want to know is, why this matter and the claim of this company are put together in the same sentence, separated only by a semicolon, when they have nothing to do with each other?

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman were serving on the Committee on Appropriations he would know that as one thing after another comes to us for the action of the committee we attach it as nearly as possible to correlative subjects. Instead of making this a separate section, as ought to have been done, the committee has attached it to this clause. That is all the explanation that is to be made.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move that the committee rise for the purpose I have indicated.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALLISON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 1227) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS AND BILLS.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1220) to provide ways and means for the payment of compound-interest notes;

An act (H. R. No. 346) for the relief of Hugh Leddy;

An act (H. R. No. 825) for the relief of Henry Rudd, of Henry county, Iowa;

An act (H. R. No. 1126) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes.

An act (H. R. No. 968) for the relief of Ernest Kleinschmidt, of Cincinnati, Ohio;

An act (H. R. No. 1168) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth F. Chipman, widow of Major Charles Chipman, deceased;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 282) for the relief of James Hudnall; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 254) for the relief of Almonson Eaton, receiver of public money for the land office at Stevens's Point, Wisconsin.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I rise to submit the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 1161) to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue. In order that as little time as possible may be consumed in this matter I will state the action of the committee, and afterward I shall be ready to answer any inquiry which any gentleman may desire to make.

The first amendment in reference to which there was a disagreement between the two Houses was upon the subject of cotton, the House having fixed the tax at three cents per pound and the Senate at two. After a long and laborious sitting, the committee finally agreed to place the tax at two and a half cents per pound.

The next point in the bill in reference to which considerable difference arose was in relation to the tax on gas companies. It will be remembered that the House struck out of the bill the provision granting gas companies the right to charge over to the consumers the tax after April, 1867. The Senate conferees were very firm in relation to that matter and asserted that not more than half a dozen of every hundred gas companies throughout the whole country are at all affected by it. Finally it was agreed that the House should recede from its non-concurrence in the Senate amendment, and the few companies restricted by their charters will be left as other parties are left who have no such restrictions.

The next question related to the tax on sugar refiners. The House had fixed the tax at two per cent. and the Senate at one and a half.

The Senate receded, and the tax remains at two per cent. upon the sales of refined sugars, excluding the residuum and molasses.

The next question was with reference to copper and brass tubes, the tax on which was changed by the House from five per cent. to one fourth of one per cent. per pound. On this question the House has receded, and the tax remains at five per cent. ad valorem.

The next point is with reference to manufactures of glass, other than window glass, the tax on which was reduced by the Senate from five to three per cent. The House committee have acceded to that proposition, with an amendment to reduce to two and a half per cent. the tax on leather, which the Senate had placed at five per cent. and the House in the free list.

In relation to ferry-boats, the only change is to make the tax two and a half per cent. instead of three, placing them upon the same footing as other steam vessels.

The reduction of all taxes is to take effect from and after the 1st day of March, 1867.

Bar iron, rod, hoop, band, sheet and plate iron, and iron prepared for the manufacture of steel, are to be free of any tax. Locomotive and marine engines have been restored to the tax list and subject to a tax of five per cent., as heretofore.

Gas and water pipes are to be restored to the tax list.

Shell-fish, that is, preserved oysters and lobsters, are added to the free list.

With reference to boots and shoes the Senate recedes from its amendment, and these articles are to remain subject to the present tax.

Grinders of hand-mills are to be subject to only the same burdens as heretofore, the House receding from its amendment by which they were to have been exempt.

Lead pipe, sheet lead, and shot are remanded into further service on the tax list.

With regard to fabrics, the product of hand-looms, we have agreed to recommend that the House recede from its amendment, because it was demonstrated to the committee that it would include a vast number of fabrics not intended by the mover or the House to be included, and would exempt from taxation altogether too large an amount, including not only two-ply carpets, but gingham, wire-cloth, &c.

On brandy made from grapes it will be recollected the House placed the tax at two dollars per gallon, which the Senate reduced to fifty cents. It has been agreed that the tax shall be fixed at one dollar per gallon. It is to be feared there will be something too much of grape brandy in the market, and it may not look well to place two dollars upon poor whisky and only fifty cents on good brandy.

In regard to the income tax, it has been agreed that the rent of a homestead, whether occupied by a man in his own right or in the right of his wife, is to be excepted from the amount of taxable income.

Sections sixteen to thirty-eight inclusive, mainly relating to the tax on distilled spirits, were all stricken out; but the main provisions in them have been included in some subsequent sections. The office of inspectors of spirits is abolished; and general inspectors now authorized by law will be required to give bond in the sum of $5,000. This will leave it in the power of the Government to change the inspectors from one part of the country to another, and it can always have one inspector to inspect into a bonded warehouse and another to inspect out of it, thereby abolishing one great means of fraud now open to distillers. These inspectors may be appointed without limit as to numbers, and are paid by the Government four dollars per day and traveling expenses.

It is also provided that distillers shall send their spirits, not to a private bonded warehouse, but to a general bonded warehouse, wherever there is one in such close proximity to their distilleries as to make it practicable, as it will be in all of our larger cities. Thus their liquors, instead of being in their own private establishments, will be hereafter where they can be under the supervision and control of the Government. This will probably prevent much of the fraud which has heretofore been practiced, as it is understood, in these private bonded warehouses.

Sections forty-four to fifty-one inclusive were stricken out, but the same provisions are substantially included in subsequent portions of the bill, which have been more carefully and elaborately drawn than they were when hastily brought into this House near the close of our action upon the bill.

The provisions of the House in reference to the lottery business we ascertained from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue were unsatisfactory, as it would be impossible to make these lottery dealers give any bonds. These men will carry on the business where it is made criminal and liable to severe punishment by State laws. We have collected a revenue of about fifty thousand dollars under the existing system of making the managers give bonds, while under that of compelling the dealers to give bonds we only raised about three thousand dollars.

Then foreign tonnage is placed upon the same footing as domestic tonnage, and is to pay tonnage dues but once a year only.

Those are the principal points of disagreement. If there are no questions to be propounded I will call for the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. What sorts of iron does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. MORRILL. Bar, rod, hoop, band, sheet, and plate iron and iron prepared for the manufacture of steel are to be exempt from tax.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I understand we dispense entirely with the system of local inspection; thus throwing open without any guard whatever the whole business of distilling.

Mr. MORRILL. They will not be exempt from inspection under the administration of the law. There is authority to appoint an indefinite number of general inspectors at four dollars a day and traveling expenses. Enough of these will be used to protect the interests of the Government.

I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. LE BLOND moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VOTE OF THANKS TO THE SPEAKER.

Mr. LE BLOND, (Mr. DAVES occupying the chair as Speaker pro tempore.) I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the thanks of this House are due, and are hereby tendered, to Hon. SCUYLER COLFAX, its Speaker, for the courteous, dignified, able, and impartial manner in which he has discharged the duties of Presiding Officer during the present session of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in being able to submit to this House the resolution just read. It expresses my convictions, and I trust the conviction of every member of the House. I can add nothing to the sentiment therein expressed other than a hope that it will be unanimously adopted.

Mr. HOGAN. I second the motion.

Mr. WINFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to second the resolution offered by my friend from Ohio. And I take this occasion to say that I assent most heartily to every sentiment contained in the happily conceived and well-expressed tribute to the virtues and ability of our Presiding Officer by which the gentleman has supported his resolution.

Individually it is my desire that the country should understand this brief interruption of the ordinary proceedings of this body as intending something beyond the passage of the usual and routine resolution of compliment by an expiring Congress to its Presiding Officer.

The official to whom this acknowledgment is tendered was summoned to the discharge of delicate and responsible duties, at a time when all the circumstances surrounding the position assigned him required the exercise of uncommon prudence and discretion to enable him to fill his allotted place with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the House and country.

There had been organized an unhallowed conspiracy against the peace and unity of our people and Government. The war incident to this assault upon our institutions, the unalterable determination of those who loved the Union to preserve and maintain it at every cost, the diversity of sentiment as to the mode of prosecuting and as to the ultimate purposes and results of the war, had aroused constituencies and Representatives alike to the highest pitch of mental excitement; and at such a time it was surely no light task to hold the scales of legislative justice in the Representative body so evenly that while the majority should certainly realize all the facilities and advantages their preponderance of numbers entitled them to, the minority could have no cause to complain of oppression or neglect.

I take pleasure in expressing the personal conviction, and such I believe to be the unanimous sentiment of this body, that the subject of the resolution just read, and of these remarks, has succeeded in no ordinary degree in discharging the delicate duties referred to in such manner as to justify the warmest expressions of commendation and gratitude; and in uniting with those with whom I have been so pleasantly associated for the two years' term just closing, in this vote of thanks I do not hesitate to say that, in my judgment, the tribute we are about to pay has rarely, if ever, been better deserved.

Many of those who are honored with seats in the present Congress will, with its close, retire from public life, and we shall not be associated longer with the Speaker in his future legislative career as a member of this House; but I feel that I express the common sentiment of all such in saying that the urbanity and gentleness of his manners, his kindness of heart, and his justice and fairness as a Presiding Officer, have so far secured him our friendship, affection, and confidence that we shall contemplate his future history as a statesman and a private citizen with no common interest; and that our best wishes for his happiness, prosperity, and success will follow him through life wheresoever his lot may be cast.

That those who differ so widely and vitally from the Speaker upon public questions feel it due to him that the sentiments of grateful regard, embodied in the resolution just offered, should be so willingly and cheerfully expressed, teaches this useful lesson: that diversity of political sentiment does not necessarily, and should not as a matter of fact, interrupt the friendly relations which ought to exist between those who are engaged here in the work of national legislation. It has not been found essential to the preservation of amicable relations between the Presiding Officer and his political opponents upon this floor that there should be on either hand any surrender of the most perfect independence of political thought and action; and if the same courtesy in the expression of antagonistic sentiments shall be observed in the bearing of members toward each other, there will be no occurrences here the retrospect of which will mar the satisfaction with which in after life we shall look back upon our association here as legislators for our country during this eventful period of her history. [Applause in the House and galleries.]

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise for the purpose of supporting the resolution, and to suggest that, in order to make a more formal expression of our opinion, the vote be taken by yeas and nays. [Cries of "No!"]

A MEMBER. Let us have a rising vote.

Mr. MAYNARD. I accept the amendment.

The question was taken; and the resolution was unanimously adopted, every member rising to vote in the affirmative.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed over the President's veto the bill for the more efficient government of the rebel States.

Mr. STEVENS submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to present to the Secretary of State the bill entitled "An act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States," together with the certificates of the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate, showing that the said act was passed by a vote of two thirds of both Houses of Congress, after the same had been returned to the House of Representatives by the President with his objections, and after the reconsideration of said act by both Houses of Congress in accordance with the Constitution.

DEFICIENCY BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. STEVENS moved all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the deficiency bill be closed in one minute after its consideration shall be resumed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS moved that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ALLISON in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the deficiency bill.

Mr. MAYNARD, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

The amendments of Mr. SCOFIELD and Mr. HILL were disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the second section of an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, approved April 7, 1866, is hereby so amended as to authorize and require the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the contractors, Butler & Carpenter, the sum of $20,000, in full of all their claims for indemnity therein referred to.

Mr. BROOMALL. I move to strike out that section for the purpose of hearing from the committee some explanation of the matter contained in it.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I have been tracing out the history of this provision. I find that in 1863 it appeared that this firm had been contractors with the Government for furnishing certain stamps or dies, and the following provision was enacted:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to allow to Butler & Carpenter, contractors for engraving internal revenue stamps, thirty per cent. of the cost of engraving special dies for that purpose, but not exceeding the amount of $20,000."

That was simply authority for the Secretary of the Treasury to allow such sum, not exceeding $20,000, for that service, as should be found due upon the basis of thirty per cent. of the cost. But in 1866 we find another provision, as follows:

"That the ninth section of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1863, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1863, appropriating thirty per cent. of the cost of engraving the special dies for internal revenue stamps, not to exceed in amount $20,000, be and the same is hereby so amended as to enable the Secretary to pay the contractors, Butler & Carpenter, the said sum of $20,000, in full of all claims for indemnity."

Thus it appears that we first "authorized" the Secretary to pay so much, if it was due, and then we made a provision to "enable" him to do it. But here we have a provision which compels him to do it. And yet I understand that not one single account has ever been rendered by the firm to the Secretary showing that this amount is due to them; so that if he has refused the payment it is because no vouchers have been produced. I do not believe in any such mandatory legislation, and I hope this section will be stricken from the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. After the contract was made with Butler & Carpenter to make these dies and they had made them all, it was found the Government could do better by printing them itself, and therefore it wished to be relieved from the contract. The gentlemen who made the dies claimed a large amount, some $60,000, I believe; and finally the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Chase, came to us and said he thought if we would give $20,000 in lieu of the whole claim it would be the best thing we could do. The Committee of Ways and Means accordingly made that appropriation, supposing it to be a final settlement of that claim. The law was passed, but for some reason or other the accounting officers held that it was not imperative, and they were not bound to pay the amount. Again, last year, we passed an act which we thought was imperative, which we intended to be so; the committee expressly stated that it was so, and the House passed it. But these officers, because it simply authorized them to do it, say they are not required to do it. These men, from the commencement of this Administration to the present time, have been kept out of what the Secretary of the Treasury said was a fair compromise for their whole service and for making those dies at great cost. Anybody who has seen the samples must know that the expense was immense. This, therefore, is to compel the payment of what has been due for six years, and it is a shame that it has not been paid before.

Mr. MORRILL. I am quite satisfied that this is right, and if gentlemen desire to promote economy I think we will find an opportunity before we get to the end of this bill more worthy of our attention than this.

Mr. DAVIS. The objection I make is that there was to be an investigation as to the percentage to be allowed them.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. UPSON. I move to perfect the section by striking out the words "and required," so as not to make it compulsory. I am sure if it is a valid claim the Secretary of the Treasury will pay it; and I think we ought not to compel him to pay it unless we investigate it, and know that it is a valid claim. To put it in the form it is reported in the bill is assuming that the Secretary will not pay a claim that he is authorized to pay, although it is just.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman, and for the reason that under the act of the last session it was provided that the act of March 3, 1863, be so amended as to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay these contractors $20,000 in full of all claims for indemnity. Now, I undertake to say that no man can read that section of the law without coming to the conclusion that the Congress of the United States intended that the money should be paid, and did itself audit the claim by that act. What, then, do we propose now? In order to exclude the notion of the Secretary of the Treasury that there was any discretion lodged in him in the premises, instead of saying, as we did in the act of last session, that the act shall be so amended as to "enable" the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the money, we say that it shall be so amended as to authorize and "require" him to pay it. He never should have made that construction at all. The account was audited by the passage of the law of last session. We found the amount to be due, and expressly authorized it to be paid, and yet it has not been paid.

Mr. HILL. Has this claim ever been before the Committee of Claims of this House?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not know, but the provision as it stands now is simply to carry out and enforce an existing law which the Secretary of the Treasury has disregarded. It is put in such a form as to compel him to regard it.

Mr. DELANO. Has it been before any committee of Congress?

Mr. BINGHAM. I suppose it must have been. The act of 1863 was so amended as to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the $20,000.

Mr. DELANO. I very much doubt if it has ever been examined at all. I suspect it has passed without the House knowing what it was doing.

Mr. BINGHAM. Finding the law as it stands I think it becomes the House to enforce its own enactment and not allow the Secretary of the Treasury to override an express provision of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. THAYER. I move to strike out the last word. I do not propose to take up any time in the discussion, but it seems to me that in the settlement of a question of fact in which we are compelled to decide between the Secretary of the Treasury and the official assurance given to this House by the venerable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations we ought not long to hesitate. We are assured by the chairman of the committee that these Philadelphia engravers have in good faith performed their work for the Government, and that the money is due. It appears upon the statute-book that the Secretary of the Treasury has been twice authorized by law to pay this money, but has refused to do it. He so refuses, it is alleged, upon some quibble raised in regard to the language of the statute, which by its words only "enables" him to pay. Now, it is proposed to require him to pay a debt which the committee report to be justly and honestly due. Sir, for one, I do not hesitate to say that in giving my vote upon this paragraph of the bill I prefer to follow the recommendations of my venerable colleague rather than the capricious decision of the Secretary of the Treasury; and relying upon the assurances given to the House by the committee, I hope the House will compel the Secretary of the Treasury, by the use of language which can no longer be evaded, to do that justice to these parties which in obedience to former laws he ought to have done long ago.

Mr. MAYNARD. It will be recollected—

Mr. BOUTWELL. If the gentleman will give me a minute or two, as I was the officer of the Government who made the contract with these men, I will state to the committee the position in which I understand the affair to rest. Upon advertisements being published for furnishing what are known as revenue stamps, they made a bid which was in fact much below the price for which any parties could properly perform the work. These men went on with the work and performed it faithfully in every respect, serving the Government well and at great loss to themselves. Under the original act which was passed by Congress for relieving them provision was made for taking as the property of the Government the dies which had been prepared by these contractors. The Secretary of the Treasury in good faith employed competent persons to ascertain the value of these dies, or rather the cost of producing them. It turned out that the cost of these dies was between eight and ten thousand dollars. The then Secretary of the Treasury and his successor, acting I believe in good faith, have refused to pay these contractors anything more than was authorized by law to be paid for those dies, the amount being between eight and ten thousand dollars. This is the amount, as I believe, to which the contractors are justly entitled as claimants against the Government.

But, sir, knowing, as I do, the fidelity with which the contractors performed this work, the sacrifices which they made, the energy which they exhibited in carrying it on under very difficult circumstances, I am willing for one to take the responsibility of voting to pay them $20,000, because they did good service to the Government and are well entitled to that amount. But I feel bound to say, also, that under the contract which the Government made with them they are entitled to only between eight and twelve thousand dollars, and that the Secretaries of the Treasury who have had this matter under consideration have acted, I believe, in good faith with reference to it.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will the gentleman allow me to read the section of the act of 1863, and then ask him a question in regard to it? That section provides—

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to allow Butler & Carpenter, contractors for engraving internal revenue stamps, thirty per cent. of the cost of engraving special dies for that purpose, not exceeding in amount the sum of $20,000."

This act was passed at the third session of the Thirty-Seventh Congress, when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] was I believe at the head of the internal revenue department. Will the gentleman be kind enough to explain why this law was not executed, and why this money was not paid by virtue of that law?

Mr. BOUTWELL. The reason is very apparent. When that section was drawn and submitted to the committee that introduced it in the House it was supposed that thirty per cent. on the cost of these dies would amount to something like twenty thousand dollars; and Butler & Carpenter were willing to accept that in full remuneration of all the service they had performed for the Government. But when an investigation was made, and competent persons were employed to ascertain the cost of producing these dies, it turned out that thirty per cent upon the cost would amount to only eight or ten thousand dollars, at most not exceeding twelve thousand dollars. Therefore the Secretary of the Treasury refused—very properly as I conceive—to pay them any more. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEVENS. For the purpose of terminating debate I move that the committee rise. The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALLISON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 1227, making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. STEVENS. I now move that when the House resolves itself again into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order all debate on the pending section shall terminate in one minute.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS moved that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to take up the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ALLISON in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 1227, making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes.

The question being on the amendment of Mr. URSON, to strike out the words "and require" in section four, it was not agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to amend the section by striking out "twenty" and inserting "twelve," so as to make the amount of the appropriation $12,000.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the motion to strike out the section, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the compensation of the crier and bailiffs of the district court of the United States for the district of Maryland shall be three dollars per day, and the temporary clerks in the Quartermaster General's office shall receive the same pay as the clerks of class one.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to amend this section by striking out the word "crier" and inserting "criers;" by striking out "court" and inserting "courts;" and by striking out the words "for the district of Maryland;" so as to read, "criers and bailiffs of the district courts of the United States."

Mr. COOK. I ask the gentleman to yield to me that I may present an amendment which I think he will be willing to accept.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will hear it.

Mr. COOK. It is to strike out the section and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That when the entire compensation of any marshal of a district court of the United States, as reported to the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with the third section of the act entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1863, shall be less than the sum of $2,000 per annum, including all fees and emoluments received for services rendered by deputy, the difference, to be ascertained and allowed by the proper accounting officer of the Treasury, shall be paid to him therefrom; that the criers and bailiffs of the courts of the United States, appointed in pursuance of the act above referred to, shall, in lieu of all other compensation, be allowed the sum of three dollars per day, to be paid by the marshal and included in his accounts, the compensation to be given only for actual attendance; and when both the circuit and district courts of the United States are in session at one time, to be paid only for attendance upon one court: Provided, That in lieu of all other compensation allowed to the criers and bailiffs of the circuit and district courts of the United States held in the cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, New Orleans, and San Francisco, they shall each be allowed and paid for their services the sum of $940 per annum, to be paid by, and included in the accounts of, the marshal of such district out of any money of the United States in his hands; the compensation provided by this act to commence with the present fiscal year.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will modify my amendment by accepting the amendment which has just been read, which I understand has been prepared by the Committee on the Judiciary.

This section of the bill is rather peculiar. There is, as is remarked by a gentleman near me, a charming collocation in putting criers and bailiffs of the district court of Maryland along with temporary clerks in the Quartermaster General's office. [Laughter.] My friend from Pennsylvania will perhaps be reminded of his early reading, and recall the line,

Desinit in pisces mulier formosa superne.

Mr. STEVENS. Oh, I do not understand that. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope we shall not have any such incongruous legislation.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Speaker, some gentleman are very fond of criticising. Having here a provision for the payment of bailiffs, I do not see any incongruity in our adding to it a provision for the payment of clerks. Other gentlemen may see the incongruity; but our committee was too stupid to see it. What the gentleman said in his Indian dialect I do not understand. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOK. I would like to say that the amendment which I have offered has been prepared by the Committee on the Judiciary, the intention having been to report it as a separate bill. It is necessary in certain of the southern States that the fees of the marshals should be increased. It appears by a report of the Secretary of the Interior that certain of the marshals in North Carolina and South Carolina receive less than $700 a year. I was informed yesterday by the district attorney for the district of North Carolina that it is impossible that process should be executed unless some provision of this kind be enacted. I hold in my hand a letter signed by the district judges of Connecticut, Vermont, and New York, stating the absolute necessity that the fees of the criers shall be advanced to the sum mentioned in this amendment in order that the services of competent men may be obtained.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. What is the object of increasing the pay of bailiffs? I understand that they are simply constables. Half a dozen of them are appointed to take care of the courtroom, to see that the court has water, and to take care of jurors. I submit that the word "bailiffs" ought to be stricken out. I think I know something about this matter. These officers are appointed to discharge the duties I have mentioned. They now get more pay than similar officers do in the State courts. Now, in my opinion, there is no reason why we should increase the pay of the constables who take care of the United States courts beyond what is allowed to those who take care of the State courts.

[Here the hammer fell, Mr. Cook's time having expired.]

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "bailiffs." I was about saying that there is no reason whatever for increasing the pay of these "constables," and that is the word that should be used. It is no use calling them "bailiffs" for the purpose of getting rid of the term "constables," which everybody understands. I do not know of any reason or of any necessity for increasing their pay. So far as the criers are concerned, there may, perhaps, be some propriety in this proposed increase of pay, as we are increasing the pay of everybody excepting those who are really deserving, but I trust the committee will not increase the pay of bailiffs.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Chairman, in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from New York, and as an answer, I hope, to his objections, I will state that I do not know what the officers of this court are called in the district in which he lives and where he practices; but in the district and circuit courts of Philadelphia the bailiffs and criers are those who attend upon the courts. The bailiffs are not constables. These words "bailiffs and criers" are used in all the acts of Congress which have created these offices and continued them.

Now, sir, so far as the district and circuit courts of the eastern district of Pennsylvania are concerned, the men who hold these offices are employed there almost every day at a miserable compensation, not exceeding four or five hundred dollars a year. Their compensation has not been increased for the last forty or fifty years. They are men of intelligence and good character. They do not perform the duties of constables in the courts; they have not only to attend upon the jurors, but they are in attendance upon the court itself.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I would inquire of the gentleman if these officers have taken the test oath? [Laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL. Well, sir, I presume they have. This amendment is eminently just. These gentlemen have been trying for the last two Congresses to get their compensation increased. The business of the courts has so increased that they are worked as hard as any men I know of anywhere, and at this miserable compensation.

I am glad the gentleman has so modified his amendment as not to increase the compensation of many of the marshals, but these criers and bailiffs are, I think, entitled to an increase of pay, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALLISON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly bill of the House No. 1227, making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on sections six and seven of the deficiency bill be closed in one minute after the committee shall resume the consideration of the same.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ALLIson in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the deficiency bill.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on this and the succeeding section is closed in one minute by order of the House.

Mr. COOK. In that one minute I desire to say that I hold in my hand a letter signed by at least three judges of district courts of the United States, one marshal and two district attorneys, saying that competent men cannot be got to fill these offices at the rate of two dollars a day, which is all they are now receiving, and which is less than ordinary laborers are paid in the same places.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was taken on Mr. HUMPHREY's amendment to the amendment, and it was disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN stated the next question to be upon Mr. Cook's amendment.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I do not understand that my colleague offers that amendment as a substitute for the whole of the sixth section.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Cook.]

Mr. COOK. I will modify the amendment so as to offer it as a substitute for the last clause of the section, striking out all after the word "day" in the fourth line.

Mr. MAYNARD. I made the original motion to strike out the entire section, but I modified it so as to insert in lieu thereof what has been offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. COOK. That is true, and I cannot therefore modify the amendment.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The amendment of my colleague has nothing to do with the subject of the temporary clerks in the Quartermaster General's office. The provision in relation to their pay ought not to be stricken out, for these temporary clerks are nearly all soldiers.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not think the amendment is in order. It proposes to repeal an existing law, and I raise the question of order upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the point of order comes too late. The amendment has been fully debated, and the Chair thinks that it is in order.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I hope the gentleman from Illinois will move to add his amendment to the section, and not to strike out the section.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not know if my colleague on the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. Cook] has stated to the House that his amendment is recommended by that committee.

Several MEMBERS. He has so stated.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Then I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. STEVENS. I should have no objection to the amendment if it did not propose to strike out the section.

The question was taken on Mr. MAYNARD's amendment, as modified, and it was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move now to add the words "and the temporary clerks in the Quartermaster General's office shall receive the same pay as the clerks of class one."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move to strike out the seventh section of the bill, which is as follows:

And be it further enacted. That the deputy surveyor at the port of San Francisco be paid the same compensation annually that is now paid to the deputy collector at said port.

I wish to say one word in support of that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been closed upon this section by order of the House.

Mr. HALE. I hope I shall be allowed by general consent to say one word.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent cannot be given by the Committee of the Whole for that purpose.

Mr. HALE. I suppose, if it is not objected to, I can proceed.

Mr. HIGBY. If the gentleman is heard I shall have something to say in reply.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order.

Mr. HALE. Well, I hope my motion will prevail.

The question was put; and there were—ayes 33, noes 41; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HALE and McRUE were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 43, noes 57.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BIDWELL. I offer the following as an addition to the section:

And that the bonded clerks at the branch mint at San Francisco be paid a salary of $2,500 each, and the cashier therein be paid a salary of $3,000.

Mr. MAYNARD. I object to that amendment; it is not in order.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. It is not germane to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to insert the following as an additional section:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to carry into effect the recommendations of the commissioners appointed under the acts of April 19, 1864, and June 27, 1866, relative to the Moline Water Company and the water-power at Rock Island, as contained in the report of said commissioners.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill. I am willing, however, reserving my objection, to hear what my colleague has to say.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will explain the amendment. On the 27th of June, 1866, we passed a law appropriating $100,000 to secure water-power at the head of Rock Island. The arsenal there required further water-power, and commissioners were authorized to ascertain upon what terms an arrangement could be made with the company owning the water-power, and this appropriation of $100,000 was made to enable the Secretary of War to purchase that water-power. He was subsequently authorized by statute to make what terms he could in order that the water-power might be used for the arsenal. It was found they could not for $100,000 obtain the water-power and settle conflicting claims so the arsenal could be supplied with water-power sufficient for manufacturing there. An adjustment was made by which the Moline Water Company was permitted to retain over one quarter of the water-power and at the same time hire from the United States any surplus water-power beyond that needed by Government. This is to enable the Secretary to carry out this arrangement.

Mr. UPSON. How much additional money will be required?

Mr. HILL. I understand debate has been closed upon this section. I also make the point that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. That is the point I reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment out of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted. That in order to carry into effect the eleventh and twelfth articles of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians, confirmed by the Senate on the 21st day of February, in the year 1856, and the resolution of the Senate of the United States in pursuance thereof, made on the 9th day of March, in the year 1859, as finally adjusted by the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs made to the Senate on June 19, in the year 1860, and the tenth article of the treaty between the United States and the said Indians approved by the Senate of the United States on the 28th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1866, the sum of $900,000 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue a bond of the United States, payable to the said Choctaw tribe of Indians three years from the date of the approval of this act, without interest, for the sum of $932,560 85: Provided, That the said Choctaw tribe of Indians shall, in consideration of the payment of the sum hereby appropriated, receive the same in full satisfaction and discharge of all claims of the said tribe, and of the members thereof, against the United States existing prior to the 28th day of June, in the year 1866.

Mr. NIBLACK. I move to strike out "with-out" and insert "with;" so it will read "with interest."

As a member of the Committee on Appropriations not agreeing to this report, I desire to say a few words. If I am properly informed, the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which such matters generally go, has not examined this subject and has not formally recommended this section.

I do not profess to be acquainted with this claim historically, but from reading the section I learn that it is based upon some old treaties first entered into some years ago and renewed during the last year. Now, I am informed by gentlemen more familiar with the subject than I am, that since the first treaties were made with these Indians the most of them were engaged in the late rebellion and were rebels during the late war, yet it seems that some new treaty has been made with them since the war, by which they are restored to all the rights they had before the war, and by which their rights are somewhat enlarged, at least so far as the amount of money is concerned which is allowed to them. Now, I cannot understand why those Indians are to have so liberal terms for having engaged in the rebellion while white men who engaged in the same rebellion are to be proscribed.

Mr. UPSON. Is it because these Indians have been rebels that the gentleman wishes to pay them interest?

Mr. NIBLACK. I will come to that presently.

Mr. CONKLING, (in his seat.) I suppose they are genuine "copperheads."

Mr. NIBLACK. If, however, the sum claimed in this section is due them under treaties, then I insist we should pay them interest. It would be dealing unjustly with them to require them to wait for three years for the half of their money without any interest; and hence the reason why I have proposed this amendment. But I am inclined to think that this is an old, stale claim, which ought at least to be subjected to a close scrutiny by this House before we attempt to pass it; the more especially when it is for so large a sum as this seems to be.

I desire to hear from the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs as to whether or not I am correctly informed as to the status of this tribe of Indians, or a portion of them, during the war. I desire him to state whether the Committee on Indian Affairs have examined this question, and also to give us any information he may have to communicate on this subject, and if he will consent to do so, I will yield the floor to him temporarily for that purpose.

Mr. WINDOM. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. NIBLACK,] I will say that the Committee of Indian Affairs have not yet examined this claim. I myself have read a communication from the Secretary of the Interior in reference to it, and therefore I think I understand something about the points involved. As to the status of these Indians during the war I think it is pretty well understood they have been rebels. I believe it is also true, as has been stated, that the Senate in 1866 made a treaty with these Indians by which they agreed to revive past obligations. I am not prepared to say whether this appropriation should be made or not.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to take no part in this debate further than a simple statement of facts in regard to this subject. I will simply ask the attention of members here to a brief statement of the reasons which governed the action of the Committee on Appropriations in this regard.

There has been a claim by the Choctaw Indians against the United States for a great many years, arising out of lands which were taken and sold by the United States, the proceeds of which the Indians claim by virtue of the treaty of 1830, I think. The United States resisted that claim. A treaty was made between these Indians and the United States, which bears date June 22, 1855. By the eleventh article of that treaty, which I have now before me, it was provided as follows:

"The Government of the United States not being prepared to assent to the claims set up under the treaty of September 27, 1830, and so earnestly contended for by the Choctaws as a rule of settlement, but justly appreciating the sacrifices, faithful services, and general good conduct of the Choctaw people, and being desirous that their rights and claims against the United States shall receive a just, fair, and liberal consideration, it is therefore stipulated that the following questions be submitted for adjudication to the Senate of the United States:

First, whether the Choctaws are entitled to or shall be allowed the proceeds of the sale of the lands ceded by them to the United States by the treaty of September 17, 1830, deducting therefrom the costs of their survey and sale, and all just and proper expenditures and payments under the provisions of said treaty; and if so, what price per acre shall be allowed to the Choctaws for the lands remaining unsold, in order that a final settlement with them may be effected; or,

"Second, whether the Choctaws shall be allowed a gross sum in further and full settlement of all their claims, national and individual, against the United States, and if so, how much."

That was the clause of the treaty which was made, as I have stated, in the year 1855, and ratified by the Senate. Subsequently to that time the Senate adopted a resolution upon the subject in which they settle the rule under which the award was to be made. The committee will bear in mind that by the treaty the adjustment of the claim was referred to the Senate of the United States exclusively, without the assent of the Indians being required to such action as they should adopt, except what was involved in the treaty itself. The Senate resolution was passed at the second session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress. After reciting the eleventh article of the treaty, which I have just recited, the Senate adopted the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the Choctaws be allowed the proceeds of the sales of such lands as have been sold by the United States on the 1st day of January last, deducting therefrom the costs of their survey and sale, and all proper expenditures and payments under said treaty; excluding the reservations allowed and secured, and estimating the scrip issued in lieu of reservations at the rate of $1 25 per acre; and further that they be also allowed twelve and a half cents per acre for the residue of said land.

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior cause an account to be stated with the Choctaws showing what amount is due them according to the above prescribed principles of settlement, and report the same to Congress."

This was the action of the Senate, in which they declared the rules which were to determine the amount to be awarded. In pursuance of that action of the Senate, the Secretary of the Interior reported the amount of about twenty-eight hundred thousand dollars I think. That report from the Secretary of the Interior was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate for reexamination and report. That Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate subsequently reported a sum which reduced the amount stated by the Secretary of the Interior, by certain set-offs claimed to be equitably due the United States, to about twenty-three hundred thousand dollars. And there the matter was left in the Senate at the time.

Subsequently, however, an appropriation of $500,000 was made by Congress on account of this claim, which has arrived at the stage which I have mentioned and described now. That reduced the amount again to about one million eight hundred thousand dollars. There the matter has stood until since the rebellion, when a treaty was formed between the United States and these Indians, which I greatly regret ever found its place upon the statute-book. That treaty was made in April, 1866, subsequently ratified by the Senate, and proclaimed on the 10th of July, 1866. This treaty, which I think was made very improperly and very unfortunately for the United States, embraced an article which I will read. It is article forty-five of the treaty, and is as follows:

"All the rights, privileges, and immunities heretofore possessed by said nation or individuals thereof, or to which they were entitled under the treaties and resolutions heretofore made and had in connection with them, shall be, and are hereby declared to be, in full force, so far as they are consistent with the provisions of this treaty."

Thus it turns out that this tribe of Indians, which had been in hostility to the United States, were by virtue of this treaty reinstated with all their former rights, with the single exception that the annuities they were entitled to pending the war, which had not been paid, were not to be paid, but they were to be resumed from and after the 1st day of July, 1866. This brought the committee to this condition: there was an amount which was due to these Indians by virtue, first, of the treaty which submitted it to an award; secondly, by the award which determined the principles by which it was to be ascertained; thirdly, that it was reduced by certain set-offs; and fourthly, thinking it however barely possible there may be some set-offs against these Indians which arose from general appropriations for the support of destitute Indians of the southern superintendency, which the House will recollect were made against my earnest protest at the last session of Congress. This was to appropriate only to them one half of the amount in the manner I have stated, giving them certificates not negotiable for three years, while if anything were found in the next three years in the way of set-off it might reduce this sum. I believe I have stated accurately all the facts of the case.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Here is a treaty made between the Government of the United States and the Choctaws.

Mr. KASSON. I suppose the gentleman refers to the treaty which provided for the award. The first was between the United States and the whole of the Indians.

Mr. MORRILL. After considerable experience here, I am not surprised at anything in the last night of a session of Congress.

Mr. NIBLACK. I desire to say, as I have succeeded in obtaining some information, that I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the whole section.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to call the attention of gentlemen to what this treaty provides.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say a word myself.

Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, I am prepared not to be surprised at almost any proposition at the last night of a session; but I do confess this is a little larger amount than I expected it possible to be presented on the present occasion. Here comes, not from the regular committee constituted to examine such claims and to report whether they are right or wrong, but in a mere deficiency appropriation bill a proposition to appropriate $2,000,000 on a State treaty twelve years old, and one that has been ignored for the past six years.

Now, sir, I desire to call the attention of the House to the manner in which we have been treating these rebel Indians for the last five years. In the Indian appropriation bill of 1862 it was provided that all appropriations heretofore or hereafter made to carry into effect treaty stipulations or otherwise in behalf of any tribe or tribes of Indians, all or any portion of whom shall be in a state of actual hostility to the Government of the United States, including the Cherokees, Creeks, Choctaws, Chickasaws, &c., and any other affiliated tribes, may and shall be suspended and postponed wholly or in part at and during the discretion and pleasure of the President.

The committee informally rose.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that on the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, that body had receded from all its amendments not agreed to by the House of Representatives, except its forty-fourth amendment, to which it still adhered.

The committee then resumed its session.

DEFICIENCY BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. Now, let me call attention to the law of 1864. It was then provided that the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized to suspend such part of the amount herein appropriated to carry into effect any treaty stipulations with any tribe or tribes of Indians, all or any portion of whom shall be in actual hostility to the Government of the United States, including the Creeks, Choctaws, Chickasaws, &c., and other affiliated tribes, as well as the Cherokees, as may be found necessary to support such individual members of said tribes as have been driven from their homes or reduced to want on account of their friendship for the United States, and enable them to subsist until they can support themselves in their own country. The same thing exactly was repeated in 1865.

That is the way in which we have treated this subject for the last four or five years. Now, this claim arises from a treaty of 1856. So long as these appropriations came before the Committee of Ways and Means they have been uniformly rejected, and it is a pity that many of these Indian treaties, so called, had not been made inoperative and void by the refusal of the House to make appropriations therefor from the start.

Mr. STEVENS. Did they ever come before them?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir, they did while the gentleman was chairman—even those provisions of 1862 and 1864 were inserted when the gentleman himself was chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means—and I will say so far as concerns these treaties with the tribes of Indians it is perfectly notorious that you can make any treaty if you only have whisky enough on the occasion. It is a farce to call them solemn treaties. I regard them as not worth the paper on which they are written. I have been informed that when the Senate acted upon this treaty there were scarcely half the members present. It has never been considered at any rate with that attention an appropriation of this magnitude demands.

But, sir, if the claim was as pure as snow, coming here at this late hour of the session I think it would be well for us to reject it. Let us have time to examine a claim of this kind before it is pressed to a vote. If these Indians have turned rebels and sold their services to southern rebels to fight their battles and by Indian warfare to strike terror into the hearts of Union men, women, and children of the South, they have forfeited all claim they may have had upon the United States, whether arising under treaty stipulations or otherwise. I do not think we need to be in any hurry about making this appropriation, and I am quite satisfied there will be no harm in postponing it until we can determine first whether anything is due, and second, if anything is due, how much.

Mr. GRINNELL. I move to perfect the text by offering the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be paid until the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House shall examine the claims of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians under treaty stipulations, and approve of the justness of this appropriation of $900,000.

This is a very large sum; and it relates to a very suspicious portion of the people of the United States, who happen not to stand so well before the country as I wish they did. I simply propose by this proviso, inasmuch as we have not time for examination, that the claim shall go to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and if it is decided to be a just one by that committee then let it be paid. These Cherokees and Choctaws are now dealing most unmercifully with the loyal portion of their tribe. It was proposed in this treaty that a certain sum, as settled by the Commissioner, should be paid to those loyal Indians. The disloyal people are impeding its payment; they are driving out the loyal men of Fort Gibson, who are now fleeing in mid-winter barefoot and almost naked. I wish to have the treaty examined, and I do not know where the claim can go so well as to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I wish to be no party to truce or treaty breaking, but I want an examination, and I believe if the question goes to this committee we shall have a proper adjustment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to call the attention of the House to one feature of this section. It provides that this claim shall be paid according to the terms of a certain adjustment made by the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate in their report to that body on the 19th of June, 1860. Now, there is no allegation that the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs was adopted by the Senate; and if it was not, it stands as a mere recommendation of the committee. I desire to know from the Committee on Appropriations whether there was any action by the Senate on that report, or whether it stands as a mere recommendation to the Senate by the committee as yet unacted upon.

Mr. GRINNELL. In addition to the treaty stipulations, I have it from the gentleman who was then Secretary of the Interior and from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that they would not allow the insertion of one dollar as being due to the Cherokees and Choctaws. I think it is due that the House should know so much in regard to it. I do not know what interpretation may be put upon the treaty; I only wish to have it thoroughly examined.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Exception seems to be taken to this appropriation because it is an appropriation bill. Now, sir, an appropriation bill is the proper place for appropriations to carry out treaties as much as to carry out laws. A treaty is the highest law. It seems from the treaties which were presented to the Committee on Appropriations that there is an obligation resting upon the Government of the United States to pay this sum of money. The gentleman from Vermont objects to this because it comes late in the session. So there are several appropriation bills that came late in the session, and the same objection will apply to every one of these appropriations. It is true this appropriation bill comes late in the session, as deficiency bills always do.

Now, if this is a treaty obligation upon the United States, there is no escape from it. The assertion that these Indians have been hostile to the Government, that they have been rebels or are doing this or that, that they are persecuting one another, is no argument against the obligation that we are under to carry out existing treaties, especially a treaty ratified by the Senate in June last, since the war closed. I suppose no gentleman desires to violate a solemn treaty obligation. That is the only question, and there is no more propriety in referring this subject to the Committee on Indian Affairs than there would be in referring any other item of appropriation to a committee which examines that subject. With the same propriety an appropriation for the purpose of carrying on the Treasury Department should be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and an appropriation to carry on the Indian department to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire a communication from the Department on this subject shall be read, and for that purpose I move to strike out the last word.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.
WASHINGTON, D. C., February 5, 1867.

SIR: I have the honor to invite the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to a claim of the Choctaw nation of Indians against the United States growing out of treaty stipulations, and to the necessity of an appropriation to meet it.

By the eleventh article of the treaty concluded at the city of Washington on the 22d of June, 1855, between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians, (Statutes-at-Large, vol. xi, p. 613,) it was stipulated and agreed as follows:

"The Government of the United States, not being prepared to assent to the claim set up under the treaty of September 27, 1830, and so earnestly contended for by the Choctaws as a rule of settlement, but justly appreciating the sacrifices, faithful services, and general good conduct of the Choctaw people, and being desirous that their rights and claims against the United States shall receive a just, fair, and liberal consideration, it is therefore stipulated that the following questions be submitted for adjudication to the Senate of the United States:

"1. Whether the Choctaws are entitled to or shall be allowed the proceeds of the sale of the lands ceded by them to the United States by the treaty of September 27, 1830, deducting therefrom the cost of their survey and sale and all just and proper expenditures and payments under the provisions of said treaty; and if so, what price per acre shall be allowed to the

Choctaws for the lands remaining unsold, in order that a final settlement with them may be promptly effected; or

"2. Whether the Choctaws shall be allowed a gross sum in further and full satisfaction of all their claims, national and individual, against the United States; and if so, how much."

Pursuant to this treaty stipulation the Senate, on the 9th of March, 1859, made their award in the form of a resolution in the following words, namely, (Senate Journal, Second Session Thirty-Fifth Congress, 1858-59, page 493:)

"Whereas the eleventh article of the treaty of June 22, 1855, with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, provides that the following questions be submitted for decision to the Senate of the United States:

"1. Whether the Choctaws are entitled to or shall be allowed the proceeds of the sale of the lands ceded by them to the United States by the treaty of September 27, 1830, deducting therefrom the costs of their survey and sale, and all just and proper expenditures and payments under the provisions of said treaty; and if so, what price per acre shall be allowed to the Choctaws for the lands remaining unsold, in order that a final settlement with them may be promptly effected; or

"2. Whether the Choctaws shall be allowed a gross sum in further and full satisfaction of all their claims, national and individual, against the United States; and if so, how much:

"Resolved, That the Choctaws be allowed the proceeds of the sale of such lands as have been sold by the United States on the 1st day of January last, deducting therefrom the costs of their survey and sale and all proper expenditures and payments under said treaty; excluding the reservations allowed and secured, and estimating the scrip issued in lieu of reservations at the rate of $1 25 per acre; and further, that they be also allowed twelve and a half cents per acre for the residue of said lands.

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior cause an account to be stated with the Choctaws, showing what amount is due them according to the above prescribed principles of settlement and report the same to Congress." (See Reports Senate, No. 374, second session Thirty-Fifth Congress, 1858-59.)

In obedience to the direction contained in this resolution, the Secretary of the Interior caused an account to be stated, and found that according to the principles of settlement prescribed by said resolution there was due to the Choctaw Nation the sum of $2,881,247 30.

This account was transmitted to Congress on the 8th of May, 1860. In the Senate it was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, who revised the account and reduced the amount thus reported to be due the Choctaws to $2,332,560 85. (Senate Document, 233, first session Thirty-Sixth Congress; Senate Reports, volume two.)

Congress, by act of March 2, 1861, (Statutes-at-Large, volume twelve, page 238,) made an appropriation of $500,000 on account of this claim, in the following form:

"For payment to the Choctaw nation or tribe of Indians, on account of their claim under the eleventh and twelfth articles of the treaty with said nation or tribe, made the 22d of June, 1855, the sum of $500,000; $250,000 of which sum shall be paid in money; and for the residue the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be issued to the proper authorities of the nation or tribe, on their requisition, bonds of the United States, authorized by law at the present session of Congress: Provided, That in the future adjustment of the claim of the Choctaws, under the treaty aforesaid, the said sum shall be charged against the said Indians."

Soon after this appropriation was made the sum of $250,000 was paid the Indians in money as directed, and the $250,000, provided to be paid in bonds, having been drawn from the Treasury and used according to the direction contained in the sixth section of the act of March 3, 1866, (Statutes-at-Large, volume twelve, page 563,) there is still due the Indians under the award made by the Senate the sum of $1,832,560 85.

By treaty concluded with the Choctaws and Chickasaws on the 28th of April, 1866, it was stipulated and agreed as follows, namely: (Acts first session Thirty-Ninth Congress, pages 90 and 95.)

"ARTICLE X. The United States reaffirms all obligations arising out of treaty stipulations or acts of legislation with regard to the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, entered into prior to the late rebellion, and in force at that time, not inconsistent herewith; and further agrees to renew the payment of all annuities and other moneys accruing under such treaty stipulations and acts of legislation, from and after the close of the fiscal year ending on the 30th of June, 1866."

"ARTICLE XLV. All the rights, privileges, and immunities heretofore possessed by said nations or individuals thereof, or to which they were entitled under the treaties and legislation heretofore made and had in connection with them, shall be, and are hereby declared to be, in full force, so far as they are consistent with the provisions of this treaty."

These Indians are represented as being in a very destitute and necessitous condition, and are urgent in their request for an appropriation of the balance of the amount awarded to them, but which remains unpaid.

It is believed that it could not be made available to them at a more opportune occasion than the present, as it would afford relief from their present sufferings and wants, and furnish them the means of repairing to a great extent the losses to which they have been subjected during the past few years.

The balance claimed by the Choctaw nation is clearly due them, and for the payment of which the faith of the Government is solemnly pledged. I therefore recommend that the necessary appropriation tion be made to enable this Department to pay the amount as soon as practicable, being satisfied that it will be of more value to them now than at any future period.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
O. H. BROWNING,
Secretary.

HON. THADDEUS STEVENS, Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say that I have carefully examined the letter of the Secretary of the Interior in hopes of finding good ground in it or in the treaty stipulations to which it refers for rejecting this large claim; but after a very careful reading I have come to the conclusion that we cannot escape the legal obligations resting upon us to pay this claim. It makes no difference whether, as the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has said, the treaties were obtained by the use of whisky or any other means. I know nothing about that. They are here recorded in the volume of our laws, and in accordance with the Constitution those treaties are a part of the law of the land.

Now, what says this treaty of 1866? I will read a sentence from the tenth article of the treaty, which is a perfect answer to all that has been said about their connection in any way with the rebellion.

"The United States reaffirm all obligation arising out of treaty stipulations or acts of legislation in regard to the Choctaw and Cherokee nations entered into prior to the late rebellion, and further agrees to renew the payment of all annuities and other moneys accruing under such treaty stipulations and acts of legislation from and after the 30th of June, 1866."

Mr. MAYNARD. Does that relate to anything but their annuities?

Mr. GARFIELD. To all their claims and treaty stipulations.

Mr. MAYNARD. What does that mean when it says "after the 30th of June, 1866?"

Mr. GARFIELD. It means that they are to be paid after that date.

Mr. MAYNARD. I submit that it means their annuities are to be paid after that date.

Mr. GARFIELD. If it means their annuities only, why does it say their "annuities and other moneys accruing under treaty stipulations?" Now, I say, tracing this matter down step by step, from the first adjustment of this claim by the Senate and the treaty stipulations, through the supplemental account made up by the Secretary of the Interior, which account was submitted to the Senate, and by the Senate in 1860 reduced $600,000 and then allowed, another law appropriating $500,000 still further reducing the claim, and the remainder left standing on treaty stipulations, and only suspended during the rebellion, and revived again by treaty last June, it seems to me that we are as firmly bound as the United States can be by treaty and by law to pay this claim, and I know of no way of escaping it. We of course can keep it away from these people by brute force of numbers here; but if we design to keep our treaties and pay our debts we ought to pay this claim.

Mr. STEVENS. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. I renew the amendment for the purpose of saying a few words. Suppose the gentlemen who are in this Hall to-night were sitting here as the directors of a private corporation, does any man believe that upon facts like those which have been presented here we would audit and pay a claim like this? Would any body of men, responsible as a board of trustees, ever sit upon facts and circumstances like these and audit a claim of upward of eighteen hundred thousand dollars? If any man does think so, then I wish he would take the trouble, as I have done, to talk with Mr. Cooley, who is now within the sound of my voice, and who made the treaty from which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has just read to sustain the side of the argument precisely opposite to that which I think it supports. Whoever will talk with him will find that in the estimation of this man, intelligent and well-informed upon this subject, this claim is worse than fictitious in almost all its parts.

This treaty, which he concluded with these

Indians, bound the Government to pay to them $2,300,000, and something more, in satisfaction of everything, as he understood; there being a technical reservation in the treaty that if it turned out that under existing stipulations they could show themselves entitled to anything more, they might "have their day in court," so to speak, in order to establish this remaining claim.

Now, I understand—and the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, [Mr. WINDOM,] who I see is attending to this debate, knows better than I do about this matter—that Indians of this same tribe, if not the tribe itself, are here, or about to be here, with even more claims for damages sustained by them during the late rebellion, by being removed, expelled, or excluded from their lands. If that shall turn out to be so, there is a provision under which an investigation shall be had, and payment probably made, as the result of that investigation.

And now, in the face of all this, on the last night of the session—as cannot be too often repeated—this claim comes here upon an appropriation bill, stated, as I understand it, at the maximum which this former treaty allows, assuming everything that it is necessary to assume in order to show that any amount is due. And I regret that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GRINNELL] has offered, in the best of faith no doubt, which amendment I was told some time before we reached the consideration of this section would be offered. I was not told that it would be offered by him, for I have no doubt his purpose was a good one; but I was told that the amendment would be offered, and that it was for the purpose, to use the phrase that was used to me, of "letting the House down easy," and establishing a sort of compromise about this claim, and lead us to suppose that we were doing a very safe thing, because the Indian Committee were a committee to whom we could look for right action; and then the Indian Committee were to be surrounded by men—not Indians, not copper-colored men, for they are not ordinarily the men who own a magnificent claim like this—surrounded by all the men interested in furnishing ex parte statements, in bringing before the committee all sorts of information, which no committee, with reasonable diligence, with no client or counsel to aid them, would be expected to trace out for the purpose of showing the fallacy of, if in truth the information was fallacious.

Mr. STEVENS. I am rather surprised, Mr. Speaker, that the usually logical gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] should have quoted so many parol cases, such as it would not be admissible to introduce in an argument in court. He talks about what he heard somebody say out of doors, or perhaps in conversation in this Hall, in regard to the interpretation of this treaty. My friend, who is one of the very best lawyers in the country, knows that everything of this kind would be spurned in a court of justice; it would not be listened to for a moment.

I ask that the concluding paragraph of the report of the Secretary of the Interior may be read. I believe it has not yet been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"The balance claimed by the Choctaw nation is clearly due them, and for the payment of which the faith of the Government is solemnly pledged. I therefore recommend that the necessary appropriation be made to enable this Department to pay the amount as soon as practicable, being satisfied that it will be of more value to them now than at any future period."

Now, sir, the question before us for determination is whether we shall repudiate the debts of the Government and dishonor the nation, or whether we shall abide by a treaty, a part of the paramount law of the land. If we refuse to pay what those treaties contracted for, what the Senate liquidated, what is ascertained by the Department to amount to-day to $1,800,000, all that the President in his veto message to-day has said about us is true, every word of it; and we are not worthy to be considered as abiding by the Constitution.

Sir, that these Indians were hostile may be true, and probably is. But, sir, by the treaty of 1866 all that was condoned; they were reinstated in all their rights by the terms of that treaty. It was provided that only the past annuities should be forfeited, and that their future annuities should commence at a certain time. Sir, this sets at rest all the stories which the gentleman from New York has heard out of doors—all this clamor about these Indians. Sir, the Indians of this Choctaw tribe are as civilized and as sober as this House, even with the aid of the Congressional Temperance Society. [Laughter.] They have as good schools as are to be found in the State of New York—schools that would be an honor to any country. These Indians went into the rebellion probably for the same reason which influenced most of the southern people—because they were slaveholders. The moment they returned to their allegiance they abolished slavery, even before it was abolished elsewhere. They are now a free people, although at the time of the rebellion there were individuals among them owning as many as one hundred and eighty negroes. They are now reinstated in their allegiance and their rights under the Government; and by a treaty, duly concluded by the Executive and the Senate, it has been solemnly decreed that this sum shall be paid them.

We are told by some gentlemen—and this also is a mere matter of parol—that there was a thin house when this matter was acted on by the Senate. Is it intended to argue that therefore the treaty is not binding? Is such logic as that to be used to influence the minds of sensible men? And is the clamor about frauds to be got up here to induce us to violate solemn contracts entered into by the Government?

Mr. Chairman, in order to terminate debate I move that the committee rise.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I hope the gentleman will allow some little time to gentlemen on this side.

Mr. WARD, of New York. I hope we shall come to a vote on this question, that we may have some probability of passing this bill during the present Congress.

The motion of Mr. STEVENS was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALLISON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 1227) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, had directed him to report that the committee had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1059) for the relief of Sylvanus Sawyer and William E. Ward.

An act (H. R. No. 710) to pay and discharge certain debts and expenditures to the corporation of the city of Washington.

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 174) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and pay the claim of John R. Beckley.

CLOSING OF DEBATE.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that all debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on the pending section of the deficiency bill be closed within two minutes after its consideration shall be resumed.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I want five minutes.

Mr. STEVENS. I will say ten minutes, then. The motion was agreed to.

MOTION FOR RECESS.

Mr. HENDERSON, (at ten minutes past one o'clock, a. m.) Mr. Speaker, this is Sunday morning, and I move that the House take a recess until Monday morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, as it is his duty, that unless the appropriation bills are reported back in this night's session from the Committee of the Whole, passed by the House, sent to the Senate and passed, then sent to committees of conference, and the reports of the committees agreed to, they will probably be lost, unless the President should sign them without reading them. The Clerk has all the force he can employ engaged in engrossing, but it will take twenty hours to engross the tax bill, and it will probably have to be reported to-morrow (Sunday) evening and sent to the President.

Mr. HOGAN. I move the House continue in session until nine o'clock in the morning, and then take a recess until nine o'clock to-morrow night.

Mr. STEVENS. We cannot fix any time now for taking a recess. All we have to do is to apply ourselves to finishing up as rapidly as may be business now before us.

Mr. HOGAN. I withdraw my motion.

PRINTING OF EVIDENCE.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, called up a motion made at the last session of Congress to reconsider the vote by which certain evidence was ordered to be printed, as it was an entirely useless expense.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to; and then the order for the printing was rescinded.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL moved that five thousand copies of the tax bill in the usual form be printed for the use of the House.

The motion, under the law, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

BANKRUPT BILL.

Mr. HILL moved that five thousand copies of the bankrupt bill be printed for the use of the House.

The motion, under the law, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

DEFICIENCY BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ALLISON in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN stated that all debate on the pending section in reference to the Choctaw Indians was by order of the House to be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I do not expect to be able to enlighten this committee on the subject under discussion before it. I must confess I know very little about this appropriation, and have been unable so far to learn much from anything that has been said here. We have been pretty well assured, however, that this claim has never been considered anywhere by any committee; and that it has not regularly been reported from any committee.

But the point I wish particularly brought to the attention of the House is the one to which I will refer. I am somewhat refreshed to hear the remarks which have fallen from the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] I am glad to hear him enunciate the doctrine which he has to-night in regard to these rebel Indians. I remember only a short time ago when he declared in reference to the States called the rebel States, that all constitutions, all the treaties and obligations entered into with them were abrogated and dissolved by the war. I recollect how eloquently he discoursed on that subject, and how boldly he claimed the rebels were conquered subjects, in our power, to be treated as we saw fit, by what he declared to be the power of the conqueror under the laws of nations. I am glad to hear sympathy expressed on that side of the House for any persons whom they may consider ever to have been in the wrong. I do not see, however, why treaties made by the United States with these Indians were not abrogated, were not dissolved by the fierce fires of civil war which dissolved the Constitution of the United States, which dissolved the constitution of the States, which dissolved all compacts, which dissolved all obligations that ever existed between the people of the rebellious States and the people of the adhering States.

I cannot understand why the same rule should not apply to these Indians, or why we should not be absolved from all our obligations to them as well as to those white persons who took part in the rebellion. I cannot understand, Mr. Chairman, why the gentleman would not apply precisely the same rule to the rebel Indians that he would to rebel whites; and yet we see here that he would apply not only a different rule but a more kindly and generous one to the savage Indian who has been in rebellion against the United States than he would apply to those of his own race, kindred, and blood. The Indian's rebellion does not, it seems, according to the gentleman's logic, dissolve our treaties with him nor our obligations to him; but the white man's rebellion, the white man's violations of the relations between him and us, absolved us from all our obligations to him. Now, I would apply precisely the same rule to the Indian as to the white man. If we have entered into any obligation to the Indians which is binding; if we have plighted our faith; if we have recognized since the rebellion the treaties made before the rebellion, or have in any way condoned their rebellion, then I would fulfill the obligation and stand by the treaty; and I admonish the gentleman that the same rule applies to the people of the South, and that if since the war we have condoned their rebellion, if we have admitted that the relations which existed between us before the war are still in existence, if we have pardoned any of them, then let us acknowledge the obligation and preserve our faith and honor to all, without regard to race or color.

Mr. WINDOM. By the same treaty of 1866, under which it is claimed that all our liabilities to these tribes were revived, it is also provided that a commission shall be appointed to go into the Indian country and take proof of the claims of loyal Indians for damages committed against them by the Choctaws and Chickasaws who were disloyal. Now, it is insisted by the nation that we are bound to pay them under this treaty; and the committee are about to hasten through the House this section in regard to their pay, while at the same time their agents have placed upon our table a protest against paying what they are bound under the same treaty to pay for damages done to loyal Indians.

Now, sir, I am not prepared to say whether we are bound to pay this debt provided for in this eighth section or not; but this I do feel satisfied of, that if we do pay it we should at the same time require that nation to comply with their obligations, entered into by the same treaty, to pay the loyal Indians among them for the damage which they have done them. I am in favor of postponing this for the present and settling both at the same time.

Mr. GRINNELL. I rise simply to reply to the allusion that was made to me by my friend from New York, [Mr. CONKLING]—to reply to his intimation that the resolution which I introduced was intended to sugar-coat this nauseous pill.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me I will state that I said expressly that I had no doubt his purpose was to guard it, but that I had been told long before we reached that section there would be such a motion made, though not that it would be made by him.

Mr. GRINNELL. Well, I simply desire to say that during the four years that I have been here I have never yet been approached by any claimant nor by the agent of any claimant before the American Congress; and that not only have I never conversed with any of these parties, but that I do not even know their names. I believed that if this claim were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, under the supervision of the able chairman of that committee, for whom I have the highest respect, it would receive a fair and honest and a timely adjustment; and my resolution was designed to secure for it such an adjustment. That was my purpose. I was prejudiced against the claim. I believed, as I still believe, that the parties asking this measure are bad; I believe they are using their brothers, the loyal Indians, with cruelty; and I wish not to pay one dollar more than is required by the letter of the treaty. In the proviso which I offered I meant not "sugar-coating" of any kind, but honesty and justice to all parties concerned. I have deemed this brief statement due to myself, in view of the intimation made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, it is claimed by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that the rejection of this claim will be bad faith and a violation of the treaty stipulations with the Indians named. The decision of the Attorney General of the United States, as read before the House in the Miami Indian case, is in direct conflict with the opinion of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, and declares in express terms that the Congress of the United States have not only the power but the right to withhold appropriations in execution of Indian treaties, and thus indirectly defeat their purposes. It is charged, and not denied, that these Choctaw Indians were rebels and participated in arms in the attempt to destroy the Government of the United States. Sir, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania has repeatedly announced to this House and the country that he favored measures to "punish traitors and make treason odious," and now that an opportunity offers to stamp the treason of those faithless recipients of our past protection and paternal care he abandons his avowed purposes, and we who would follow him are compelled to execute the wishes of the loyal men of the country. Sir, I rejoice in the opportunity of placing myself consistently on the record, and have sought opportunity to do so from the first day of this session.

Mr. GRINNELL. At the request of gentlemen about me I withdraw my amendment.

The question being then taken upon Mr. MORRILL's motion to strike out the entire section, there were—ayes eighty-five, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. GRINNELL. I offer the following as an additional amendment:

Be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to pay to the Yankton Sioux Indian scouts, who were called into service by General Sully, in 1864, for the protection of the frontiers of Dakota and Iowa, the sum of twenty-five dollars per month each, for their services and the use of their horses for the time they were actually employed, and for this purpose the sum of $7,500 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. UPSON. I rise to a point of order. This amendment is not germane to the bill; it is independent legislation.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I make the additional point, that the appropriation here proposed is not in pursuance of any law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. HALE. I submit the following amendment to the bill:

Be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, in order to afford suitable fire-proof rooms in the Treasury building for the Bureau of Internal Revenue and its records and files, and to remove the same from the unsafe building where they now are, and to relieve the Treasury building from the nuisance and injury caused by the printing and manufacturing operations now carried on therein, to dispense with the present printing and engraving establishment of the Treasury, and to procure the engraving and printing of the bonds, notes, fractional currency, and other Government securities and circulating medium by contract with such parties as shall contract to do the same in the best and most secure manner, and on the most reasonable terms, after full competition being allowed by advertisement for proposals; and a sufficient sum to pay the expenses of such removals and changes and advertising is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. STEVENS. I raise the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I offer the following amendment to the bill:

Be it further enacted, That for one year from and after the passage of this act, machinery for the manufacture of beet sugar, and imported for that purpose solely, shall be exempt from duty.

Mr. STEVENS. I raise the point of order that this amendment is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The amendment is not in order.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the committee rise and report the bill.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I would inquire who objected to my amendment?

Mr. STEVENS. I did.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Will the gentleman withdraw his objection for a moment?

Mr. STEVENS. I cannot; we have but little time left in which to finish very important legislation. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I rise to a point of order: some time since, in stating who was entitled to the floor, the Chair distinctly stated that the gentleman from New York, in front of the Chair, was entitled to the floor; and that he would afterwards recognize the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HOTCHKISS,] on the left of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did recognize the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HOTCHKISS,] who offered an amendment, which has been ruled out of order.

The committee rose informally, and the Speaker resumed the Chair.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1039) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1868.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

The House, in the Committee of the Whole, again resumed the amendment of the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. HOOPER, of Utah. I offer the following, to come in as an additional section:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the officers appointed under the provisions of the seventh section of the act entitled "An act granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners on the public lands, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1866, shall, in addition to the duties imposed upon them by the said act, do and perform all the duties which the officers of any land district may legally do until such time as the regular land office is established.

Mr. STEVENS. I rise to a point of order. The amendment is independent legislation, and therefore not in order on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I move to amend by inserting the following as an additional section:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to examine anew the site for the jail authorized to be erected for the District of Columbia, by an act of Congress of July, 1866, and if in his opinion the site now selected is not suitable for the purpose he is hereby authorized to select a different site: Provided, That if a proper and eligible site can be found on any of the Government land or reservations the said jail shall be located thereon, and if no such site can be obtained then the said Secretary is authorized to purchase the most eligible tract of land upon which to locate the same, at a price not exceeding $50,000; and the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, to pay for any tract of land purchased under the provisions of this act.

Mr. STEVENS. I rise to a point of order, that this amendment is not germane to the bill, and is independent legislation and not appropriate to this bill.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. Let me state that there has been an appropriation of $200,000 to build a jail. A site located in a swamp has been selected, not proper for this building. But the jail must be built upon the site selected, unless it is changed. And this amendment is intended—

Mr. STEVENS. I call the gentleman to order, and ask the Chair to decide upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] and rules the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. RICE] to be out of order.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask that the latter part of Rule 120 be read.

Mr. STEVENS. We do not want any more rules read. Let the question be taken.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I desire to say—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. LE BLOND. Does the Chair decide that the question of whether the Chair is wrong or right in his decision is not debatable? I contend that it is; and if the Chair will examine the rule he will find that it is debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that by order of the House all debate on this bill is closed.

Mr. SCHENCK. I think the Chair is in error. According to my recollection the motion in the House was distinct that debate should be closed on the pending section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must be governed by the orders of the House as communicated to him. The information of the action of the House received by the Chair is that all debate was closed upon this section and all amendments thereto. And the practice is established by long usage that when debate is closed on any given section or paragraph it is also closed on all amendments to or following that paragraph, whether in the form of new sections or not. And no debate is in order until another paragraph or section of the text of the bill, if there be one, is read.

Mr. STEVENS. The question now is, as I understand it, whether the decision of the Chair in ruling the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. RICE] out of order shall stand as the judgment of this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the question. The question was taken; and there were—ayes seventy-two, noes not counted.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend by adding the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to carry into effect the recommendations of the commissioners appointed under the acts of April 19, 1864, and June 27, 1866, relative to the Moline Water Company and the water-power at Rock Island, Illinois, as contained in the report of said commissioners, and to make application for that purpose of the money heretofore appropriated for securing water-power at the head of Rock Island.

Mr. STEVENS. I make the point of order, that this amendment is not germane to the bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. I beg the Chair, before deciding that question, to look at the law, which will show that the amendment simply proposes an application of an appropriation already made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, after examining the law, thinks that the amendment is in order.

Mr. SCHENCK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words in support of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. Mr. SCHENCK. Well, sir, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moved to close debate on the pending section only, announcing to us that it was not intended to terminate debate upon new sections which might be offered. Before the vote was taken I asked the present occupant of the Chair whether the debate was to be closed on the section only, leaving new sections open to debate, and I understood from the Chair that such was the effect of the motion. Now, sir, if I am not permitted to go on and explain the amendment which I have offered I withdraw it. I am satisfied that, if it were properly understood by the House, it would encounter no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to be to close debate upon the eighth section—the last section of the bill—and all amendments thereto; and on recurring to the Journal of the Clerk, the Chair finds that to be the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania which was adopted.

Mr. SCHENCK. My amendment is offered as an additional section. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania himself to say whether he did not tell me and others around me that his motion applied only to the pending section and not to amendments which might be offered as additional sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can only take the record as he finds it.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then the record is wrong. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to rule that no debate is in order.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then the Chair decides that I cannot be permitted to explain my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that this is in the nature of an amendment to the last section of the bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. I withdraw the amendment.

The committee rose informally.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had adopted the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1126) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. No. 523) entitled "An act for the relief of the inhabitants of cities and towns upon the public lands;" when the Speaker signed the same.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I move to add the following:

And be it further enacted, That for one year, from and after the passage of this act, machinery for the manufacture of beet sugar and imported for that purpose shall be exempt from all duty.

Mr. HILL. I raise the point that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. MAYNARD. I send up to the Chair the law of July 26, which I ask him to read in connection with the latter part of Rule 120, and he will see by examining them that the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read is perfectly in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

And be it further enacted, That no money shall be paid out of the Treasury toward the construction of the new jail for the District of Columbia unless the letting of the contract for said jail shall be suspended and delayed until perfected plans for the entire work shall have been completed and approved by a board of three, composed of disinterested and competent engineers and architects, of whom Quartermaster General M. C. Meigs and A. B. Mullett shall be two; nor unless the letting of said contract shall have been open to fair and equal competition on reasonable notice, printed in two leading newspapers published in the city of Washington, after such approval of said perfected plans.

Mr. STEVENS. I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane to this deficiency bill; that it has nothing in the world to do with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must overrule the point of order. It is a restriction of an appropriation already made, and therefore is in order.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move the following as an amendment to the amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be levied and assessed upon the taxable property of the District of Columbia and to be collected taxes sufficient pay for erecting said jail. And the Secretary of the Interior may require the municipal authorities and officers in the District of Columbia to perform such duties as he may require or prescribe to levy, assess, and collect the taxes herein authorized, and to pay the same into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALLISON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 1227, making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1867, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. STEVENS moved that all rules be suspended and the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. In accordance with the understanding heretofore made, I move to strike out the following paragraphs in the bill:

To pay for completing the repairs and furnishing the Executive Mansion, $35,000.

To thoroughly repair the roof of the Executive Mansion, $2,500.

I do not include the paragraph in reference to fuel for the President's House, at the suggestion of my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. STEVENS. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 58, nays 82, not voting 61; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, James M. Ashley, Baker, Beaman, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Bundy, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Defrees, Deming, Eckley, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Hulburd, Julian, Kelley, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Marquette, McClurg, McIndoe, McKuer, Morrill, Moulton, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Price, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Starr, Stokes, Upson, Van Aernam, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—68.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Arnell, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boyer, Buckland, Chanler, Cooper, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Finck, Garfield, Hale, Hart, Hawkins, Hayes, Higby, Hogan, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Jencks, Kasson, Kerr, Ketcham, Koontz, Kuykendall, Lafin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McKee, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Myers, Niblack, O'Neill, Phelps, Pike, Pomeroy, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Stevens, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Thornton, Trimble, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, and Woodbridge—61.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Benjamin, Blow, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Culver, Denison, Driggs, Dumont, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Griswold, Aaron Harding, Harris, Henderson, Hill, Hise, Hooper, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Jones, Kelso, Longyear, Maynard, McCullough, Newell, Nelson, Noell, Plants, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Sloan, Spalding, Stillwell, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Elihu B. Washburne, Winfield, and Wright—61.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the votes upon the various amendments; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST ROUTE BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 1182, to establish certain post routes. There is no legislation in it, nothing but post routes. It is a long bill, and if there is no objection, the amendments of the Senate will be concurred in.

No objection being made, the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

PUBLIC EXPENDITURES.

Mr. HULBURD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Expenditures, submitted a report; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

An accompanying resolution, for the printing of four thousand extra copies, was referred to the Committee on Printing, under the law.

JOHN H. SURRATT.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted a report relative to the arrest of John H. Surratt; and moved that it be laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LE BLOND. I want to hear that report read.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Has the Committee on the Judiciary a right to report on that subject?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it was authorized to report at any time.

Mr. LE BLOND. The Journal of the Clerk would settle that question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules upon his recollection.

Mr. SLOAN. I move to suspend the rules authorizing any member to demand the reading of the report.

Mr. LE BLOND. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. SLOAN. I withdraw the motion.

The Clerk read the report, in which the committee state that Mr. Surratt sailed from Canada for Liverpool about the middle of September, 1865; that information was received by Secretary Seward from Mr. Welding, then vice-consul at Liverpool, by communication dated September 27, 1865, that Surratt was at that time at Liverpool, or expected there in a day or two. After detailing all the facts intervening before the arrest of the prisoner, the committee say whether an indictment was procured does not appear from the testimony, but it does appear that no demand for the surrender of Surratt was ever made upon the British Government from the foregoing and other evidences produced. Upon investigation the committee find,

1. That the Executive did not send any detective or agent to Liverpool to identify Surratt or trace his movements, notwithstanding there was ample opportunity for doing so, as appears from the communication of Mr. Potter.

2. The Executive did not cause notice to be given to our minister at Rome that Surratt intended going there, when the Government had every reason to believe that such was his intentions.

3. That on November 24, 1865, an order was issued from the War Department, revoking the reward offered for the arrest of Surratt.

4. That from the reception of the communication revoking the order, dated August 8, 1866, up to October 16, 1866, no steps were taken either to identify or procure the arrest of Surratt, then known to be in the military service of the Pope.

The testimony of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and others, herewith submitted, explaining and tending to justify the acts of the Government in the premises does not, in the opinion of the committee, excuse the great delay in even attempting to arrest a person charged with complicity in the assassination of the late President; and while the committee do not charge improper motives upon the officers of the Government, they are constrained from the testimony to report that, in their opinion, due diligence in the arrest of Surratt was not exercised by the executive department of the Government.

Mr. LE BLOND. Mr. Chairman—

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay on the table and print is not debatable.

Mr. LE BLOND. I hope the gentleman from Vermont will withdraw the motion for a few moments.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. At this late hour in the evening I do not think it would be proper.

Mr. LE BLOND. Then I call for a division of the question; the motion to print is certainly debatable.

The SPEAKER. A division being demanded, the first question is on the motion to lay the report on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. On the motion to print the gentleman from Vermont has the floor.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I demand the previous question.

Mr. LE BLOND. I appeal to the gentleman to let me be heard a moment.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I will yield five minutes.

Mr. LE BLOND. I do not propose to enter into any argument upon this proposition. It is quite impossible that I should be able to do it, for I have no knowledge on the subject except what I have gathered from the reading of this report from the Clerk's desk. It bears upon its face a very palpable dodge. After going on detailing what has been done by the different Departments it concludes by exonerating the Secretary of State and the Secretary of War from any blame in the matter whatever; but it nevertheless does charge upon the Executive of the United States almost complicity in the assassination of the late President of the United States.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. Oh, no.

Mr. LE BLOND. I will change the expression and say that it charges a dereliction of duty in not having this man Surratt arrested, and conniving with his non-arrest. That is substantially the report.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that this is carrying the matter a little too far. If this report had come from the chairman of the committee or from the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] after what he has said in this House in the early part of the session against the Executive of the United States, charging him with dereliction of duty in regard to the arrest of this man, I would not be so much surprised, for it would only go in supposed vindication of what he said. I am now inclined to think that this report is without testimony sustaining the conclusion that they came to. I do not know but it is done for the purpose of bolstering up the gentleman from Massachusetts in the expressions that he used some time ago. If there is any testimony before the committee that goes to show, either directly or indirectly, that the President of the United States has not discharged his duty and his whole duty, the committee will confer a very great favor upon me and upon the country, I am sure, by showing what that testimony is, and how far it goes to sustain the report that has been made. I would ask the Clerk whether the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] has signed the report?

The SPEAKER. It is signed by the gentleman who reported it [Mr. WOODBRIDGE] for the committee.

Mr. LE BLOND. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] in his former speech agreed to retract and exonerate the Executive if he did not find testimony fully sustaining what he had said. Now, if there is any testimony here in any way sustaining the conclusions of the committee, I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will call our attention to it and have it read, so that we may see whether it justifies the House in ordering the report to be printed; and here let me say that if the Executive is guilty of any wrong, I for one am as willing to sustain the committee in casting the imputation as any man in this House. But it is wrong that this report should be sent broadcast over the land to reflect upon the President unless there is testimony to sustain the report of the committee. I hope to hear from the gentleman from Massachusetts upon the subject.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I will not detain the House by making any remarks, but I will simply state that the Committee on the Judiciary went through a patient investigation, as they were charged to do by order of the House, and that the conclusion in this report was agreed upon by every member of the committee save one, the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROGERS,] to whom it has been submitted and who has read it. Whether he intends to submit a minority report or not I do not know.

Mr. LE BLOND. I have been informed by the gentleman from New Jersey that he did desire to present a minority report. He is not in his seat this evening, and it is possible he may be engaged in preparing it.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The gentleman from Ohio has been pleased to advert to some remarks of mine in reference to this matter at the opening of the session. The House will remember that I then spoke with some feeling. I knew for one that the executive department of the Government was in possession of information in reference to Surratt, and I had waited through weeks and months for some public evidence as to the conduct of the Administration in reference to his arrest. I may have felt too strongly upon the subject. I had known Mr. Lincoln and become attached to him. I felt deeply his death at the hand of an assassin, and I supposed it was the duty of this Government and of every officer of it to traverse every continent, to vex every sea, to invade every island of the ocean from the Arctic to the Antarctic circle in pursuit of the man who was implicated in that great tragedy. I therefore spoke with deep feeling. But I think the House will remember that neither at that time nor at any other time did I charge any man connected with the Government with willful neglect of duty in this matter. Nor does the committee now charge any man with willful neglect of duty.

The testimony will show what the explanations made by the Secretary of State have been. If the House chooses to print that testimony it will be before the country. My own view in the matter is that there has been no willful neglect on the part of anybody, but rather on the other hand that neglect of duty which came from not appreciating, as the officers of the Government ought to have appreciated, the importance of the matter. But it was none the less the duty of the committee to lay before the House and before the country all the evidence in its possession. They have given in the report prepared by the gentleman from Vermont a summary of that testimony and the results to which the committee have come. No person connected with the Government is charged with willful neglect of duty, much less with a criminal intent to screen any person connected with the assassination.

If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] had listened carefully to the report as it was read he would have observed that there is no charge whatever made in that report against the President of the United States for not using proper diligence in procuring the arrest of J. H. Surratt. The report simply says that the executive department of the Government, not necessarily the Executive himself, had been remiss in the performance of its duty.

Mr. LE BLOND. Is there anything in the statements made by the Secretary of State or the Secretary of War that justifies the committee in coming to the conclusion that the President has been remiss in his duty in regard to the arrest of Surratt?

Mr. BOUTWELL. The committee have made no charge whatever against the President, either personally or officially. They have said that they are not able to fix the responsibility exactly and precisely upon anybody. The Secretary of War may have been remiss, the Secretary of State may have been remiss, the President himself may have been remiss. The committee do not charge any willful misconduct in this matter upon any particular person. But they do say that in their opinion there has been neglect of duty upon the part of some one or all of these officers in the executive department of the Government.

Mr. RAYMOND. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] for my own information, and for the information of this House, whether the alleged neglect of the executive department to pursue Surratt vigorously, ostentatiously, and publicly, from the time when they knew of his whereabouts, was not imputable probably, or at least possibly, to a desire to pursue him more carefully and more certainly than they could have done had all their movements been made known to the public?

Mr. BOUTWELL. The answer to that question is apparent from the question itself. It has not been with me a subject of complaint that they did not pursue J. H. Surratt publicly and ostentatiously. But now that we have inquired into all the proceedings of the Government in this regard, we find that not only did they not pursue him publicly and ostentatiously, but they did not in any way pursue him as the committee think they ought to have pursued him.

Mr. RAYMOND. One other question. It is quite possible that in conducting this pursuit the officers engaged in it may not have done precisely what the committee, with their further knowledge since acquired, now think ought to have been done. But unless I am mistaken in the general tenor of the testimony, the details of which I have not had an opportunity to read, there is evidence which shows that they kept track of Surratt, that the officers of this Government in foreign countries were instructed to keep track of him, but not to make any attempt to arrest him until they should have reason to believe that the demand for his surrender would be favorably responded to by the authorities of the country where he might then be found. That is all I desire to know about it.

I wish to make no imputation whatever upon the committee, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] will allow me to say that I am somewhat led to make this inquiry by his own statement of the feelings which led him to make use of the expressions which he used at the outset of this discussion. He alleged his deep interest in Mr. Lincoln, his personal acquaintance with him, his reverence and respect for him, which we all feel, as the reasons which led him to think that the Government had been remiss in this matter. Perhaps if nothing but remissness appeared we might all share that opinion; but if there is reason even to suppose that the Government was endeavoring to make this pursuit more successfully, I think it should lead to some tempering of our judgment in reference to this matter.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I can only speak for myself from the point of view suggested by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. RAYMOND.] The evidence does not disclose to my mind that those officers in the executive government to whom the country would naturally look for the conduct of a prosecution of this character, were attentive to the matter from the time, in October, 1865, when they were first informed of the whereabouts of Surratt, until November, 1866, when he was arrested.

I think I should not take up more of the time of this House with this subject. I will only say further that my associates on the committee will sustain me in the statement that from the commencement of this investigation until its conclusion I have not undertaken to exercise any influence over their deliberations or the results which they have reached.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I will hereby suggest that as Surratt is now within this District, and soon to be put upon his trial, it might be improper to publish the testimony which has been taken by the committee during this investigation. I will therefore modify my motion, so that the report only, and not at present the testimony, shall be printed; and on that motion I call the previous question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I trust that the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WOODBRIDGE] will allow me one word. I hope that in view of the difference of opinion in regard to the report and the evidence both will be printed together. Certainly the evidence should be published. I hope the gentleman from Vermont will not insist that the report, embracing merely the conclusions which the committee have drawn from the evidence, shall be printed without the testimony, which should accompany it. Considerations of mere justice and humanity toward Surratt would suggest that the evidence should be published.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. Very well; I move that the report and testimony be printed. I insist on the call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion of Mr. WOODBRIDGE was adopted.

IMPEACHMENT OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to present a report relative to the official conduct of the President of the United States.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of order: I see by the clock that it is now almost three o'clock in the morning; and I believe this is the Sabbath day. I think we should not do any more business to-night, except it be business of necessity or charity.

The SPEAKER. This, in parliamentary view, is Saturday. The Clerk will read the report submitted by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, charged by the House with examination of certain allegations of high crimes and misdemeanors against the President of the United States, submit the following report:

On the 7th day of January, 1867, the House, on the motion of Hon. JAMES M. ASHLEY, a Representative from the State of Ohio, adopted the following preamble and resolutions, to wit:

"I do impeach Andrew Johnson, Vice President and acting President of the United States, of high crimes and misdemeanors.

"I charge him with a usurpation of power and violation of law:

"In that he has corruptly used the appointing power;

"In that he has corruptly used the pardoning power;

"In that he has corruptly used the veto power;

"In that he has corruptly disposed of the public property of the United States;

"In that he has corruptly interfered in elections, and committed acts which, in contemplation of the Constitution, are high crimes and misdemeanors: Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and they are hereby, authorized to inquire into the official conduct of Andrew Johnson, Vice President of the United States, discharging the powers and duties of the office of President of the United States, and to report to this House whether, in their opinion, the said Andrew Johnson, while in said office, has been guilty of acts which are designed or calculated to overthrow, subvert, or corrupt the Government of the United States, or any department or office thereof; and whether the said Andrew Johnson has been guilty of any act, or has conspired with others to do acts, which, in contemplation of the Constitution, are high crimes and misdemeanors, requiring the interposition of the constitutional power of this House; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers and to administer the customary oath to witnesses."

The duty imposed upon the committee by this action of the House was of the highest and gravest character. No committee during the entire history of the Government has ever been charged with a more important trust. The responsibility which it imposed was of oppressive weight, and of most unpleasant nature. Gladly would the committee have escaped from the arduous labor imposed upon it by the resolution of the House; but once imposed, prompt, deliberate, and faithful action, with a view to correct results, became its duty, and to this end it has directed its efforts.

Soon after the adoption of the resolution by the House, Hon. JAMES M. ASHLEY communicated to the committee, in support of his charges against the President of the United States, such facts as were in his possession, and the investigation was proceeded with, and has been continued almost without a day's interruption. A large number of witnesses have been examined, many documents collected, and everything done which could be done to reach a conclusion of the case. But the investigation covers a broad field, embraces many novel, interesting, and important questions, and involves a multitude of facts, while most of the witnesses are distant from the capital, owing to which the committee, in view of the magnitude of the interests involved in its action, have not been able to conclude its labors, and is not therefore prepared to submit a definite and final report. If the investigation had even approached completeness, the committee would not feel authorized to present the result to the House at this late period of the session, unless the charges had been so entirely negatived as to admit of no discussion, which, in the opinion of the committee, is not the case.

Certainly no affirmative report could be properly considered in the expiring hours of this Congress.

The committee not having fully investigated all the charges prepared against the President of the United States, it is deemed inexpedient to submit any conclusion beyond the statement that sufficient testimony has been brought to its notice to justify and demand a further prosecution of the investigation.

The testimony which the committee has taken will pass into the custody of the Clerk of the House, and can go into the hands of such committee as may be charged with the duty of bringing this investigation to a close, so that the labor expended upon it may not have been in vain.

The committee regrets its inability definitely to dispose of the important subject committed to its charge, and presents this report for its own justification, and for the additional purpose of notifying the succeeding Congress of the incompleteness of its labors, and that they should be completed.

JAMES F. WILSON, Chairman.
FRANCIS THOMAS,
D. MORRIS,
F. E. WOODBRIDGE,
GEORGE S. BOUTWELL,
THOMAS WILLIAMS,
BURTON C. COOK,
WILLIAM LAWRENCE.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the report be laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask a vote on the motion.

Mr. ANCONA. Mr. Speaker, I was requested by the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROGERS,] who is now absent, to present for him a report of the minority of the committee. He has been obliged to leave the House on account of indisposition.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The gentleman from New Jersey informed me that he would present a minority report, and he desired me so to state if he should not be in his seat at the time of the presentation of the majority report.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. If it be in order, I would like to hear the minority report read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will read the minority report.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

The subscriber, one of the Judiciary Committee, to which was referred by the House the inquiry into the official conduct of his Excellency the President of the United States, with a view to his impeachment upon certain charges made by Hon. JAMES M. ASHLEY, begs leave to submit the following report:

The committee refuses to allow a report to be made giving the evidence to the House at this time upon grounds which are no doubt satisfactory to themselves, therefore I cannot report the evidence upon which my conclusion is based, which I would gladly do did the committee deem it expedient. The examination of witnesses and the records was commenced, as appears by the majority report, about the time of the reference, to wit: on the 7th day of January, 1867, and continued daily. A large number of witnesses has been examined, and everything done that could be to bring the case to a close, as appears by the majority report; and the majority have come to the conclusion "that sufficient testimony had been brought to its notice to justify and demand a further prosecution of the investigation." I have carefully examined all the evidence in the case, and do report that there is not one particle of evidence to sustain any of the charges which the House charged the committee to investigate, and that the case is wholly without a particle of evidence upon which impeachment could be founded, and that with all the effort that has been made, and the mass of evidence that has been taken, the case is entirely void of proof. I furthermore report that the most of the testimony that has been taken is of a secondary character, and such as would not be admitted in a court of justice. In view of this conclusion I can see no good in a continuation of the investigation. I am convinced that all the proof that can be produced has been before the committee, as no pains have been spared to give the case a full investigation. Why, then, keep the country in a feverish state of excitement upon this question any longer, as it is sure to end, in my opinion, in a complete vindication of the President, if justice be done him by the committee, of which I have no doubt?

A. J. ROGERS.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the reports will be laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CHAVES, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to print as part of the debates some remarks he had prepared on the Indian appropriation bill. [The remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CONKLING submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 896) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. Speaker, as the bill referred to in this report is of some consequence and liable to go over to the next Congress, I think it would be hardly right and just to the House, or perhaps to the public, to allow this report to be voted on without any explanation.

The Senate originally adopted a large number of amendments to this bill. It is the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government, I will state in reply to the inquiries of gentlemen about me; but, as I was about to say, the Senate originally adopted a large number of amendments in which the Committee on Appropriations now concurred in most instances pro forma for the purpose of ascertaining precisely the reasons of the Senate for retaining possession of this phraseology and matters of detail.

Three conferences have now been appointed on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, this House having followed the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations. In the first meeting of the conference committee a large number of the Senate amendments were readily concurred in by the managers on the part of the House, that concurrence being expressive of the judgment of both Houses and of the committee of the House originating the bill. A second conference took place of which I know nothing except as it has been reported to the House. To-day a third conference being ordered, the managers on the part of the House were met at the commencement by an announcement of the managers on the part of the Senate that they required us to drop at once the proposition to concur in a large number of amendments in which it had been the design of the Committee on Appropriations originally to concur, and in which the first conference did in fact concur, they taking the parliamentary position that, speaking as they did on behalf of the Senate, and originating as these amendments did in that body, they had the right, without the consent of the managers on the part of the House, to recede from so many of their amendments as they pleased, and would thereby, whether we consented or not, withdraw them absolutely from the consideration of the conference. The managers on the part of the House took the position that the differences of the two Houses being committed to this conference, we had as much right to concur upon the points in respect to which the two Houses differed as they had to recede. Thus standing, a large number of points of difference was not left between the two Houses.

We came, in the next place, to a proposition in the bill, a section by itself. I pause a moment to reflect. It was the second section, I think, of the bill, the object of which was to carry into effect certain resolutions of this House, passed in some instances as late as the 27th of July last, and in some instances earlier. The yeas and nays, as we understand and remember, being taken in most instances in expressing the will of the House on those resolutions. In some instances the vote was almost unanimous. By these resolutions certain sums, for reasons explained at the time, were given to the employés of this House. The Senate refused to concur in this amendment. They refused throughout to concur, in the last conference as well as in the first. They pointed, or their managers did, to one section of the statute, one applicable to themselves, which imposed upon the House an inhibition as to expending its contingent fund in paying salaries to its employés, unless by the action of the two Houses prior to doing so.

Our answer to that was, the House had not undertaken to do any such thing, but on the contrary, acting within the letter of the law, had by resolution denominated certain sums which they had considered just and fair to persons in the employment of the House, and therefore we said this operated as no restriction upon the function which this House exercised; and standing upon what we believe to be the right of this House, whether providently and guardedly exercised at times or not, to say, without dictation from the Senate, what sum it sees fit and proper to adopt as a recompense for the labor rendered here, we insisted on the part of the House, believing that we were expected to do so, that that prerogative should not be grasped by the Senate, but that it should be left with us.

Taking that position, we were met with a distinct refusal on the part of the Senate managers to recede at all, and thus we were left upon the many points of difference to which I referred before, and upon this point at variance with each other, and we deemed it unnecessary, therefore, to proceed to the consideration of the other provisions of the bill, upon which all the conference committees had disagreed, and determined to report our action to the House and to ask that our report be received and that the committee be discharged, and if this bill shall go over, as doubtless it will, to the next Congress, I do not know that there will be any particular loss.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I desire to ask the gentleman what the whole amount of this money would be which the House desires to appropriate and which the Senate refuses to concur in.

Mr. CONKLING. It is impossible, and I think it would be on a somewhat careful scrutiny impossible to state the precise amount, because these resolutions do not raise the pay of the officers of the House by any percentage or any mode of graduation, but they raise it by the addition of arbitrary sums to the salaries of the various employés of the House.

The ground taken by the managers on the part of the Senate was that because twenty per cent. was added at the last session of Congress to the pay of the officers and employés of this House, that measure in some way superseded or absorbed the effect of these resolutions, although some of them were passed before the House voted this twenty per cent. increase of pay, and others were passed afterward. We, on the contrary, maintained that, from the fact that of this House having at this session and at the last session increased by twenty per cent. the pay of the various officers of the House, it could hardly be held that we had thereby concluded ourselves from doing what, in the judgment of the House, is fit and just in remunerating its officers for the labor they perform.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. This is the same bill upon which I made a partial report from a committee of conference this morning, agreeing upon all but two or three items in the bill. I understand that since the disagreement of the last committee of conference the Senate have receded from all their amendments to the bill, save the one which strikes out this section. To that amendment they adhere, thus leaving the bill now with only one point of disagreement, and that upon the section paying the employes of this House according to the various resolutions which have been referred to.

The question was propounded by some gentleman upon the floor a few moments ago, as to how much money would be required to meet these resolutions. The second committee of conference, of which I was a member, made some investigation and inquiry with regard to that. We were informed by the Clerk of this House, who I think had carefully examined the subject, for his attention was called to it last summer, and some correspondence took place between him and the Comptroller with reference to his power under the law to pay out money according to those resolutions; he stated that it would take at least $30,000, or between thirty and forty thousand dollars to meet those resolutions.

The resolutions are all printed on a slip and can be read by any member who sees fit to send for the document. They are a series of resolutions. The first one, perhaps, declares that the assistant doorkeeper shall have the same salary as some other officer named. Then on some other day a resolution was adopted that some other officer should have the same salary as another named officer; and so, from time to time, resolutions were passed raising the salary of different officers of the House so as to correspond with the salary of other officers designated. And then another resolution was adopted giving twenty-five per cent. increase to all the officers of the House who receive a salary of $1,200 or less.

The Senate took the ground that having agreed to pay all the employes both of the Senate and of the House twenty per cent. on their salaries, there was no expectation on their part that they would be called upon to pay this twenty-five per cent. in addition to the other increase of salary to the officers of the House.

The second committee of conference agreed upon all the amendments pro and con, with the exception of that one really, although pro forma we left two others as disagreed to. Now the disagreement is narrowed down to that one amendment, and, Mr. Speaker, although I agree we ought to be allowed to fix the compensation of our own employes, yet it scarcely seems fitting; it seems to me it will scarcely do for the House to stand upon that one provision of the bill, and thus lose the bill which provides for the carrying on of the Departments of the Government. I submit the question, therefore, to the House, for the Senate seem to be inexorable and determined as to this amendment, and so far as the argument is concerned, so far as the law of the case is concerned, they are no doubt right in holding that we cannot pay out of the contingent fund or any other fund increased salaries or any salaries except such as are provided for by law.

Now, shall we lose the appropriation bill by standing upon this one amendment? My sympathies are with the clerks and employes, but I think we had better waive the matter now and let it go over to the next session of Congress rather than lose this bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman who has charge of this matter. This is an old question in the House. I believe I was on a conference committee two or three years ago which had the same subject before it. The facts have partly passed out of my mind, and I am therefore not able to speak upon the subject with the clearness that I could have done at that time. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] who has charge of this matter, to tell me whether I am right in my recollection that the Senate made a point under a law of 1858, under which they claim that we are bound not to use our contingent fund in a certain way, and that we have now so used it, and ask them to ratify an illegal use of our contingent fund, and that they declare that they will not thus ratify an illegal act? I ask the gentleman, who, from his more immediate connection with the matter, must be better informed upon it than I am, to state specifically what the point is in that direction, so that we may see clearly whether we are standing on lawful ground or not? If we are, I hope that the House will maintain its position and let the bill fail again and again before we give up the point; but if we are not, then I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] that we had better not lose the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WOODBRIDGE] to answer the question.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I sincerely hope that the House will not agree to the action of the Senate upon this bill. It is true that under the law of 1858 we cannot, by a resolution of this body, make an appropriation of the contingent fund or any other fund for the payment of our employes.

In the conference committee of which I was a member, that law was examined and we ascertained its force. The objection on the part of the conferees of the Senate seemed to be that they could not assent to any appropriation which we had indicated by means of a resolution of the House, which was against the law of 1858. They said they did not care as to the amount of the salaries of our officers, but that they would not recognize a resolution passed by the House appropriating money in that way.

We then proposed to consider the resolutions passed by the House, not as operative and legal, but merely as an indication of the wish of the House as to what their various employes should be paid; and then we proposed to fix the compensation of our clerks and employes by naming as salaries for them what they would have received had the resolutions of the House been legal and payments made under them; proposing also that when the salaries thus established came to be paid there should be deducted from them the twenty per cent. which was paid to the employes of each House under the legislation of Congress at its last session. This would have given to some of the employes of this House more compensation than they are now receiving, while to others it would not have given so much. But even upon that proposition we differed; the conferees on the part of the Senate absolutely and positively declined to accept that as a basis of action.

We then proposed to take the bill reported by the Committee on Accounts of this House as the basis of the salaries of the employes of this House. But to that the conferees on the part of the Senate objected; and indeed they objected to everything which we proposed. It is true, they professed to be willing to recommend an appropriation of $10,000 to be divided among the employes of this House according to the various sums proposed by the resolutions already passed, or in such other manner as the House might designate. To this of course the conferees on the part of the House could not agree; because, first, it was not carrying out the oft-expressed will of the House in regard to the matter; and secondly, because the division of the money would cause difficulties and create dissatisfaction and perhaps dissension among the employes of the House.

Your committee earnestly endeavored to bring this matter to some conclusion, claiming that as a matter of courtesy on the part of the Senate they should permit the House of Representatives to designate and fix the salaries of their own employes. But we could not agree.

And now I sincerely hope that even if this bill should fail, this House will stand up for its rights, its dignity, and its honor, and in support of the obligations it has incurred to these men, and never assent to the dictation of the other branch of Congress in relation to the manner in which we shall use our money for the compensation of our own employes. It can do no serious harm even if this bill should not pass now, but go over to the next Congress.

Mr. GRINNELL. I wish to inquire whether this is the point involved: that the exactions of the Senate are such that they cannot be yielded to by this House without compromising its dignity? This is an old question in legislative bodies. I have known it to arise in the Legislature of the State of Iowa. One or the other House must yield; and I suppose we must do so. I am glad the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] has such a high and exalted sense of the dignity of this body, and I have no doubt that to-morrow afternoon he will carry that high sense of our dignity to the other wing of this building, when he takes his seat in the body which sits there. But I would not stand upon a mere point of dignity. I think we can afford to say little about dignity if we only do justice.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to call the attention of this House to the provision of the law which has been referred to in this debate. Preparatory to that, however, I wish to say that this question is an annual question in committees of conference and on this bill. I have myself served for two successive sessions on committees of conference in which this same question has been raised. And I recollect that in the last committee of conference upon this subject, of which I was a member, the Senate yielded to the House on the third meeting of the conference committee rather than allow the bill to be lost.

Now, I think that one or two questions arise here which are worthy the serious attention of this House; as the only point upon which I apprehend we can insist is that of either the right or the dignity of the House of Representatives. Section five of the sundry civil bill of 1858 provides:

"That no part of the appropriations which may be at any time made for the contingent expenses of either House of Congress shall be applied to any other than the ordinary expenditures of the Senate and House of Representatives, nor as extra allowance to any clerk, messenger, or attendant of the said two Houses, or either of them, nor as payment or compensation to any clerk, messenger, or other attendant of the said two Houses, or either of them, unless such clerk, messenger, or other attendant be so employed by a resolution of one of said Houses."

Let me say that former investigations have shown that the reason for the adoption of this law was that it had been in the habit of both Houses up to that time to make at the end of each session an appropriation of some twenty per cent., more or less, as an extra allowance to its employes. The Senate had done it at the session immediately preceding this act of 1858; for the sixth section of this law provides that—

"The extra compensation paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate to clerks of committees under the resolution of 14th March, 1857, be allowed at the Treasury."

The object, therefore, of this clause of the law was to put an end to that system of arbitrary raising of salaries by the separate action of each House and without the forms of law. There, then, stands the law unrepealed to-day.

Now, the next point to which I wish to call the attention of the House is that, by a usage which has long prevailed in conference committees, it has been customary rather than lose a bill, or rather than oblige either House to sacrifice what it may consider its rights and its dignity, to demand that the House, whichever it may be that proposes to change in effect the existing law, shall recede rather than bring about the loss of the bill. It seems to me, therefore, that the question really presented now is not one involving the rights or dignity of the House or the Senate. The question is rather whether, in the face of this law, the House can sacrifice the entire legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill to the consideration proposed here, which is practically in contravention of this clause of the statute of 1858, which I have read. For my part I think that if the point were presented to the House simply as a question of increasing the salaries of clerks in the Treasury Department, or any other Department of the Government, or in any part of the United States, the House could hardly think it right to sacrifice the entire bill if the Senate did not yield.

I regret, sir, that it is necessary to come to such a disagreement as that to which we have come with the Senate upon this subject; but at the same time I think candor compels us to admit that, as the Senate has on one, if not two, former occasions receded upon this same point, and as the law stands as it does we cannot insist, as a matter pertaining to the rights or dignity of the House, that the Senate shall yield to us at this time.

Mr. CONKLING. I now yield the floor to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDRIDGE.]

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that the employés of this House are any special protégés of mine. I do not know whether they are all "loyal" or not, [laughter,] though probably that question is not involved here. But, sir, I know, from the investigation which I have made as a member of this conference committee, that the honor of this House is pledged by its resolutions to pay the employés of the House according to those resolutions. And I know further that the Senate committee, whose members I met, said that the question of money was of no account; that the only objection they had to agreeing to the proposition which we made to them was that they did not desire to recognize the resolutions of the House; that they considered them irregular and illegal; that they did not wish to concede the right of the House to pass such resolutions with reference to its employés. When they had thus declared that the amount of money involved was not the ground of their objection, we proposed that we should compute the aggregate of the various sums which the House had pledged itself to pay its employés and insert in the bill an appropriation for the gross amount, not recognizing, however, by the language of the bill the validity of the resolutions. But this proposition, which we thought ought to meet the views of the Senate was not acceded to.

Now, sir, I do not understand that the question of dignity is the only question involved here. It seems to me that this matter is one affecting the honor and good faith of the House. I insist that we have solemnly pledged ourselves to pay our employés according to the resolutions which we have adopted, and that the obligation we have assumed should be faithfully met.

Mr. CONKLING. I will now yield, and for the last time, to my friend from Ohio, who is a member of this committee of conference.

Mr. SCHENCK. The course taken by the Senate has narrowed down the differences between the two Houses to a single point. A proposition was made for a conference on that single point, and perhaps we may yet have one on it. I think it right, however, as a member of the committee, sustaining the rights of the House, as well as struggling for something like justice on all the points submitted, to say gentlemen are not entirely correct with regard to the point in which this House cannot be considered in any degree to have done any wrong.

Now, while we were precluded by the statute passed in 1858, covering this subject, providing that no part of the appropriations which may at any time be made for the contingent expenses of either House of Congress, &c., shall be used in the compensation of any clerk, messenger, &c., still I hold that does not apply at all to the question between the House and the Senate. The House is precluded and the Senate is precluded from using its contingent fund for any purpose of that kind. Now, this House has not sought to use its contingent fund for any such purpose. It has not violated the statute, but it has involved itself in obligations by resolutions to pay certain sums to its employés. It goes to the Senate in an appropriation bill and asks the consent of the Senate to take money out of the Treasury in the manner in which it can be taken out by act of appropriation. We do not use our own contingent fund nor ask them to use theirs, but having promised this money we ask them to unite with us in passing an act of legislation which will appropriate money, so that we may keep our promise.

When has the House of Representatives ever objected to any resolution or proposition made by the Senate involving their obligations or promises to anybody connected with the administration of the Senate? When has the House refused to concur? Everybody knows while some of our officers are as well or better paid, that many officers of the Senate receive in the shape of contingent appropriations additional payments more than corresponding officers in this House. We have left it to the Senate to determine for themselves, with all the facts before them, how their officers serve them and what those officers deserve. We ask for the same thing ourselves. While we bow to the law and do not propose to take it and thus keep it a matter of secret for ourselves, we go to the Senate and ask frankly of them to unite with us in appropriating money to redeem our promise. And that is the whole of it.

It is not, sir, because of any violation of the law. There has been no violation of the law on the part of the House. There has been no use of the contingent fund. But how has the Senate been treated on other occasions? Look at the last appropriation bill and you will find it contains an appropriation of $2,500 to pay the expenses of the survey of a park ordered by resolution of the Senate. That is in one of the appropriation bills which the clerks are now at work engrossing. The Senate, not in the exercise of its discretion in relation to its own employés, but in relation to a matter of public interest and concern, without consulting the House of Representatives, has passed a resolution giving $2,500, or pledging $2,500 if they do not name the sum, directing a survey for a park to be made, and they come in and in one of the items ask for an appropriation to meet that resolution by which the Senate has thus pledged itself. This is in an appropriation bill now being enrolled.

Now, my object in rising is clear when I say the whole matter sums itself up in the question whether each House is allowed to be the judge of what ought to be voted to its own employés. It seems to me it would not be consistent for this House to permit its promise to be disregarded when all it asks of the Senate is to unite in the necessary act of legislation to carry that promise out.

Mr. THAYER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that in this matter the Senate has made a point of order upon us. We make appropriations in the ordinary form in our bill, and we are met with the objection that the appropriation is not authorized by any existing legislation, or that certain alleged existing legislation is irregular and contrary to law. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have heard you rule several times lately that it had been repeatedly decided and had become parliamentary law that no point of order could be made upon an amendment which came here from the Senate. I think if that rule is to have any force at all it ought to be reciprocal. It comes just to this, that the Senate when we make an appropriation, not denied, as I understand from the committee, to be in itself proper and just, makes upon us the point of order that it is not justified by any preceding legislation.

Now, sir, I am for subjecting the Senate, so far as we have the power to do it, to the same rule that we are subjected to in acting upon their amendments and their bills which come here, and of applying the same rule to both. It is evident that they have resorted to a mere technicality to defeat an often-expressed will of this House, and for one I am in favor of standing by that oft-expressed opinion and by the resolution recommended by this committee.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any interest that I feel or any obligation resting upon me especially to act as the champion of the dignity or the rights of this House. But before demanding the previous question I want to make two remarks; and first in answer to a question propounded to me by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] If this House has done an illegal and unwarrantable thing, unquestionably the speediest way to recede from it is the most proper way.

Without referring to the statute, I submit to members of this House whether they are prepared now to accept the proposition that they have no right to say whether a page on this floor shall have a dollar a day or not except under the permission and favor of the other House. That is a most extraordinary proposition. It is as remarkable in its character as it is little in the fact. Now I undertake to say that there is nothing in any of these statutes that goes against the position this House assumes. On the contrary, there is an existing section, which has not been referred to here at all, which, if it means anything, means that to the House alone belongs appropriately the duty of graduating the scale of recompense which these officers shall receive. I undertake to say that there is nothing in the law inhibiting the House from fixing the tariff of these compensations. The House has done exactly and nothing more than what it might properly do in this regard.

One other suggestion. The gentleman from Illinois says that the Senate having receded has left but a single leg on which the House can stand in the loss of this bill. I do not so understand it. On the contrary, I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations—and I regret that he is not here to express himself on this subject—that the disagreement to a great many of these amendments was merely formal in order that they might retain control of phraseology and details, the committee meaning and the House meaning in various particulars to have this bill as the Senate proposed it should be and as they themselves would have proposed amendments to make it; but now, by receding from these amendments en masse, the Senate deprives the House and deprives its committee of all opportunity and power to make this bill in essential regard as the committee of the House think it should be.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. With the permission of the gentleman I would like to say one word. I understand that the Senate has receded from all its amendments to this bill with the exception of this one. I agree with the gentleman that the bill would have been very much improved had some of the amendments of the Senate been adopted, those for instance that I reported to-day from the second committee of conference and asked the House to adopt.

Mr. CONKLING. I had just stated that the Senate had receded from all its amendments, and the point I was making was that the Senate by so doing had taken from the jurisdiction of the House the whole body of this bill and has made it as the Committee on Appropriations meant it should not be in many essential regards. Nay, more, a conference committee is not a mere game of chance. It is not a mere copper to be flipped, nobody knowing whether it is to be head or tail when it comes down. Here is a conference committee which goes out and expresses the sense of the committee and of the House. It comes at once to an explanation and an agreement upon a large number of amendments. The Senate turns around in the face of that and reverses every one of them.

Now, if it is agreeable to the House to give the Senate a cognovit, if it is agreeable to admit that this House in repeated instances upon the yeas and nays acted in disregard of the law and transcended its privileges, I have no objection to it. But in doing so, let us remember that there is more than a question of dignity, because I am told that a large number of these officers were actually paid this amount of money, and if this amendment is suffered to fail they must pay back the money which they received in good faith, and which was given to them by the House in pursuance of its strict rights.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Out of what fund was it paid?

Mr. CONKLING. It is of no consequence for my purpose out of what fund it was paid. I am stating that these officers in good faith received their increased salaries, and that they will be compelled to restore the amount of the increase to the Treasury, because the House was guilty of illegality and of usurpation; because it amounts to that in paying these sums to these men.

Now, sir, I for one do not believe and will not admit it for the sake of saving this bill, even if I deemed its salvation important, which I do not; for it will not make any difference on earth whether this bill is passed now or at the session of the Congress that is to follow. But I say if it is agreeable to the House to make that admission, to submit to that proposition, I certainly have no objection; only in doing it the consequences will be that this whole bill is revolutionized, turned upside down, and made to express in many particulars what the House did not mean and what the Committee on Appropriations never would have consented to.

Having done a thing to begin with entirely illogical, and I submit entirely unworthy of the prerogatives and position of this House, perhaps it is entirely proper, according to all the logic applicable to the case, that general derangement and disorder should follow, in order that the next Congress may, by way of new legislation, take up and unravel all this business and make it over in some way. I do not believe it, therefore I move that this report be concurred in and the committee discharged; and on that motion I ask the previous question.

Mr. BALDWIN. I desire to know if at any time I can move to concur in the Senate's amendment and ask for another committee of conference. It seems to me this bill ought not to be lost.

Mr. KASSON. If this motion is adopted, does it preclude another committee of conference?

The SPEAKER. Certainly not.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Would it be in order to move to recede?

The SPEAKER. It would; and that motion would have priority. The Senate has receded from all its amendments, and has adhered to its disagreement on the forty-fourth amendment.

Mr. SCOFIELD. If we second the previous question, will it be in order to move that the House recede from the question of difference between the two bodies?

The SPEAKER. When the previous question is seconded and the main question ordered, the question will recur on the motion to discharge the committee, as they state they are unable to agree. The bill will then be before the House, and any member can move to recede.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I do not think the country will justify us in losing this bill on such a difference as this.

Mr. SCHENCK. Debate, I believe, is out of order.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was accepted and the committee discharged.

Mr. BALDWIN. I now move that the House recede from the forty-sixth amendment, and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Is it in order to move any addition to the motion to recede?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I would like to move to attach a provision which is germane to the bill.

The SPEAKER. We are far beyond the stage when such an amendment would be in order.

Mr. LE BLOND. Would it be in order to move that the House still further insist upon its non-concurrence in the amendment of the Senate, so that we may have another committee of conference?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It is too late for that.

The SPEAKER. The motion indicated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] would be in order should the preceding motion that the House recede from its disagreement be voted down.

Mr. LE BLOND. Then I hope that the motion to recede will be voted down.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to recede.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays; and there were—ayes sixteen; not one fifth of the last vote.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. UPSON called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering tellers; and there were—ayes fifteen; not one fifth of a quorum.

So tellers were refused; and the yeas and nays were refused.

The question recurred upon agreeing to the motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. ANCONA. On that question I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. UPSON and Mr. LE BLOND were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 39, noes 64.

So the motion to recede was not agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to recede; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. LE BLOND. I move that the House still further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and ask the appointment of another committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as the conferees on the part of the House, Mr. LE BLOND, Mr. POMEROY, and Mr. ALLISON.

RECORDING OF VOTES.

Mr. LATHAM. I move that the rules be suspended, in order that I may be allowed to record my vote upon the two bills passed over the President's veto to-day.

Mr. WHALEY. I ask the same privilege.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I will not object if it does not change the result. [Laughter.]

No objection being made, the rules were accordingly suspended.

Mr. LATHAM recorded his vote in the negative.

Mr. WHALEY recorded his vote in the affirmative.

PUNISHMENT OF CERTAIN CRIMES.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, from a committee of conference, made the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 604) entitled "An act to define and punish certain crimes therein named," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the two Houses of Congress agree to the Senate amendment made to said bill, with the following amendment, to wit: strike out the words "lawfully in the custody thereof" where they occur in the Senate amendment.

WILLIAM LAWRENCE,
F. E. TROWBRIDGE,
A. J. ROGERS,

Managers on the part of the House.

T. A. HENDRICKS,

IRA HARRIS,

JOHN A. J. CRESWELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PRICE (at four o'clock a. m., Sunday) moved that the House take a recess until eight o'clock p. m.

The SPEAKER. Before putting the question the Chair will state, as it is his duty to do, being more familiar with the condition and progress of the public business at this stage of the session than other members are, that if the House now take a recess until eight o'clock this evening several important bills will fail to become laws unless the President shall sign them without reading them.

The Chair feels as sensibly as does any other member of the House the unpleasantness of having to legislate in the hours of the Sabbath; but it will be remembered that the soldiers of the Republic very often had to perform their duties on the Sabbath; and the Representatives of the people, in the discharge of the highly important duties devolved upon them, are sometimes called upon to discharge their duties on the Sabbath, or leave them unfulfilled.

There are many important questions for this Congress yet to consider and pass upon if they are to become enacted into laws. There is an important bill making appropriations for the naval service of the Government which has not yet been acted upon by this House. Its consideration has been interrupted by conference reports which are highly privileged, and other privileged motions which have prevented the House from concluding action on that bill.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I would suggest that our soldiers did not have three months beforehand, as we have had, to do their work in.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. And they acted in a state of war, while we are in a state of peace.

The SPEAKER. The Chair felt it to be his duty to make the statement he did about the condition of the public business in order that the House might act advisedly upon the motion for a recess.

The motion for a recess was not agreed to.

Mr. DELANO. I move that the House now proceed to the consideration of business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. KASSON. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of going into the Committee of the Whole on the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules to go into the Committee of the Whole on an appropriation bill takes precedence of the motion to proceed to business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask leave to submit a report from the select Committee on Southern Railroads.

Mr. STEVENS. I object, until we have disposed of the appropriation bill.

Mr. KASSON. I understand the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHLEY] desires to submit a proposition in the nature of a question of privilege, relating to the compensation of a member of this House. I withdraw for the present the motion to suspend the rules, and yield the floor to him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair regards this resolution as involving a question of privilege, and decides that it is not necessary to suspend the rules in order to bring it before the House. The Representative from the State of Nebraska has been admitted to his seat as a member of this House, that State having complied with the requisition of the law of Congress, and having been declared a member of the Union by the proclamation of the President, as contemplated by the law providing for her admission. Under these circumstances, it is peculiarly within the province of the House to determine what compensation shall be paid to the member who has just been admitted. The resolution of the gentleman from Ohio is in order as a question of privilege.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House be authorized and directed to pay to Hon. T. M. MARQUETTE, Representative from the State of Nebraska, as a member from the first day of the present session.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I call for the previous question.

Mr. MORRILL. Does that carry with it mileage?

The SPEAKER. This relates only to the question of pay. The gentleman from Nebraska is unquestionably entitled, under the law, to mileage for this session, having been sworn in as a member.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, if the previous question be not seconded, will it be in order to amend the resolution so as to pay him only from the time when he took his seat?

Mr. DAWES. He is already entitled to that by law.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; which was upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOUTHERN RAILROADS.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask unanimous consent to submit, under the instructions of the select Committee on Southern Railroads, the following resolution:

Resolved, That the report of the select Committee on Southern Railroads, with the testimony, be printed, and that the Clerk of the House be, and is hereby, instructed and required to cause the same to be laid before the next House of Representatives for their consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KASSON. I am about to move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill. Before submitting that motion, however, I move that when the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on that bill all general debate shall terminate in one minute.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. KASSON, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. CONKLING in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1176) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending 30th June, 1868.

First amendment:

On page 2, after line eleven, insert the following: For the purchase of the wharf adjoining the navy-yard, $135,000: Provided, That this sum shall cover the whole cost of the property, and it can be acquired on terms satisfactory to the Secretary of the Navy.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence, with an amendment adding the following:

And provided further, That the title acquired shall be first approved by the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Chairman, I propose to submit a brief statement of facts with reference to this matter, and then I shall leave the discussion of the question to the members of the Naval Committee and the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.]

This wharf adjoins the navy-yard at Charlestown, Massachusetts. For two or three years we have been pressed by the Navy Department to make this purchase in order to give deep water and water front for the Government vessels lying at that yard. In accordance with this recommendation of the Department, the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House has, on some former occasion, reported in favor of the purchase. Discussion has taken place in reference to the matter; but the proposition has never been adopted in both branches at any one session. I wish to state further that the officers of the Navy Department, and especially Rear Admiral Smith, in charge of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, and one of the most honest men in the service of the Government, have urgently and repeatedly recommended the making of this purchase by the Government.

One other fact I wish to state. No individual to my knowledge has been in Washington to urge the purchase of this property. On the contrary, sir, individuals are earnestly at work to prevent its purchase on some ground of local interest. It is a remarkable instance, the Government being anxious to purchase it while individuals are combining to prevent its purchase. The matter has been fully considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I hope it will be acted on at this time.

Mr. BANKS rose.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Has not this been uniformly voted down by a large majority every time before this Congress? Has it not been voted down already two or three times.

Mr. KASSON. It has never been before us two or three times, and therefore could not have been voted down.

Mr. BANKS. It is with regret that I trespass upon the attention of the committee by any opposition to this appropriation, and I would not do it if I did not feel it to be my duty to the people whom I represent to make a proper presentation of this case. It is not true that no one has been here to advocate this claim. I understand one of the individuals interested has been here. It is true, however, that individuals have opposed it. The city of Charlestown is opposed to it. It takes away the vital privileges of that city. Individuals who are not interested in opposition to the city are opposed to it.

It is on that ground I speak against it. Let me say that the city of Charlestown on the point of land between the Mystic river and the Charles river has on its water-front the navy-yard referred to. It covers on the Charles river nearly all the deep-water privileges. They have surrendered to the navy-yard nearly all of the deep-water privileges of the city of Charlestown except, I believe, five or six wharves. These, between the line of the navy-yard and Bunker Hill bridge, are the only valuable water privileges the city of Charlestown has. The plan is to purchase one of these wharves and then the other, taking two thirds of the deep-water privileges of Charlestown. It deprives them first of the taxable property, and secondly of access to the sea by taking away this deep-water privilege.

I oppose it because it is not necessary for the Government of the United States. We have been through a war which has put the heaviest strain upon the Navy Department that is possible. No effort was made during the war to enlarge this yard. Now, at the close of the war, when the country, according to the document which has been read from the Clerk's desk, is in a state of entire peace, the Navy Department insists on the purchase from individuals of this wharf property. It is not necessary and ought not to be voted against the will of the people of Charlestown.

The records of the House show that heretofore in the discussion of this question very serious charges have been made against the parties who are and have been pressing this purchase. I make none of these charges. I doubt not they are all governed by proper motives. I will say, however, this property was purchased in order to sell it to the Government. It is not property which it was proposed on the part of the Government to purchase, but it was purchased by individuals to sell to the Government, and at a price more than it is worth if they did not have this in view.

Mr. KASSON. Let me say that the proposition is made on the part of the Government, which has been all along most anxious to purchase this property.

Mr. BANKS. I am speaking of the men who originally purchased it. The Government did not propose to purchase it then. It was purchased by individuals for speculation with the Government, and then the Government comes in with their proposition to buy this property from them. The gentleman says the officers of the navy-yard are disinterested and honest; but, sir, the friends of those officers in the neighborhood of Charlestown are understood to be interested, and when I state that fact the House will understand me.

This property was purchased two or three years ago for about sixty thousand dollars, and the parties now propose to sell half of it to the Government for $135,000. As soon as this purchase shall be made the parties will propose to sell the other half of it to the Government for one hundred and thirty-five or one hundred and fifty thousand dollars more, thus making between two and three hundred thousand dollars on property which was sold at above its value two or three years ago for a sum not exceeding $60,000. If they complete these two sales they will receive for the property more than four times the amount of the original purchase-money.

I believe that this committee will come to the conclusion that this property is not necessary to the Government, that the price asked is not a fair one, and that the purchase ought not to be pressed on the Government at this time, and above all that the people of Charlestown ought not to be deprived of this little remnant of deep-water privilege which has been left to them.

Sir, the people of Charlestown deserve well of the Government. They served it at its foundation with fidelity and patriotism, and ever since, from that time up to this, they have always been true to their duty. They oppose this measure. I oppose it in their name. I have no earthly interest in opposing it except on account of their opposition, and certainly I have no hostility to the prosperity of the Navy Department.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move pro forma to strike out the last word of the amendment for the purpose of replying to my colleague.

Mr. Chairman, this subject is not altogether new to the members of the House who have been here for the last three or four years. It is not so new to them as it is to my friend and colleague who has just addressed the House upon the subject. He stated in the course of his remarks that during the progress of the war no effort was made on the part of the Navy Department to make a purchase of this property. In that statement he is so far mistaken as he is in some of the other statements which he has made. On the contrary, almost immediately after the war broke out and the Navy began to be considerably increased the Navy Department did apply to Congress, and it has since applied over and over again to Congress for permission to make this purchase in order that it might have at the navy-yard at Charlestown the necessary facilities for carrying on the naval establishment there.

The facts in relation to the necessity for this purchase are these: the Government of the United States has had for many years a large naval establishment at Charlestown. It has invested there many million dollars. It is the most important navy-yard in the United States with a single exception. The territory of that yard is entirely insufficient for the operations which are carried on there, and the operations are no greater than the facilities which the Government has established justify. They have gone on and made the establishment what it is, in the full confidence that, when the time should arrive that it would be necessary for them to procure an enlargement of that territory, that enlargement could be had.

Now, sir, the parties who own this property are prepared to sell it to the Government on reasonable terms. The Government itself is prepared to purchase the property on the terms upon which it is offered by its owners, so that both the owners of this property and the Government are entirely agreed that the purchase shall be made and in respect to the terms upon which it shall be made, and the price that shall be paid for it.

The amount of land that will be taken is inconsiderable to the city of Charlestown. The city as a corporation has no other interest whatever in this property, so far as I know, than that it brings certain annual revenue to the city of Charlestown from the taxes that are imposed upon it.

Now, sir, this property is in the use of the Government to-day. I understand it is occupied by the Navy Department, and I understand also that that Department has been forced to use it because the premises attached to the yard are so small.

My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] stated in the course of his remarks that the price originally paid for this land was but $60,000, and that now these parties desire to sell half of it to the Government for $135,000. This is a mistake. The price paid for the whole property was originally $104,000. These parties have expended upon it from twenty-five to thirty thousand dollars, making the cost of the whole property about the amount for which they propose to sell to the Government as much of it as the Government can make use of. What the Government wants is the water-front, and I wish I could have the attention of the Committee so that they might understand that fact. The Government desires the water front there, and the part that is reserved by the owners of the land is a diagonal piece at the upper part of the territory, which would be of no use whatever to the Government.

In answer to the suggestion that the price asked for this land is too high, I would remind the House that my colleague from the city of Boston [Mr. HOOPER] once said upon this floor that he was prepared to pay for this piece of property the sum which the Government proposed to pay for it.

I hope that the Committee on Appropriations will be sustained in their recommendation in regard to this amendment, and that the House will concur in it.

Mr. BANKS. I rise to oppose the amendment of my colleague, and I ask the committee to give me their attention for a moment while I reply to him. I will not argue the question as to the amount of the purchase-money of this property, because that is a disputed question; yet I venture to repeat what I said before, that the owners of it ask double as much for a portion of it as they paid for the whole. As to the fact that the Government sought to purchase this property during the war, let me say that if they had sought to make the purchase they would have done so of the original holders, and they could have purchased the whole property for sixty, eighty, or one hundred thousand dollars, while the present holders ask $135,000 for half of it.

My colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, [Mr. RICE], says that the city of Charlestown has no interest in this appropriation excepting its interest in the revenue derived from it from taxation. Sir, that is a very narrow view of the interest of the city of Charlestown in this property. It is a deep water front, which is more important to the prosperity of that city than it is to the navy-yard. Sir, the Government ought not to take it from the city of Charlestown without the consent of the people of that city, which consent, as my colleague well knows, has never yet been given.

I hope that the committee will not concur in this amendment of the Senate. Let me say again that the city of Charlestown has claims upon the sympathies and support of the Representatives of the American people, and I trust that those claims will not be overlooked here.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I renew it pro forma merely for the purpose of making a very brief statement in regard to this matter. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] thought that I was in error in the statement which I made, that no one had been here opposing the purchase of this property. I wish now to repeat that statement. So far as the Committee on Appropriations is concerned, and so far as my own individual knowledge extends, I do not know of one single individual who has been here to oppose it.

Mr. BANKS. A gentleman on the Naval Committee told me that some parties interested in this matter had been here to oppose this purchase. There has been no person here representing the city of Charlestown, of course.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to say further, that it is no argument against the purchase of this property now that several years ago it could have been bought at a less price. Property near cities, as we all know, has increased very largely in value all over the country within a few years past; and that is no argument against the purchase, if, as is stated by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the owners of the property are prepared to sell it to the Government at what is now a reasonable price, a price which would be paid for it by any private individual who wanted it.

Now, under these circumstances, I submit that the only questions for the action of the Committee of the Whole are simply whether they are convinced that the Government needs this property, and whether they are willing to appropriate this sum of money to purchase it.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Will the gentleman state what control the city of Charlestown has over this property, what interest it has in it, and what use it could make of it?

Mr. KASSON. First, they collect taxes upon it now as private property, which they could not do if it became the property of the Government. Secondly, the merchants and business men of Charlestown wish the advantage of the water front whenever they can get it for their own private uses.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Are they in competition with the Government for the purchase of this property?

Mr. KASSON. They have no desire to purchase it?

Mr. BANKS. This water front constitutes the value of the city of Charlestown as a commercial city; it is not a question of taxes at all.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. What is the extent of this water front?

Mr. KASSON. My information is that it is about two hundred or two hundred and fifty feet.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. It is two hundred and eighty feet.

Mr. BANKS. It is about one third or two fifths of all the water front remaining to the city of Charlestown.

Mr. KASSON. The final issue really is whether the city of Charlestown shall prevent the Government of the United States from purchasing the property it needs.

Mr. STEVENS. I rise more for the purpose than anything else of repelling an insinuation that was made that the Committee on Appropriations was besieged for four years by bidders upon this subject. While I was on the Committee of Ways and Means the naval authorities having the control of this matter came before us and showed that this property was necessary for the good conduct of the operations of their Department of the Government; that the Government had as much right to purchase this wharf as anybody else had; that it was necessary, for the operations of the Government at present carried on there were such as required them to run on to the property of other people; that by the purchase of this wharf the Government would simply get the water front, which now belongs to those who own this property. This they have shown us for the last four years.

I know that the mayor of Charlestown and others have been opposing the purchase of this property by the Government; while the Government has rented this very wharf, and is using this water front under rent at this time. The only question is whether the Government shall be allowed to purchase this property instead of renting it. If I understand the matter, and I have been examining it for four years, the vessels of the Government cannot lay there and swing with the tide unless they have this wharf. They are obliged now to rent it; and I cannot understand what harm there can be in allowing them to purchase it and use it as their own property. No man connected with or interested in the wharf ever spoke to me on the subject.

Mr. KASSON. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The question recurred upon the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations to the amendment of the Senate, to add to it the following:

And provided, That the title acquired shall be first approved by the Attorney General of the United States.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question was on the amendment, as amended, as follows:

Page 2, after line seven, insert:

For the purchase of wharf adjoining the navy-yard, $135,000: Provided, That this sum shall cover the whole cost of the property, and it can be acquired on terms satisfactory to the Secretary of the Navy: And provided, That the title acquired shall be first approved by the Attorney General of the United States.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 33, noes 64.

So the amendment, as amended, was non-concurred in.

Second amendment:

Page 2, after line fourteen, insert:

Naval laboratory, New York: For repairs and apparatus, machinery, fixtures, painting, glazing, wagons, furniture, &c., $3,500.

The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Third amendment:

Page 4, strike out all after line four to end of line eighteen, as follows:

Provided, That the offices of civil engineer, master machinist, master carpenter, master blacksmith, master boiler-maker, master sailmaker, master plumber, master painter, master caulker, master laborer, and naval storekeeper, be, and the same are hereby, established in connection with the navy-yards at Kittery, Maine; Charlestown, Massachusetts; Brooklyn, New York; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; and Washington, District of Columbia; and that the persons selected to fill the several offices hereby established shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall have the immediate supervision of the work to be performed in their several departments, with authority to select and discharge such workmen as the necessities of the service may require, subject always to the approval of the commandant of the navy-yard to which they are attached.

Mr. BANKS. I hope this Committee of the Whole will not concur in this amendment of the Senate. It involves a very important question, one which will in a very short time be pressed, not only on the governments of the States, but upon the Government of the United States. Prior to and during the war the mechanical establishments in the navy-yards of the country were under the supervision of civilians who were skilled in their several departments and were appointed by the proper officers of the Government. I hold in my hand a copy of the regulations of the Navy on this subject, which were issued by Hon. Isaac Toucey, when he filled the office of Secretary of the Navy.

But very recently a far different practice has been inaugurated and established in respect to this matter. Instead of civilians skilled and practiced in the different branches of manufacture carried on in these several departments, officers of the Navy, commissioned as such, and with their uniforms and sleeve-stripes, have been appointed to superintend and control these various mechanical establishments. Now I have nothing to say against naval officers in their proper places. I believe it will be conceded, however, that it is not necessary, nor is it right and expedient, that the mechanics of this country should be put under the control and superintendence of officers of the Navy. There is no law for it, there is no precedent for it; the very contrary has been the practice of the Government from the very time when the Navy Department was first established.

And the contrary practice has been in accordance with the express rule of the head of the Navy Department until a very recent period.

But now, after so many years of a contrary practice, a change is being introduced; and master workmen, and some other officers who are cited in the provision which the Senate amendment proposes shall be stricken from this bill, are discharged from their places, not because they are unworthy, or because they are incompetent to discharge the duties which have been devolved upon them, but in order that their places may be filled by appointments from commissioned officers of the Navy, who can thus be most conveniently provided for.

Sir, this matter involves the question of the dignity of labor; the question of the right of the mechanics of this country, when they labor for others, at least to be under the superintendency of men of eminence and skill in their own profession, of men versed in their own pursuits, of men skilled in the employments which they follow. I hope, therefore, that the Committee of the Whole of this House will not concur in the amendment which the Senate has proposed to this bill, by striking out this portion of the section under consideration.

In all parts of the world the question of labor is now beginning to receive especial and proper attention from those who are charged with the duty of legislation. The Queen of Great Britain, in her late address to the Parliament of England, devoted the one seventh part of her address to an appeal to that Parliament to introduce and support measures calculated to relieve the working classes from the difficulties under which they are now laboring; and the Emperor of France in his recent address to the French Chamber of Deputies also makes an appeal upon the same subject. The attention of the legislation of almost every State in this country has been called to this most important subject, and as we learned from the statement of the gentlemen from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON,] the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of this House a short time ago, that committee has prepared a bill upon this subject, which they are ready, whenever they shall have opportunity under the rules of this House, to introduce for the consideration of members of the House of Representatives of this Congress.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this Committee of the Whole will not adopt such legislation as will require the mechanics of this country to pursue their daily labors under the direction and control of either officers of the Navy or officers of the Army. If the House concurs in the Senate amendment this practice of placing mechanics of the country under officers of the Navy will continue. If it does not concur then our mechanics, as they have from the foundation of the Government, will be under the supervision of men skilled in their particular mechanical pursuits.

Mr. PIKE. The Naval Committee had this matter under consideration and they made this proposition, which went to the Senate, and the Senate has non-concurred. It is likely the amendment of the House made by advice of the Naval Committee was too extensive. They have established some seven or eight offices, going perhaps too far into detail. I understand the Senate desire to establish four places to be controlled in this manner. It may therefore be a matter of compromise between the two Houses.

Mr. KASSON. The committee thought it was to raise a new issue. I will not oppose the non-concurrence with a view to effecting some arrangement of the matter.

Mr. PIKE. It can readily be done, and I hope that the House will non-concur.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fourth amendment:

Page 4, strike out all after line eighteen to the end of line twenty-two, as follows:

For pay of some suitable person, appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, to examine the archives of the Department and other sources of information, and collect and collate the facts which may illustrate the history of the United States Navy, $1,500.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. GRINNELL. I hope this paragraph will not be stricken out, and that the amendment of the Senate will be non-concurred in. The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifth amendment:

Page 6, line two, in the paragraph for preparing for publication the American Nautical Almanac, strike out $15,000 and insert $21,000.

The committee recommend concurrence.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I should like to have some information in regard to this matter.

Mr. KASSON. It is all right. The calculations for this American Nautical Almanac have been paid for in this way every year.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixth amendment:

Add the following as an additional section:
And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to negotiate with the city of Brooklyn, in the State of New York, and to effect a further exchange of lands in Wallabout bay, between the United States and said city, and thereupon to make, execute, and deliver good and sufficient deeds and release therefor.

The committee recommend concurrence, with the following amendment:

Insert at the close of the Senate amendment the following proviso:

Provided, That the title acquired shall be approved by the Attorney General, and the exchange shall be effected without expenditure from the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to; and the Senate amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Seventh amendment:

Add the following as an additional section:
And be it further enacted, That no workman in the navy-yards shall be required or requested to contribute or pay any money for political purposes, nor shall any workman be removed or discharged for political cause; and any officer or employé of the Government who shall offend against this provision shall be dismissed the service of the United States.

The committee recommend non-concurrence. The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. KASSON moved that the committee rise and report the amendments of the Senate to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CONKLING reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the amendments of the Senate to the Navy appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with concurrence in some and non-concurrence in others.

The action of the Committee of the Whole on the amendments of the Senate was then concurred in.

MOLINE WATER COMPANY.

Mr. SCHENCK. I wish to introduce a joint resolution, and to give a brief explanation of why I think it ought to pass.

Mr. COOPER. I object.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to suspend the rules. The question being taken, there were—ayes 64, noes 27.

So (two thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to carry into effect the recommendations of the commissioners appointed under the acts of April 19, 1864, and June 27, 1866, relative to the Moline Water Company and the water-power at Rock Island, Illinois, as contained in the report of said commissioners, and to make application for that purpose of the money heretofore appropriated for securing water-power at the head of Rock Island.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I was interrupted when I offered this as an amendment to the appropriation bill just when I was getting to the point of the matter. I will now begin again.

In an act passed on the 27th of June last, in relation to this arsenal at Rock Island, there was an appropriation in these words, "To secure water-power at the head of Rock Island and $100,000." That money is now dedicated to this purpose. It is absolutely essential in order to carry on the machinery for the manufacture of arms at that great western arsenal building at Rock Island that there should be water-power and privileges secured. They are not to be had without an arrangement made with this Moline Water Company, which has control in great part of the water-power at the head of the island.

Under the authority of the same act commissioners were appointed to ascertain upon what terms a purchase of this water-power could be made. I hold in my hand their report. They say that they have brought the Moline Water Company to an agreement of this kind, provided the Government on its part can carry it out: that the Government shall give them no money whatever, but that it shall expend $100,000 in improving the water-power and making it effective and valuable for the use of the Government, and in consideration of the release of the interest of the Water Company, will let them have the use of one fourth of the water, which will leave three fourths of the water-power that will be created to the Government. The Water Company further agree that they will rent at a stipulated price from the Government all of that three fourths of the water-power which the Government may hereafter have to spare. So it is to be a scheme by which the Government shall get the water-power by expending the money on the work itself and afterward probably making something by renting any surplus water it may have. This is all shown by the report of the commissioners. The fifth condition of the agreement with the company is in these words:

"Sixty thousand dollars of the present appropriation to be applied to the extension of the present stone dam on the Moline side, and $40,000 to the extension and repairs of the wing-dam and removal of such deposits as may be required for the extension and repairs of said wing-dam. The use of the present water-power shall not be unnecessarily obstructed during the construction of the proposed work, nor shall any rent be required until the improvement contemplated by the $100,000 appropriation shall have been made."

The Secretary of War thinks it better, instead of paying the money for the purchase of the water-power and leaving the work to be done hereafter, to demand of the company that they shall let the Government make this water-power the best it is possible to make it, and let the company have the use of the water afterward. Now, the object of this is to enable the Secretary of War to carry out that plan recommended by the commissioners, and save the payment of the money to the Water Company, using it for improving this work and paying the company or whoever now has an interest in the matter by giving them the use of a portion of the water. I think it is an exceedingly good bargain; so does the Committee on Military Affairs, and so did also another committee of this House to whom the matter was submitted. I ask the previous question.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to state that I know something about this water-power at Rock Island. I have known it for years, and I am sure that this operation will be a very convenient one for the parties who purchased that power originally and owns so valuable an investment to get rid of it and pass it off to the Government. I know the whole cost of this thing originally. I investigated the matter for the parties who made the purchase. I think within the last year the entire interest of the stockholders of that water-power was sold to parties in Chicago on some speculation at $59,000, and the Government now has come to the conclusion that to purchase a small interest in the property it is advisable to pay $100,000 for it. I think it had better by far use steam-power, than to purchase water-power at such rates.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I know something about this town of Moline and this water-power. It was formerly in the congressional district which I represented; and last winter I was consulted by the officer of the War Department in charge of this work, meeting General Rodman, who is in charge of the building of the arsenal, at the office of the engineer in Washington. The town of Moline is built at the head of the island on the Illinois shore. First they had, by authority of the Legislature, extended the dam from the shore to the island. They gradually improved the water-power, built up mills and machinery, and a flourishing town was established there. They propose this arrangement with the Government: that it shall not pay them one cent for the improvements they have made, but that it shall expend $100,000 in further improving the dam, dredging it out above so as to largely increase the volume of water and augment the fall. The arrangement, in my opinion, is an excellent one for the Government. No money is to be paid to the Moline Water-Power Company. It will undoubtedly be mutually beneficial, but particularly so to the Government. There is an almost exhaustless supply of water when the dam is properly constructed and proper dredging done above. I hope the resolution will be adopted.

Mr. SCHENCK. One single remark in reply to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Davis.] Instead of getting a small interest the Government keeps three fourths of the water-power. I renew the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McDONALD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its adherence to the forty-fourth amendment to the bill of the House No. 896, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1868, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Messrs. EDMUNDS, CONNESS, and BUCKALEW conferees on the part of the Senate.

DISTRICT JAIL.

Mr. MAYNARD. A few days ago the House instructed the Committee for the District of Columbia to inquire into the proceedings of the Secretary of the Interior in reference to building a new jail ordered by an act of the last session. The committee proceeded in the discharge of their duty until they became satisfied of two things: first, that the contemplated plan was an injudicious one; and second, that the contemplated site was neither desirable nor economical. They conferred with the Quartermaster General, formerly superintendent in charge of the Capitol extension, and also with Mr. Mullet, the architect of the Treasury building, and satisfied themselves on both these points. It is understood that the proposals as they are published are to be acted upon on Monday, next week. The committee thought it desirable that the House should act upon a proposition that was attempted to be introduced into the deficiency bill, but which was ruled out of order. We now ask leave to present that proposition in the form of a joint resolution.

No objection being made, the joint resolution was read a first and second time. It is as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That no money shall be paid out of the Treasury toward the construction of the new jail for the District of Columbia under the act of July 25, 1866, unless the letting of the contract for the building of said jail shall be suspended and delayed until perfected plans for the entire work shall have been completed and approved by a board of three, composed of disinterested and competent engineers and architects, of which Quartermaster General M. C. Meigs and A. B. Mullet, architect of the Treasury building, shall be two, nor unless the letting of said contract shall be made by a fair and equal competition on reasonable notice printed in two leading newspapers printed and published in the city of Washington after the approval of said new and perfected plan, and that the Secretary of the Interior be also authorized and directed to select a new site for such jail under said act.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I do not rise for the purpose of interposing any objection to the resolution. I believe it is entirely right and proper; but when the gentleman submitted this same proposition by way of amendment to the miscellaneous appropriation bill I offered an amendment to it providing that a tax should be levied on the taxable property in the District of Columbia to defray the expenses of building that jail. I desire now to submit the same amendment to this resolution. I know no reason why we should build a jail for this District at our own expense.

Mr. MAYNARD. I cannot yield for that amendment. The whole subject is disposed of in the act of last session, which provides how much money is to come from the District of Columbia. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MAYNARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Mr. KOONTZ, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee for the District of Columbia a bill to incorporate the joint stock company of the Young Men's Christian Association of the city of Washington, with an amendment in the form of a substitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KOONTZ moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WISCONSIN.

Mr. SLOAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of joint resolution (S. R. No. 102) construing and giving effect to the joint resolution entitled "A resolution for the relief of the State of Wisconsin," approved July 1, 1864, and that the resolution be put on its passage at this time. It is simply a resolution construing a law heretofore enacted. It has passed the Senate and has been reported favorably by the Committee of Claims in this House. I am authorized to state that the gentleman who made the objection by which the resolution was sent to the Committee of the Whole desires now that it may come up for consideration.

Mr. COOPER. I object.

Mr. SLOAN. I move, then, that the rules be suspended in order to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Before the question is taken on that motion I ask that the resolution be read.

The joint resolution was read. It proposes to enact that the resolution entitled "A resolution for the relief of the State of Wisconsin," dated July 1, 1864, shall be so construed as to entitle the Milwaukee and Rock River Canal Company to reimbursement, out of the canal fund therein mentioned, for the amounts which are proved to have been paid out by it for interest in carrying on the work mentioned in said former resolution, in the same manner as for other sums by it expended; also for the amount which is proved to have been expended by it in necessary repairs and management of the canal after the date of said resolution, but before the date of the settlement made thereunder. But the company is not to receive more than the amount of the residue of the trust fund arising from the sale of the canal lands charged against the State in the settlement and not heretofore paid over to the company; and the Secretary of the Department of the Interior is to complete the settlement by making the further allowances to the company up to the amount of the residue of said canal lands fund; the money to be paid to the company out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The motion to suspend the rules was not agreed to; there being—ayes forty-four, noes not counted.

LAND-GRANT RAILROAD IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (R. R. No. 865) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from the city of Stockton to the town of Copperopolis, in the State of California, be taken from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage.

Mr. HILL. I must object to taking up the bill out of its order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DELANO. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES M. BISHOP.

The first business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 916) entitled "An act for the relief of James M. Bishop, who claims $236."

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Amend the title by striking out the words, "who claims $236."

The amendment was concurred in.

PAYMENT FOR SUBSISTENCE SUPPLIES, ETC.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendments to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 226) extending the provisions of section two of an act entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermasters' stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," approved July 4, 1864.

Mr. SCHENCK. The Senate, in amending this bill, which is one reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, has not, I think, quite understood the point of the case. I believe that in a committee of conference the matter could be satisfactorily explained. I hope, therefore, we shall non-concur in the amendments, and ask the appointment of a committee of conference.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I call for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read. It proposes to extend the provisions of section two of the act named in the title, to cover all cases where quartermasters' stores were actually furnished to the forces under the command of Major General Lewis Wallace, and duly receipted for by persons acting under his authority during the Morgan raid through the States of Indiana and Ohio, in the summer of 1863; and for the purpose of giving such receipts for property so applied such persons are to be held to be proper officers of the Government.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

On page 1, in line six, strike out the words "persons acting under his authority" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the acting quartermasters of his command."

On page 1, in line ten, strike out "persons" and insert "acting quartermasters."

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, at the time of Morgan's raid through Ohio and Indiana the Government troops under the command of General Wallace were necessarily obliged to obtain subsistence from the farmers and others in that section of the country. There is a general law providing that the quartermaster's department may settle for property taken for the subsistence of the Army and receipted for by the proper officers. In this case there were no properly authorized officers to give such receipts, General Wallace being obliged to employ in the service whomsoever he could get. In the bill as passed by the House we have provided that wherever there is satisfactory proof that such property was actually furnished for the subsistence of the troops engaged in defending Indiana and Ohio against that raid, receipts given by persons acting under the authority of General Wallace shall have the same effect as receipts given by the proper officers.

The Senate has amended the bill so as to require that the receipts shall be given by "the acting quartermasters." But as this was not an organized army, there were no regularly authorized quartermasters. The Senate, in making the amendment, has acted under a misapprehension.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope that this bill will be passed. A similar state of things to that which the gentleman from Ohio has described prevailed in my own section of country; and I feel the full force of everything that he has said. At some future time I may ask the passage of a similar bill with reference to the people of my own State.

The amendments of the Senate were not concurred in.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move the appointment of a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1184) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868.

The amendments were read, as follows:

On page 3, after "dollars," in line thirteen, insert the following:

For the construction and repairs of barracks for engineer troops at the depot of engineer supplies, at Willett's Point, New York, $25,000.

On page 3, strike out all of section two, and insert the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That in order to determine the relative powers of resistance of the turret and broadside system of iron-clad vessels-of-war, and whether or not our present heaviest guns are adequate to the rapid destruction of the heaviest plated ships now built or deemed practicable on either system, and whether or not our heaviest stone forts will resist our heaviest guns, and if not what increase in strength by adding either stone or iron or variation in form is necessary to that end, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized to detail a joint board, of not less than six competent officers, three from the Army and three from the Navy, whose duty it shall be to construct and test by firing upon them such targets as they may deem necessary for the purposes above named; and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized and directed to supply the board with such facilities for the purpose as they may require: Provided, It can be done from the unexpended funds and materials now at their disposal, the expenses to be borne equally by the War and Navy Departments, and from such funds at their disposal as the Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy may designate respectively.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. One of the Senate amendments appropriates only $2,600 for Willett's Point. It is recommended by the Department and was originally in the bill. The other seems to me to be a proper item.

Mr. SCOFIELD. It is the beginning of another appropriation. I move that the amendments be laid on the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 52.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana, and Mr. FARNSWORTH were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 55.

Mr. SCOFIELD. This bill has more lives than a cat and not half as valuable. [Laughter.] I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. FARNSWORTH moved that the House concur in the Senate amendments; and on that motion demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 45.

Mr. DELANO demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DELANO and Mr. ELLIOT were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 55.

Mr. BERGEN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendments were not concurred in.

MOTION FOR RECESS.

Mr. SCHENCK. By long usage it is held that the legislative day extends to twelve o'clock the next day. It is necessary we should extend this day's session, and I therefore move that we take a recess until eight o'clock this evening, to enable the Speaker to sign bills and resolutions, so that they may be sent to the President.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman means eight o'clock Sunday evening. At three o'clock Sunday morning the Speaker decided it was not Sunday, but that it was Saturday.

The SPEAKER. A distinguished member, Mr. Benton, was also told on Sunday it was still Saturday. The legislative day continues until the beginning of the next.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I hope the Chair will state to the House what necessity there is for our meeting on the Sabbath. It is an offense to the religious sentiment of our people, and can only be justified by the condition of the public business. I hope the Speaker will state to the House why it is we must meet on Sunday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state if it is the pleasure of the majority they can vote now to take a recess until twelve o'clock on Monday. It is within their province to do so. There are two appropriation bills now in the hands of conference committees, one for the civil service and one for the support of the Navy of the United States. There is also the deficiency appropriation bill, which has not yet come back from the Senate. It contains eleven or twelve millions for our pensioners. The money for pensions is now exhausted, and pension offices have suspended, waiting for this deficiency bill to pay the widows and orphans of our soldiers. This bill is before the Senate, and no conference has yet been appointed on it. If this House takes a recess until Monday morning there will be no time for the transaction of this public business. These bills have to be considered in both Houses, sent to committees of conference, those committees have to make their reports, the bills have to be enrolled and signed by the Presiding Officers of both branches, and then sent to the President for his approval.

So also in regard to other bills that are in the hands of conference committees. The Chair supposes that by a mere formal session this evening we might comply with the rules, which require that the Committee on Enrolled Bills shall report in open House, and that the Presiding Officer shall sign the bills reported by that committee in the presence of the House. But of course it is in the power of the House to let those bills remain unreported and unsigned, and take a recess until any time they see fit.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move an amendment, that when the House adjourn it adjourn to meet at eight o'clock p. m. this day, (Sunday.)

Mr. MAYNARD. Let us take a recess until that time—not adjourn.

The SPEAKER. It will require a two-thirds vote to do that, as our time for meeting is fixed by rule at twelve o'clock.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will change my amendment, and move that the House take a recess until the hour I have named.

Mr. THAYER. I move that at eight o'clock a. m. the House take a recess until eight o'clock this evening.

Mr. SCHENCK. I rise to a question of order. I believe there is no motion pending to amend the motion which I made. My motion will appear on the Journal as made on Saturday, and being a motion to adjourn until to-morrow at eight o'clock the Journal will show that to-morrow will be Sunday, and that to-day is the 2d by legislative usage, so that the Journal will be all right. If from to-day, the 2d, we adjourn until to-morrow, of course the adjournment will be to the 3d; and I have moved to adjourn to eight p. m. because I suppose we will have to be here only for an hour or two.

Mr. BINGHAM. I beg leave to say that my colleague is quite mistaken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain a motion for a recess as an amendment to a motion to adjourn.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I think I can make a suggestion that will meet with the approval of the House. I move an amendment to the motion of my colleague, [Mr. SCHENCK,] that when the House adjourn it adjourn to meet at one o'clock on the morning of Monday, March 4.

Mr. BINGHAM. That will not do at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain that motion. By the Constitution the Thirty-Ninth Congress does not exist on the 4th of March.

Mr. THAYER. Is it not in order to move that at eight o'clock this morning the House take a recess until eight o'clock this evening?

The SPEAKER. A motion to adjourn has priority of a motion for a recess.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Ohio as follows:

Resolved, That this 3d day of March, 1867, is not Sunday, but is in fact Saturday, the 2d day of March, 1867.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that that amendment is not in order.

Mr. KASSON. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, when he left the floor about two hours ago, informed me that the committee of conference upon the miscellaneous appropriation bill had agreed upon a report, and desired that action upon it might be had before either recess or adjournment. I feel bound to make this statement to the House before these propositions are put to a vote.

Mr. NIBLACK. We are only waiting for the Clerks to prepare the report of the committee to submit it to the House.

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise to a question of order, that if we adjourn now, on the 2d of March, the 3d being Sunday, we adjourn sine die, that Sunday is not legislative time, that there is no precedent in the history of this country or of England in which legislation appears by the record to have been transacted on the Lord's Day.

Mr. HILL. Let us make a little history.

Mr. MAYNARD. I trust, sir, that in this respect we shall make no innovation, and that if the necessities of legislation require us to actually prolong the 2d of March into the 3d, we shall at least let our Journal speak as the Journals of our predecessors speak upon this point.

Mr. DELANO. I appeal to my colleague [Mr. SCHENCK] to withdraw for the present his motion to adjourn, and let us proceed for some time yet in the transaction of business.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have been misunderstood. I have not made a motion to adjourn at all. My motion was that when the House adjourn it adjourn to a certain time. I now withdraw the motion.

Mr. THAYER. I move that when this House again take a recess, it be to meet at eight o'clock this evening. We have already, I believe, taken one recess to-day.

Mr. DELANO. There is no necessity for fixing now the time to which we shall take a recess.

The SPEAKER. In view of established precedents, the Chair is of opinion that the House had better take a recess for as many hours as they think proper, keeping the date of the Journal March 2.

The motion of Mr. THAYER, that when the House take a recess it be to meet at eight o'clock p. m., was agreed to.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution which I think will not give rise to any debate. It is this:

Resolved, That all fines and costs imposed upon members of this House for being absent without leave be remitted.

Mr. BALDWIN. I object.

NATIONAL CAPITAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. MERCUR, from a committee of conference, made the following report:

The committee of conference appointed upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon House bill No. 234, to incorporate the National Capital Insurance Company, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from their first amendment, with the following amendment: in line nine, page 1, after the word "elsewhere" insert "subject to the laws of the several States."

That the Senate recede from their second amendment, with the following amendment: in line fourteen, page 1, after the word "elsewhere" insert "subject to the laws of the States as aforesaid."

That the Senate recede from their third amendment, and that the whole of section nine, as amended, be stricken from the bill.

That the Senate recede from their fourth amendment, with the following amendments: in line twenty-seven, page 6, strike out the word "twenty" and insert "one hundred and fifty;" after the word "dollars" in line one, page 7, insert "in shares of fifty dollars each;" in line two of same page strike out the word "twenty" and insert "one hundred and fifty;" strike out all of the tenth section after the word "insurances," in line three, page 7.

That the House concur in the fifth amendment of the Senate, with the following amendments: in line four of said amendment strike out the word "January," and insert in lieu thereof the word "February;" after the word "interior," in line six of said amendment insert as follows: "a detailed report of their transactions for the preceding year;" in same line strike out the word "shall;" in line seven after the word "some" insert the word "value;" after the word "Columbia" in lines seven and eight insert "for at least ten days;" strike out the word "premiums" in lines eight and nine and insert in lieu thereof the word "profits;" at the end of said Senate amendment add the following: "together with the amount of stock subscribed and the amount actually paid in."

ULYSSES MERCUR,

MARTIN WELKER,

Managers on the part of the House.

LOT M. MORRILL,

D. T. PATTERSON,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The committee also recommend the following amendments to the bill:

On page 2, strike out after the word "upon" in line five down to and including the word "upon" in line eight.

On same page, after the word "lives" in line nine insert "and health."

On page 3, strike out all after the word "that" in line eighteen over to and including the word "representatives," on page 4, line nine.

On page 4, strike out the words "members or" in lines eleven and twelve.

On same page, strike out all after the word "responsibilities" in line thirteen down to and including the word "company" in line fifteen, and insert in lieu thereof as follows: "beyond the amount of stock subscribed by them respectively."

On same page, strike out all of section five.

On same page, strike out the word "members" in line twenty-five and insert in lieu thereof the word "stockholders."

On same page, strike out the words "said deposit notes or" in lines twenty-five and twenty-six.

On same page, strike out the word "thereon" in line twenty-six, and insert in lieu thereof the words "on their stock."

Strike out all of section seven on pages 5 and 6.

On page 6, strike out the words "members or" in line nine.

ULYSSES MERCUR,

MARTIN WELKER,

Managers on the part of the House.

LOT M. MORRILL,

D. T. PATTERSON,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. It will require unanimous consent to change the text of the bill.

No objection was made; and the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. MERCUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

W. W. POTTER.

The House resumed the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table, the next business in order being the consideration of the amendment of the Senate to bill of the House No. 1095, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay a certain draft to W. W. Potter, late acting military agent of the State of New York.

The amendment of the Senate was to add to the bill the following:

Provided, That before the payment of said warrant the said W. W. Potter shall execute a bond of indemnity to the United States, with sufficient sureties, against the claim of the payee under said warrant.

Mr. DELANO. I move that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. DELANO moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

F. A. GIBBONS AND F. X. KELLEY.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate amendments to the House joint resolution No. 36, referring the papers in the case of F. A. Gibbons and F. X. Kelley to the Court of Claims.

The first amendment of the Senate was as follows:

Page 1, line three, strike out "for" and insert, "and the court shall be authorized, if of opinion that the ends of justice will be subserved thereby, to grant."

Mr. DELANO. I move the amendment be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

Second amendment:

Page 1, line four, after "petition," insert "without prejudice to the claim by reason of the former decision of the said court."

Mr. DELANO. I move the amendment be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. DELANO moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HEIRS OF JOHN E. BOULIGNY.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 438, for the relief of the heirs of John E. Bouigny; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length. It provides that there be, and hereby is, confirmed to Mary Elizabeth Bouigny, Corinne Bouigny, and Felice Bouigny, the widow and children of John E. Bouigny, deceased, the one sixth part of the land claim of Jean Antoine Bernard d'Autrive, in the State of Louisiana, said one sixth part amounting to seventy-five thousand eight hundred and forty acres; and that, inasmuch as the said lands embraced in said claim have been already appropriated by the United States to other purposes, certificates of new location, in eighty-acre lots, be issued to the said Mary Elizabeth Bouigny, for her own benefit and that of her said minor children, in lieu of said lands, to be located at any land office in the United States, upon any public lands subject to private entry at a price not exceeding $1 25 per acre. The Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby directed to issue said certificates of new location, in accordance with existing regulations in such cases.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Private Land Claims to say that this bill has been by them carefully examined, and that they recommend its passage. I present on behalf of the committee the following report:

The Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 438, an act for the relief of the heirs of John E. Bouigny, have had the same under consideration, and report:

That the claim for which relief is asked in this case has already undergone two official investigations under acts of Congress for the adjustment of private land claims in Louisiana. In each of these investigations the facts found established the validity and regularity of the original concession by the French Government, and its subsequent recognition and approval by the Spanish Government which succeeded.

The first of these investigations was under the act of February 6, 1835, which provided for an examination of claims by the register and receiver of the proper land district, subject to approval or rejection of the decision by Congress. Upon this investigation a favorable report on this claim was made, but it was not acted on by Congress. In 1844, Congress passed another act for the adjustment of private land claims in Louisiana. This act provided for the hearing of such claims in the district courts of the United States and their confirmation by decree of the court, subject to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. This claim was presented to the United States district court in Louisiana under this law, and a regular trial took place, fully contested and argued by counsel on both sides; and the court, upon the evidence in the cause, found in favor of the claimants, and made a decree of confirmation. This decree finds all the facts of the case. It will be found on pages 2 and 3 of a report made to the Thirty-Sixth Congress in the same case from the Committee on Private Land Claims. The proceedings are also detailed at length in 15 Howard's Reports, page 14, &c. The committee beg leave to refer to the reports already mentioned, where the facts of the case and the evidence of them, which is very voluminous, are fully set forth at great length. The decree of Judge McCaleb in the district court having been in favor of the claimants, an appeal was taken therefrom by the United States to the Supreme Court. In that court the decree of Judge McCaleb in the district court of Louisiana was reversed upon the ground of want of jurisdiction in the district court, the court holding that the act of Congress under which the trial had taken place extended only to imperfect titles, and that the claimants, if they had shown anything, showed a case of a perfect title. Upon this ground the decree below was reversed, four of the judges, however, taking care to express the opinion that as the cause was reversed for want of jurisdiction in the district court, it was not proper for them to pass upon the validity or invalidity of the title which had been shown.

This claim, it may also be mentioned, has passed the Senate twice. In the Thirty-Sixth Congress it passed the House, and failed in the Senate for want of time. In the Thirty-Seventh Congress it passed the House, and is stated to have been lost in the Senate by an attempt to ingraft upon the bill a proviso that the lands to be given in lieu of those appropriated and sold by the Government should be lands in the State of Louisiana, which proviso the claimants and the friends of the bill were unwilling to accept, because all the public lands of any value in Louisiana had already been disposed of by the Government.

The claim has been favorably acted upon by four congressional committees. It has also, as has been already stated, been sustained by two careful judicial investigations. These considerations have, however, not been allowed to have any undue weight with the present committee. This committee have carefully investigated the evidence in the case, and are of the opinion that the claim against the United States is just and should be allowed.

The committee, therefore, report the Senate bill with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. Speaker, without detaining the House at this late hour any longer than is necessary, I will give a brief history of the origin of this claim.

In August, 1717, letters-patent were issued by the King of France by which a company was created under the name of the "Western Company," to which company all the lands, coasts, ports, havens, and islands of the French Province of Louisiana were given, granted, and conceded in full property, seignory, and jurisdiction, with authority, by the eighth article of said charter, to sell, give, and grant the said lands so granted.

In the latter part of 1717 or beginning of 1718 the said company, with the view of promoting the settlement of said Province, granted to Paris Duvernay, a man of great means and influence, a tract of land fronting on the west bank of the Mississippi, opposite Bayou Manchac, having four leagues front on the Mississippi and extending in the rear back to the Atchafalaya river. Duvernay was at the time one of the counselors of the King and Intendant of the Royal Military Academy in France.

Early in 1718 the said tract of land was settled by a considerable number of persons sent out from France by said Duvernay, under the direction of one Dubuisson. Improvements were made upon the said lands, and the same were occupied and considerable portions cultivated from that time until 1765, when the agent of said Duvernay sold the same to Jean Antoine Bernard D'Autrive—in a private memorandum of D'Autrive the price is stated to have been twenty-seven thousand livres—the ancestor of the present claimants. D'Autrive took possession of the same, known as the Bayou Goula Concessia, and cultivated considerable portions of the front and made thereon a road, beginning on the Mississippi river at or near the lower line and extending to the Atchafalaya, which was known as the Portage D'Autrive, and he [D'Autrive] continued to occupy it until his death, in 1766.

November 3, 1762, a secret treaty was entered into between France and Spain by which France transferred the Province of Louisiana to Spain, and O'Reilly, the Spanish Governor sent out to take possession, reduced the property of D'Autrive, in 1763, to twenty arpents front. This was an act of simple spoliation, and on March 12, 1772, Don Louis Audry, surveyor general of the Province of Louisiana, acting under the authority of Don Luis de Unzaga, Spanish Governor of the said Province, made a survey of a portion of said tract comprised in the aforesaid grant to Duvernay, having forty-four arpents front on the right bank of the Mississippi, with the side lines opening and extending to the Atchafalaya, as represented and described in the plat and process verbal of said survey, (on file and marked B, No. 21,) and on the 12th July, 1772, the said Unzaga, Governor of said Province, did approve the said survey conformably to the plan and process verbal of said survey made by said Audry, with the depth to the Atchafalaya, as shown by the letter of said Unzaga attached to said survey, and marked B, No. 22.

This was a recognition and confirmation of the title of D'Autrive, who was then a resident of the Province of Louisiana, or it was a grant anew of the same by the said Governor, having full power to grant the same.

A portion of said tract fronting on the Mississippi to the depth of forty arpents, and no more, was disposed of to the Spanish Government or otherwise by the heirs after the death of D'Autrive.

This grant is protected by the treaty made between the United States and the French republic April 30, 1803, and by the laws of nations, unless it can be proven to have been lost in some legitimate manner.

After the death of D'Autrive, his widow continued to reside on said land. In the year 1779 she was married to Jean Baptiste Degney. Galvez, the Spanish Governor of Louisiana, wishing to introduce Spanish families from the Canary Islands as colonists into Louisiana, and to provide them with a home, as they were destitute of means, made several contracts with various individuals for the construction of small houses, to be given to said colonists; and among others he made such a contract with Degney. Degney undertook to build a number of cabins on the Bayou Goula grant, and to give up for the use of the said settlers the front of said land, with forty arpents in depth. The Governor having afterward altered his intentions, and having assigned different locations to the Spanish families, gave the land on which the cabins had been constructed to Acadian emigrants, and thus it happened that the front of said forty-four arpents was granted over again to the Acadians, though only with a depth of forty arpents. Afterward Degney and his wife and children removed to Attakapas, where they had other property, and this was neglected.

The children of Bernard Daunterior, in consequence of the neglect of their step-father to assert their rights, and of their tender age when their father died, and of the absence of recorded evidence substantiating their titles, were ignorant of their rights, and long unsuccessful in obtaining sufficient proof thereof. However, in 1821 they employed Edward Livingston as their counsel to advocate their rights in the courts of justice of the State of Louisiana and before Congress. Mr. Livingston was soon afterward elected a member of Congress, and does not appear to have given any further attention to the case.

In obedience to an act of Congress approved February 6, 1835, entitled "An act for the final adjustment of claims to lands in the State of Louisiana," the heirs filed with the register and receiver of the land office of the southeast district of Louisiana, in the year 1836, a notice and statement of their claim and evidence in support thereof, to be reported on to the Secretary of the Treasury and Congress, as provided by said act; and on the 22d November, 1837, the said register and receiver made a report recommending said claim for confirmation, but Congress did not act upon that report and claim.

In 1846 this claim was brought before the United States district court for the eastern district of Louisiana under an act of Congress passed in 1844 for the adjustment of land claims in Louisiana. This act provided for the hearing of such claims in the district courts of the United States and their confirmation by decree of the court, subject to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. This claim was presented to the United States district court under this law, and after a regular trial had, fully contested on both sides, and upon the legal evidence in the cause the court found it to be a valid claim and made a decree of confirmation. The decree itself made by Judge McCaleb, found specifically all the facts of the case, and they will be found on pages 2 and 3 of a report made to the Thirty-Sixth Congress in the same case from the Committee on Private Land Claims. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court by the United States. In that court (15 Howard, 14) the case was dismissed for want of jurisdiction, and solely upon that ground, because under the act of Congress the district court was only authorized to act upon and adjudicate upon incomplete titles whereas the claimants had shown if anything a complete title, and Judges Curtis, McLean, Wayne, and Campbell expressly said that the petition should be dismissed for want of jurisdiction without prejudice to any legal title of the petitioners, and that no opinion should be expressed by that court upon any question of fact or law arising upon the evidence. (See 15 Howard, page 30.)

There have thus been two official investigations of this claim by officers of the United States under acts of Congress for the adjustment of land claims in Louisiana. In each of these investigations the facts found upon legal evidence established the validity and regularity of the original French grant, and its subsequent recognition and approval by the Spanish Government.

This claim has passed the Senate once and failed in the House for want of time. It passed the House in the Thirty-Sixth Congress, and failed in the Senate for want of time. It passed the House in the Thirty-Seventh Congress, and is stated to have been lost in the Senate by an attempt to ingraft upon the bill a proviso that the lands to be given in lieu of those appropriated by the Government should be in the State of Louisiana, which the claimants were unwilling to accept, because all the lands in Louisiana that were of any value had already been disposed of by the Government. Upon a thorough examination of the grounds upon which this claim rests, the committee are satisfied that it is a just and honest claim. The lands which belonged to John E. Bouligny have been sold by the United States; and this bill proposes to indemnify his widow and minor children by authorizing them to locate upon the public domain a like quantity of land. John E. Bouligny will be well remembered by many members of this House as a Representative in this House from the State of Louisiana at the time of the breaking out of the late rebellion. He was the only Representative from the State of Louisiana who, at the critical juncture in which his colleagues abandoned their allegiance and retired from this Hall, adhered immovably to his duty, remained in his place here and stood by his country and its flag, resolved to share its destiny and to survive or perish with its fortunes. The bill before the House proposes to extend to his wife and children an act of exact though tardy justice. I hope it will receive the unanimous support of the House.

The bill was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THAYER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIGHTS OF MARRIED WOMEN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 492, to protect the rights of married women, and for other purposes, in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

RELIEF OF DESTITUTE COLORED PEOPLE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the joint resolution (S. R. No. 172) for the temporary relief of the destitute colored population of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MAYNARD. This is a matter which has been under the consideration of the Committee for the District of Columbia; and while there is testimony on both sides leaving the question not entirely free from doubt, yet as in cases where charity is to be bestowed the safer rule is to let the objects of charity have the benefit of the doubt, so that our failings, if failings we have, may "lean to virtues's side." The committee are in favor of the passage of the resolution.

Mr. JULIAN. I desire to submit to the House an amendment to this bill.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not yield the floor for that purpose till I hear the amendment.

Mr. JULIAN. The bill provides that this money shall be distributed by the Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau. I propose to add the names of Sayles J. Bowen and Dr. E. H. Gray.

Mr. MAYNARD. I have no objection to that amendment, and yield for the purpose of allowing it to be offered.

Mr. JULIAN. I hope, then, the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask that the resolution be read.

The resolution, which was read, provides for appropriating $20,000 for the temporary relief of the destitute colored population of the District of Columbia, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I make the point of order that this is an appropriation bill, and must, under the rules, be first considered in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It is an appropriation bill; but the point of order is raised too late.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. At the time the gentleman from Indiana was on the floor I did not understand that the resolution had been read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] had the right to demand the reading of the resolution; and as he did not make or reserve the point of order at that time he lost his right to make it. It has been repeatedly decided that this point of order must be made before the House enters upon the consideration of a bill.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I wish to appeal to the gentleman from Tennessee to permit an amendment making the mayor of this city one of the parties by whom this money is to be distributed; and also to strike out the word "colored," so as to include in the benefits of this appropriation the poor white people as well as the colored people of the District. I desire that there shall be no distinction made on account of race or color.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, that according to the information we have this relief is needed, not by the white people of the District, nor by all the colored people, but by a class of colored persons who have found their way here since the emancipation. Hence, we propose that this relief shall be limited to the class who actually need it. I cannot, therefore, yield to permit the gentleman to offer the amendment which he indicates. I will, however, allow the gentleman to offer the amendment making the mayor of the city one of the officers to distribute this relief. I am willing that the House shall vote upon that proposition.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] propose in this bill to insist upon a distinction which this House has heretofore declared should not be recognized in our legislation? Does he mean to keep up the distinction of race and color, and to make a discrimination in favor of the black population and against the white?

Mr. MAYNARD. Certainly not. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BALDWIN.]

Mr. BALDWIN. I think this bill ought not to pass, and if I could have the floor for that purpose I would move to refer it to the Committee for the District of Columbia. Since this matter first came up in the House I have inquired carefully to ascertain whether such an appropriation is needed, and I have been visited by many persons profoundly interested in the welfare of the freedmen, persons who have been constantly with the freedmen of the District four or five years as teachers, friends, and helpers. They urge strongly that such an appropriation at this time would do more harm than good, that there is no pressing need of it, and that for other reasons that seem to me just it is not desirable. It would require more time than can be afforded during these closing hours of the session to state these reasons fully. They think the appropriation should not be made, and my own inquiries have led me to the same conclusion. Therefore I hope the bill will be referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia or laid on the table.

Mr. MAYNARD. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOFIELD.]

Mr. SCOFIELD. I was endeavoring to get the floor before the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BALDWIN] spoke; and I desired to state that persons in authority here who sympathize with the freedmen and have been interested in their care have communicated to me the same opinion in substance which the gentleman from Massachusetts says he has received: first, that the necessity for this appropriation is not very pressing; and secondly, that its distribution would cause more dissatisfaction and bickering than the whole amount would be worth; that a great number of those who did not really need it would impose upon those who had the control of it, while those who would need it most would be less likely to make known their wants. It was thought under the circumstances nothing should be said on the subject. I move that it be referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not yield for that purpose. I now yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HART.]

Mr. HART. I am satisfied that this bill ought not to pass. While we may imagine we are doing a great deal of good for the freedmen we may be doing them a great deal of harm. I am informed by a gentleman from the South that labor is every day becoming scarcer there. He had work to do, but he could not find men to do it. There was plenty of employment for this labor in the South, but there was not enough of labor there to do it all. I know men who have come here for the purpose of obtaining labor, offering every inducement for it, and yet they could not induce one to go South, because there was an impression among the freedmen that the Government was going to feed and take care of them. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not yield for that motion. I now yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HOTCHKISS.]

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Our legislation on the subject of reconstruction has been based on the assertion that the blacks were to be treated precisely like the whites at the South. We were told that they were to be protected by the Government of the United States. We were told that their lives would be endangered if they went there. We were told that the loyal colored people of the South were compelled to fly from all sorts of outrages perpetrated on them there. We published all of this to the world. We are now asked to say that these colored people are at fault because they have not rushed into this danger. When they had gathered here from oppression at the South, because of their loyalty to the Government, we doled out to them a small pittance to save them from starvation, and Radicals were denounced before the people for their friendship to the colored race. Now this Congress I hope will not disgrace itself by declaring that all we have heretofore done in this matter was wrong; that these colored people were entirely at fault, and all that has been said against us was true. I hope, sir, this Congress will not disgrace itself by indorsing such a scandal. I hope it will not be done by the men who told us if we consulted the families of those who had gone among these colored people to alleviate their sufferings we would find out the truth; I hope they, at least, will not indorse this scandal.

Mr. PRICE. I think the gentleman and the House are making too much noise for a Sunday morning. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I will say, in reply to my colleague, that it was not the purpose of this committee to exercise a general authority over these people. The object was to provide for certain persons represented to be here temporarily who were not a proper charge upon the people of this District. If this resolution means anything, it means that and nothing more. The framers of the resolution contemplated nothing more than that.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that the Senate adhered to its forty-fourth amendment to the legislative, &c., appropriation bill.

RELIEF OF DESTITUTE COLORED PEOPLE.

Mr. HART. I move to lay the resolution and pending amendments on the table.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I wish to know if we did not appropriate, under a previous resolution, $25,000 for the poor of this District.

Mr. MAYNARD. We did at the last session. Mr. ELDRIDGE. There was such a proposition before the House at this session.

The question was put on the motion to lay the joint resolution and pending amendments on the table, and there were—ayes 81, noes 19.

Mr. JULIAN demanded the yeas and nays, but they were refused—ayes nine.

So the joint resolution was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LE BLOND submitted the following privileged report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate amendment number forty-four to House bill No. 896, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, having met after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Managers on the part of the House.
GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
JOHN CONNESS,
C. R. BUCKALEW,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report of the committee was accepted and the committee discharged.

Mr. SCOFIELD. In what condition is this bill now?

The SPEAKER. It is before the House.

Mr. LE BLOND. I wish to make a simple statement of what I understand to be the difference between the two Houses, and will then leave the subject to the action of the House to make such further disposition of it as it may see proper. I will premise by saying that I am satisfied that unless the House recedes from its proposition the bill will fail, for the Senate evidently is determined not to yield.

I understand the difference to be this: during the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, by sundry resolutions introduced into the House, certain of its clerks and employes were given additional pay, while other clerks and employes were omitted. These persons who were embraced in the resolutions went to the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of drawing their increased compensation, but were told by the Auditor that no payments could be made on the House resolution alone, that it required the joint action of both branches of Congress. So when we came to make provision to meet these contingencies we very properly put it in the appropriation bill of last session. Thereupon a difficulty at once arose between the two Houses, and it was finally referred to a committee of conference at the close of the last session. In that committee of conference it was agreed on the part of the conferees of both Houses that there should be paid to all the clerks and employes of the House twenty per cent. additional compensation. With that understanding the bill was passed. Under the resolutions that passed the House some of the clerks and employes would receive thirty, forty, and sixty per cent. increase, and the question of difference now is whether they shall have the increased compensation that was fixed by the resolutions before the committee of conference was appointed at the close of the last session. The Senate takes the position that the agreement of the committee of conference at the close of last session was in lieu of the House resolutions, and from that position it will not recede.

I have thus stated what I understand to be the difference between the two Houses. The matter now rests with the House to take such action as it sees fit.

Mr. MORRILL. I should be very sorry to have this bill lost in consequence of what I consider an untenable position on the part of the House. It was clearly transcending the positive enactment to which the House itself had agreed, and therefore I hope the House will not allow this bill to be lost upon this very small point. I therefore move that we concur with the Senate and recede from our disagreement, and on that I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion to recede was agreed to—ayes 68, noes 34.

The SPEAKER. The House having receded the bill is passed.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the House receded; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868.

W. H. HARMAN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 598, for the relief of W. H. Harman; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to remit and release to the petitioner the internal revenue tax on five hundred and six gallons of whisky of his manufacture, the same having been destroyed by fire before removal from his distillery and before the sale of the same.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. The attention of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has been drawn to this bill and he makes no objection to it. I have a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue recommending the passage of the bill.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I raise the point of order that this is an appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. It is not an appropriation bill; it is to remit and release a certain tax.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. I send the letter to the Clerk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
WASHINGTON, February 12, 1867.

MY DEAR SIR: I herewith return the memorial of Mr. Harman for relief from an internal revenue tax, which memorial I should have passed to you in person, as I promised you, if the crowd of people in the office would allow me to leave it.

The tax, as appears by the papers, is unquestionably imposed by law. It comprised, however, so large a part of the value of the whisky destroyed that its payment since the destruction of the whisky seems very burdensome upon the tax-payer. He cannot recover the amount from a consumer, as is contemplated in the ordinary payment of an excise tax.

The only objection I have seen to the relief of Mr. Harman has been the precedent which such relief would establish. I cannot recall, however, and upon careful inquiry through the office do not learn of more than two or three such applications during the last six or eight months, and I am therefore constrained to believe that it would not be imprudent to grant the prayer of the memorial. Your judgment in this matter, however, is better than my own.

Very respectfully,

E. A. ROLLINS, Commissioner.

Hon. P. Y. VAN WINKLE, United States Senate, Washington, District of Columbia.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. I yield to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no personal objection to this bill. The only objection that can be raised to it is that it would set a precedent. If we remit the duties on one article that is burned, it seems to me we will have an endless amount of business, for every stock of goods that may be consumed hereafter by fire, no matter of what description, if it has paid the tax would have as just a claim upon Congress for refunding the duties as this. I think this Congress will find itself with a very large amount of business on its hands if it sets an example of this kind.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. It is well known that the tax on this kind of manufacture is different from that on any other. It is levied immediately upon the manufactured article before it is put on the market for sale, while on other articles the assessment is made upon the sale after it has passed from the hands of the manufacturer at the end of each month; so that the loss from fire in the latter case necessarily comes out of the consumer, while in the case of the manufactures of whisky it comes out of the manufacturer who has it on hand. In this case the loss was occasioned by an incendiary.

Mr. MORRILL. Were these spirits in bond?

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. They were not.

Mr. MORRILL. If they had been in bond I would make no objection to the claim.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. It was in the eighth district of Virginia, where there was no bonded warehouse.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Had the tax been paid?

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. It had not.

Mr. DAVIS. How much had been made in the distillery on which no tax was ever paid? [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. The point in this case is, as I understand it, that this man has paid a tax on something that has subsequently been destroyed.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. He was simply assessed.

Mr. PRICE. Well, he has become liable for the payment, and he seeks to avoid it. Now, if this principle is carried out, just see where it will lead. An assessor assesses a party; the tax is not due perhaps for six months. In the meantime a fire occurs, and the party says: "My warehouse has been burned and I have lost my property."

But, sir, I find it difficult to make myself heard amid this hurly-burly. If Demosthenes had lived in this day he never would have gone to the borders of the sea to become an orator. He would have found a better place to practice here. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. I decline to yield further, and demand the previous question.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The question being put; there were—ayes 50, noes 48.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. I demand tellers.

Mr. PHELPS. Was this property insured?

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. It was not.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia, and Mr. ALLISON.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 49.

So the bill was laid on the table.

Mr. WRIGHT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. VAN AERNAM submitted the following report from a committee of conference:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1173) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to amendments of the Senate numbered twelve, sixteen, seventeen, twenty-two, thirty-two, thirty-nine, forty-five, forty-six, forty-seven, forty-eight, forty-nine, and fifty-two, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their amendments numbered six, eighteen, nineteen, forty-one, and fifty-three.

That the Senate recede from their thirty-fifth amendment, and agree to said clause, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "twenty-five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "one thousand," and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their forty-second amendment, and agree to said clause, with an amendment as follows: On page 18, line twelve of the bill, after the word "mutes" insert the words "not exceeding ten in number," and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the forty-third amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

And be it further enacted, That the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings is hereby abolished, and the Chief Engineer of the Army shall perform all the duties now required by law of said Commissioner, and shall also have the superintendence of the Washington aqueduct and all the public works and improvements of the Government of the United States in the District of Columbia, unless otherwise provided by law. And the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives shall hereafter appoint the members of the Capitol police.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the twentieth amendment of the Senate.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the fifty-sixth amendment of the Senate, with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said House amendment, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Provided, That all printing of any kind whatever by the Executive Departments shall be executed by the Government Printer where practicable, and if not, at such office as may be designated by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, at rates not exceeding the current rates for such printing.

And the House agree to the same.

THADDEUS STEVENS,
H. VAN AERNAM,
Managers on the part of the House.
JOHN SHERMAN,
IRA HARRIS,
J. W. NESMITH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. VAN AERNAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I would inquire of the Chair if, in his opinion, the public business is so far advanced that the House may now safely take a recess until this evening?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer the inquiry of the gentleman, in order that the House may understand the condition of the public business at this time. As the Chair understands, all the important appropriation bills are now passed, except the naval appropriation bill, upon which a conference committee has been ordered. That conference committee the Chair understands has not yet had a session.

Mr. KASSON. I think that in the course of thirty minutes that committee will be ready to submit its report to the House.

The SPEAKER. There is also a committee of conference on the fortification appropriation bill, who have not yet reported. The Senate, as the Chair is informed, are now engaged in acting on the deficiency appropriation bill, on which there will probably be required a committee of conference.

The Chair thinks that after the report of the committee of conference on the naval appropriation bill has been made and acted upon, a recess can be taken until this evening; although there will have to be some legislation this evening in order to complete the public business.

Mr. DELANO. In the mean time I hope the House will proceed with the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

FRANK PUGSLEY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 499) entitled "An act for the relief of Frank Pugsley, late a private soldier in company I, of the third regiment of New Hampshire volunteers; which was read the first and second time.

Mr. PATTERSON. I hope that this bill will be put on its passage.

The bill, which was read, provides that in the final settlement of the accounts of Frank Pugsley, as a private soldier in company I, of the third regiment of New Hampshire volunteers, the accounting officers of the Treasury shall regard the date of his discharge from the service of the United States as of the 24th day of October, 1862, and compute his pay and allowances as such soldier to that time.

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not desire to make any opposition to this bill. I wish, however, to remark briefly in connection with it, that there has grown up, so far as the Senate is concerned, a very bad practice of not sending to this House the papers which should properly accompany their bills, and which explain the facts. In former years, whenever a bill went from one House to the other, the papers tending to show the character of the case were always sent along with it. I know nothing about this bill except what appears upon its face, and I shall make no objection to it. In the regular course of procedure it should be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; but at this period of the session such a reference would be equivalent to the loss of the bill. I shall not, therefore, submit a motion to that effect.

Mr. PERHAM. Is there any report in the case?

The SPEAKER. The report does not accompany the bill, though it is probably in the document room, as it appears to have been ordered to be printed.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PATTERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RELIEF OF WEST VIRGINIA SOLDIERS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the joint resolution (S. R. No. 167) for the relief of certain enlisted men of the seventh regiment West Virginia volunteers; which was read the first and second time.

Mr. SCHENCK. This bill is all right, and I hope it will be passed.

The joint resolution, which was read at length, provides that the Secretary of War be directed to cause to be paid to William T. Connel, John Keplinger, and Isaac Conrad, full pay and allowances as private soldiers from August 17, 1861, to January 9, 1863, on presentation of satisfactory proof that they were duly enlisted in the seventh regiment West Virginia volunteers as such, and that their muster into service was prevented by their capture and detention as prisoners of war, from September 7, 1861, to the date embraced by this resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ACCOUNTS OF DISBURSING OFFICERS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the joint resolution (S. R. No. 173) to facilitate the settlement of disbursing officers; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution, which was read at length, provides that so much of the act to provide for the more prompt settlement of the accounts of disbursing officers, approved July 17, 1862, as provides that such accounts, with the vouchers necessary to the correct and prompt settlement thereof, shall be rendered directly to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, be repealed, and that all such accounts and vouchers shall hereafter be sent to the bureau to which they pertain, and after examination there shall be passed to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury for settlement.

Mr. DAWSON. I move to amend the bill by adding the following additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the fourth section of an act to regulate the fees, costs, and other judicial expenses of the Government in the States, Territories, and District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved August 16, 1856, be, and the same are hereby, extended to costs arising under and since the date of the approval of an act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes, approved February 26, 1853.

The supplementary act referred to in this amendment, which was passed in 1856, provides in the fourth section that "in all the cases before mentioned an appeal shall be from the decision of the accounting officers to the Secretary of the Interior." In the adjustment of these accounts it has been found that the supplement did not extend back to cover cases which were included in the original law. The object of the amendment is to extend the fourth section of the act to include all cases covered by the act of 1853, which was the original act regulating these matters. It has been submitted to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and fully meets his approval.

Mr. ALLEY. I move the following amendment to the amendment:

That the paragraph of section five of an act entitled "An act to increase duties on imports and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, as follows, to wit: "On lastings, mohair cloth, silk twist, or other manufactured cloth, woven or made in patterns of such size, shape, and form, or cut in such manner as to be fit for shoes, slippers, boots, booties, gaiters, and buttons exclusively, not combined with India-rubber, ten per cent. ad valorem," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

[Laughter.]

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I think that amendment should be made to read "everlasting." [Great laughter.]

Mr. THAYER. I make the point that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. ALLEY. I should like to have two minutes to explain it.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. UPSON. I ask the gentleman to reserve his amendment to a more appropriate bill.

Mr. ALLEY. I have been trying to get it in, but it has heretofore always been cut off. It has been reported by the appropriate committees of the Senate and House twice. It meets with their approval now. It will save a quarter of a million dollars every year. If the House will permit me I will explain its practical operations. The tariff we passed twenty years ago provided that lastings, mohair cloths, &c—

Mr. HIGBY. I object to debate.

Mr. ALLEY. I withdraw my amendment for the present, as gentlemen tell me they will adopt it as a separate bill.

Mr. POMEROY. I offer the following amendment:

And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act, machinery for the manufacture of beet sugar imported for that purpose solely shall be exempt from duty.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF THE TARIFF.

Mr. ALLEY. I again ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution to amend section five of an act entitled "An act to increase duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1864.

The joint resolution was as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the paragraph of section five of an act entitled "An act to increase duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, as follows, to wit: "On lastings, mohair cloth, silk twist, or other manufactured cloth, woven or made in patterns of such size, shape, and form, or cut in such manner as to be fit for shoes, slippers, boots, booties, gaiters, and buttons, exclusively, not combined with India-rubber, ten per cent. ad valorem," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

There was no objection, and the joint resolution was received and read a first and second time.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I submit the following amendment.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act, machinery for the manufacture of beet sugar imported for that purpose solely shall be exempt from duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. LE BLOND. I desire to call the attention of the reporter of the Associated Press to what I propose to state. I have been, sir, in the Congress of the United States for four years; I am about to leave, and hence gentlemen here will exonerate me from having any personal interest in what I am going to say. If it were different I would not say anything on the subject.

Mr. Speaker, in looking over the reports of the Associated Press for the last four years I find the reporter, as a general thing, has reported very fully what has been stated by the opposition to the Democratic party. Of that I make no complaint; but when it comes to our side of the House I find the reports that are made are usually compressed within a space of two or three lines. Now, I understand this Associated Press is kept up by the general funds of both parties, and it is therefore only fair and just that the reporter should report for one side as fully as for the other. I have no interest in it in any future proceeding, but I have for the party to which I have the honor to belong, the Democratic party, the Union party, the party to which my friend, I fear, does not belong.

Now, sir, I make these remarks that it may go to the country, that our Democratic friends and supporters of the Associated Press may know in the future what they are to expect. I do it for the benefit of those who are to remain in Congress after I have left. This is all I have to say. I hope the Associated Press will give what I have said with reasonable fullness for the sake of the party to which I belong.

COAT OF ARMS OF NEBRASKA.

Mr. HILL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Public Buildings be instructed to cause to be placed upon the sole remaining panel above this Hall the coat of arms of the State of Nebraska.

STOCKTON AND COPPERPOLIS RAILROAD.

Mr. HIGBY. The Thirty-Ninth Congress expires at twelve o'clock on the 4th of March. The State of California will have no delegation in the Fortieth Congress until after the September election. There is one matter that has been in my hands during the whole Congress, and it is about the only measure of a local character that I have had in charge. I do not know that I shall ever again be in this Hall as a Representative—it is just as likely that I shall not as that I shall—and I ask now as a favor from the House that they will let this bill be taken up and put upon its passage.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object. If the majority of this House would allow South Carolina the privilege of representation here on the same ground upon which it is claimed for California I would not object; but as it is I do. I want the gentleman to appreciate the position in which his party have placed those excluded States. I will not object to anything that he pleases to say; but I do object to any legislation on his behalf being allowed on the ground that his State will not be represented in the first session of the Fortieth Congress.

Mr. HIGBY. Then I move to suspend the rules in order to take from the Speaker's table, out of its order, and put upon its passage the bill granting land to aid in the construction of a railroad from the city of Stockton to the town of Copperopolis in the State of California.

The question was upon suspending the rules; and there were—ayes 68, noes 37; two thirds not voting in the affirmative.

Mr. HIGBY. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HIGBY and ELDRIDGE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 74; noes 30.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended; and the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HIGBY. I desire to have a correction made on the fifth line of page 3 of the third section of the bill by striking out the word "presented" and inserting "prescribed."

The correction was made.

Mr. HIGBY. I now move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the demand for a moment. I would like to know what quantity of land is to be granted by this bill.

Mr. HIGBY. I withdraw the demand for the present.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I have been informed that one of these California bills takes in a tract of land forty miles wide. [Laughter.] I wish to inquire whether this is the bill?

Mr. HIGBY. This is not the bill. That bill had its funeral a few days ago.

If the House will allow me I will make a statement in reference to this bill. The road in the construction of which it is intended to aid commences at the city of Stockton, in the State of California, which is at the head of navigation on the St. Joachim river, and is to run easterly to the town of Copperopolis, in the great mineral district, a distance of about thirty-eight miles. About twenty-one miles of the road is in the St. Joachim and runs through a rich and fertile tract of country. Then it strikes into the hills and runs about seventeen miles through what we call the mineral belt, where but a small portion of the land is yet taken.

I will state now, in reply to the question which has just been asked, that I think this company will probably get at the outside from one hundred and twenty-five thousand to one hundred and fifty thousand acres of land. Provided none of the lands within the range granted by the bill had been taken up, it would probably have between two hundred and fifty and two hundred and sixty thousand acres.

Mr. MAYNARD. I call the attention of the gentleman to the sixth section, and ask him to see whether he has sufficiently guarded against the company's taking this land and disposing of it without building the road at all. It seems to me that if they should fail to commence work on the road within two years they would still hold these lands.

Mr. HIGBY. They get a certain quantity of land for every ten miles of road that they complete. Just so soon as they finish ten miles of the road they get their patent for so much land, and so on; there can be no mistake about it.

Now, the freightage upon that road between Stockton and Copperopolis will amount to from fifty thousand to seventy-five thousand tons a year. In 1865 the copper ore freighted from Copperopolis for Stockton was thirty-six thousand tons, and of course there is also a good deal of up freight. But if the road be stopped short of that point it will be comparatively worthless for business purposes.

This bill has been before the Committee on Public Lands. It was brought from that committee and laid on the Speaker's table; and I will call upon the chairman of the committee to state whether the bill was acted upon in the committee before that was done.

Mr. JULIAN. I believe this bill was acted upon favorably by the Committee on Public Lands at the last session of Congress. It was again before us at this session, and we reviewed our previous action and affirmed it.

Mr. HIGBY. I will state to the House that there is a considerable portion of the road that is already graded and a good deal of material already purchased.

Mr. MILLER. What is the probable length of the road?

Mr. HIGBY. Thirty-eight miles—it may be a little more or less, but the wagon-road is about thirty-eight miles, and I think the survey for the railroad is about the same length.

Mr. MILLER. What is the quantity of land that is to be granted to this company?

Mr. HIGBY. Five sections to the mile on each side of the road. Within six miles in the valley there was more than eighty thousand acres in wheat in 1865.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is there not a provision in the bill binding the United States not to sell any of their lands there at less than $2 50 an acre?

Mr. HIGBY. Yes; they are not to sell any within ten miles for less than that price.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think this is a gift enterprise, and the less we have to do with it the better.

Mr. CHANLER. Does the bill contain the usual provision reserving to the United States all mineral lands?

Mr. HIGBY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is there any quicksilver in that land?

Mr. HIGBY. No, sir. I now call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HIGBY. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was taken upon the passage of the bill; and there were—ayes 56, noes 31; no quorum voting.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I think we may as well have the yeas and nays, and I call for them on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 77, nays 33, not voting 81; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Arnell, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Darling, Davis, Delano, Donnelly, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Jenckes, Julian, Kelley, Ketcham, Koontz, Loan, Lynch, Marquette, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McRuer, Miller, Morris, Myers, O'Neill, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Starr, Stokes, Thayer, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Wentworth, Whaley, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—77.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Baldwin, Bergen, Boyer, Broomall, Buckland, Chanler, Cooper, Eldridge, Finck, Hawkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Hunter, Kerr, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Marshall, Mercut, Moorhead, Newell, Niblack, William H. Randall, Shanklin, Taber, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, Hamilton Ward, Welker, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wright—33.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Benjamin, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Bromwell, Campbell, Conkling, Cullom, Culver, Dawes, Dawson, Defrees, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Dumont, Farnsworth, Ferry, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Harris, Henderson, Hise, Hoxan, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Kuykendall, Ladin, Latham, Leftwich, Longyear, Marston, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Morrill, Moulton, Nicholson, Noell, Orth, Phelps, Plants, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Spalding, Stevens, Stilwell, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Williams, and Winfield—81.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HIGBY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill of the House No. 1184, making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repair of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and had agreed to the conference asked by the House; and had appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Messrs. MORGAN, MORRILL, and HENDERSON.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to suspend the rules, in order to offer the following resolution for consideration at this time:

Resolved, That until the business on the Speaker's table is disposed of, no other motion or business shall be in order excepting privileged questions or questions of privilege.

Mr. THAYER. I would inquire of the Chair if a motion to suspend the rules is a privileged motion?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. THAYER. And cannot this resolution or rule, if adopted, be suspended by a two-thirds vote at any time?

The SPEAKER. It can.

Mr. THAYER. Then I cannot see the advantage of adopting this resolution.

The question was taken upon suspending the rules; and there were—ayes sixty-eight, noes not counted.

So the rules were suspended, and the resolution was agreed to.

REMISSION OF FINES FOR ABSENCE.

Mr. ANCONA, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That all fines and costs imposed upon members of this House for being absent without leave be remitted.

Mr. ANCONA moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

APPEALS AND WRITS OF ERROR.

The House resumed the consideration of business upon the Speaker's table, the next business being Senate bill No. 576, relating to appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage now. I desire to offer an amendment.

The bill, which was read at length, provides that where any appeal or writ of error has been brought to the Supreme Court from any final judgment or decree of an inferior court of the United States for any judicial district in which subsequently to the rendition of such judgment or decree the regular sessions of such court have been suspended or interrupted by insurrection or rebellion, such appeal or writ of error shall be valid and effectual, notwithstanding the time limited by law for bringing the same may have previously expired; and in cases where no appeal or writ of error has been brought from any such judgment or decree, such appeal or writ of error may be brought within one year from the passage of this act. The provisions of the act are not to apply in any case in which the right to bring an appeal or writ of error had expired before such suspension or interruption of the regular sessions of the court.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to amend by adding the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That where an appeal has been or may be taken from any final judgment, decree, or order of the district court of the United States for any district to a circuit court, the cause appealed by consent of parties may be heard and disposed of by the circuit court held by the district judge at any term after the appeal, in case of the absence at such term of the Chief Justice of the United States or the associated justice allotted to hold circuit courts for such district.

Mr. LE BLOND. I move that the bill and pending amendment be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be in order when the gentleman from Iowa yields the floor.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That motion, if adopted, would of course result in the defeat of the bill. Other members of the Judiciary Committee, as well as myself, have examined this bill, and there certainly can be no objection to it. Its simple effect is that where the time for taking an appeal from a judgment or decree had not expired before the courts were interrupted by the rebellion, the party will be allowed one year from the reopening of the courts to take his appeal.

Mr. LE BLOND. Let me say to the gentleman that, according to the law which has been recently passed, those southern States have no courts, no constitutions, no laws, except such as may be granted them by the military power to be established there.

Mr. BINGHAM. My colleague must know that the law to which he refers does not affect the United States courts.

Mr. LE BLOND. This proposition, I understand, affects all courts.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman is under a great mistake.

Mr. LE BLOND. If those States are without all law they must be without all courts.

Mr. BINGHAM. My colleague is under a great mistake. This bill does not relate to any appeal from the State courts. It refers purely to appeals from the United States district courts.

Mr. LE BLOND. By the law which was passed even the State courts were ignored.

Mr. BINGHAM. My colleague still labors under a mistake. This bill has relation to the United States courts, and the law to which the gentleman refers does not affect it.

Mr. LE BLOND. It embraces United States courts as well as State courts.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman is mistaken. It does not touch them.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RETAINED BOUNTY OF COLORED SOLDIERS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 595) to regulate the disposition of an irregular fund in the custody of the Freed-men's Bureau; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ELIOT. I ask that this bill be put on its passage.

The bill, with its preamble, was read.

As the Commissioner of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands reports a retained bounty fund, derived from a portion of the State bounties of certain colored soldiers enlisted in Virginia and North Carolina, during the years 1864 and 1865, and by virtue of General Order No. 90, department of Virginia and North Carolina, series of 1864, holden by the superintendent of Freedmen's affairs, but turned over to the Freedmen's Bureau upon its organization; and as the Commissioner has in possession the names of those soldiers from whom the money was taken, and as he has uniformly returned it upon the application or discovery of legal representatives, but retains a considerable portion belonging to soldiers who are either deceased or who cannot be found, therefore the bill proposes to constitute the Commissioner of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, or his successor in office, the lawful custodian of this retained bounty fund, and to appoint him trustee of the same for the benefit of the colored soldiers or their lawful representatives.

The Commissioner is also specially authorized and empowered to invest the fund, or any portion of it, in securities of the United States, for the exclusive benefit of the colored soldiers or their legal representatives; but a sufficient amount in cash is to be retained uninvested to meet all lawful claims thereupon that will probably be presented for payment; and any portion of the fund which may remain unexpended when the bureau shall cease to exist, is to be accounted for by the Commissioner to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. LE BLOND. I wish to have this bill referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It proposes to divert funds in the hands of the Freedmen's Bureau. I think it should go to that committee before being acted upon in this House.

Mr. ELIOT. I think if the gentleman had attended to it he would not have made that mistake. It is not a diversion of the funds by the Freedmen's Bureau. They are in the hands of the Freedmen's Bureau, and are invested for the benefit of the parties concerned. If this be not allowed, then it will have to lie idle. If the Freedmen's Bureau be abolished, then it will be handed over to the Government, with interest.

Mr. LE BLOND. It had better be returned to the Treasury, where it belongs, than to be held by this bureau. No one knows when it will be claimed.

Mr. ELIOT. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ABOLITION OF IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 563, supplementary to the several acts of Congress abolishing imprisonment for debt; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that whenever, upon mesne process or execution issuing out of any of the courts of the United States any defendant therein is arrested or imprisoned, he shall be entitled to discharge from such arrest or imprisonment in the same manner as if he were so arrested and imprisoned on like process of the State courts in the same district. And the same oath may be taken, and the same length of notice thereof shall be required as is provided by such State laws; and all modifications, conditions, and restrictions upon imprisonment for debt now existing by the laws of any State shall be applicable to process issuing out of the courts of the United States therein, and the same course of proceedings shall be adopted as now are or may be in the courts of such States. But all such proceedings shall be had before some one of the commissioners appointed by the United States circuit court to take bail and affidavits.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to have that bill put on its passage. It merely conforms process to that of the State courts.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ABOLITION OF PEONAGE.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 543, to abolish and forever prohibit the system of peonage in the Territory of New Mexico and other parts of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move that that bill be put on its passage.

The bill provides that the holding of any person to service or labor under the system known as peonage is hereby declared to be unlawful, and the same is hereby abolished and forever prohibited in the Territory of New Mexico, or in any other Territory or State of the United States; and all laws, resolutions, regulations, or usages of the Territory of New Mexico, or of any other Territory or State of the United States, which have heretofore established, maintained, or enforced, or by virtue of which any attempt shall hereafter be made to establish, maintain, or enforce, directly or indirectly, the voluntary or involuntary service or labor of any persons as peons, in liquidation of any debt or obligation, or otherwise, be, and the same are hereby, declared null and void; and any person or persons who shall hold, arrest, or return, or cause to be held, arrested, or returned, or in any manner aid in the arrest or return of any person or persons to a condition of peonage, shall, upon conviction, be punished by fine not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and by imprisonment not less than one nor more than five years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

It further provides that it shall be the duty of all persons in the civil and military service of the United States in the Territory of New Mexico to aid in the enforcement of the foregoing section of this act; and that any person or persons who shall obstruct or attempt to obstruct, or in any way interfere with or to prevent the enforcement of this act, shall be liable to the pains and penalties hereby provided, and any officer or other person in the military service of the United States who shall obstruct or interfere with the duties of the said assistant commissioner, directly or indirectly, shall, on conviction before a court-martial, be dishonorably dismissed the service of the United States, and shall thereafter be ineligible to reappointment to any office of trust, honor, or profit under the Government.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DYER B. PETTIJOHN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 175, for the relief of Dyer B. Pettijohn; which was read a first and second time. It directs the Secretary of War to cause to be paid to Dyer B. Pettijohn the full pay and emoluments of a second lieutenant of infantry, of the second regiment of sharpshooters, Minnesota volunteers, from the 30th day of May, 1863, to the 20th day of May, 1865, deducting therefrom any amount he may have received as an enlisted man during the time specified.

Mr. WINDOM. During the march of our Army from the Peninsula to Gettysburg this man received his commission as lieutenant. He was not able to be mustered in, though he made several attempts to do so. At Gettysburg he was taken prisoner and was confined in the Libby prison for nearly one year. In the mean time his company was disbanded, so that he lost his pay as lieutenant during the time his company was in the service.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WINDOM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC PARK IN THE DISTRICT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 549, to establish and maintain a public park in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that a tract of land in the District of Columbia, along and adjacent to Rock creek, embraced within the limits and designations of the survey made by Brigadier General N. Michler, under the order of the Secretary of War, in pursuance of Senate resolution of July 18, 1866, and conforming in its boundaries as near as may be deemed expedient by the commission hereinafter established to the projected boundary lines of the park designated in said survey, shall be purchased by the United States for the purposes of a public park, free to all persons under such regulations as to police and government as may by proper authority be established.

Section two provides that for the purpose of effecting such purchase of the ground inclosed within the designated survey a commission is hereby constituted, consisting of Brevet Major General M. C. Meigs, Brigadier General N. Michler, and Brevet Major General H. G. Wright, whose duty it shall be to negotiate with the owners and receive written proposals for the sale to the United States of their respective tracts of land, or of so many of such tracts or such parts of the same as said commissioners find can be had upon reasonable terms, and as they may deem necessary or desirable for the purposes of a public park.

Section three provides for a report by the commissioners to the next Congress for action thereon; and section four makes all negotiations subject to the approval of Congress.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. It will be observed that this bill simply provides for a commission to examine a certain locality for a public park, their report to be subject to the action of Congress. I believe the time has gone by when there can be any valid objection to the establishment of a public park in the neighborhood of a great city. All through Europe in the principal cities, and in many cities of our own country, parks have been or are now being established. The earlier the work is commenced the cheaper will it be to establish them. The population of this city is increasing rapidly, and no one doubts that it is to be a great city. I believe it will forever remain the capital of the nation. I know gentlemen talk about its removal to the West, following the tendency of empire. But though a vast population is springing up in the far West, I do not believe the people of the United States will ever consent to the removal of this Capitol.

Now, the welfare of the people of this city and District, as well as those who visit from all parts of the country, can be promoted in no better way than by instituting a public park at this time. And let me say that the locality where it is contemplated to establish it is more beautiful than any place in the immediate neighborhood of any great city in the land. It has all the natural advantages to make it beautiful. It contains beautiful trees of all the varieties, mountains, valleys, and springs, everything conspiring to make it desirable.

The report of General Michler, who was commissioned to survey it, is very thorough, and I trust every member who has not read his report will not fail to read it. One survey contains twenty-five hundred and forty acres, the other about eighteen hundred. This bill provides that the commission shall ascertain the prices at which the land may be purchased and report to Congress.

The initiation of this movement was made in the Senate under a resolution of that body. General Michler was detailed by the War Department to make a topographical survey, which he has done. The two Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds agreed to further continue the examination of the public park by appointing this commission, leaving the whole matter to Congress to determine as it shall see fit hereafter what shall be done.

I would be glad to elaborate the subject further, but I will not take up the time at this late hour of the session. I call the previous question.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCOFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NORTON'S CANCELING STAMP.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the consideration of Senate bill No. 582, to provide for the payment of past and future use and purchase of the invention and patent upon "post-marking of letters, packets, &c., and cancellation of postage stamps thereon," made by and patented to Marcus P. Norton, of Troy, New York, April 14, 1863, and reissued August 23, 1864; which was read a first and second time.

It directs the Postmaster General to pay the sum of $100,000 to whoever shall appear to be the rightful owner or owners of the letters-patent of the United States granted to Marcus P. Norton, of the city of Troy, State of New York, on the 14th day of April, 1863, and reissued on the 23d day of August, 1864; but within thirty days of the approval of the bill, such assignees, owner or owners of the patent, are to duly assign or transfer the letters-patent and the invention therein contained to the United States of America for the use of the Government of the United States, and formally accept of the sum of $100,000, in full compensation for the past use, title to, and right to use the letters-patent and the invention therein contained.

Mr. FERRY. I have no disposition to tax the patience of the House at this late day and hour, and yet I cannot forego calling attention to this matter. It has engaged the attention of the Post Office Department, and I hold in my hand a letter from the Postmaster General, which I ask to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, D. C., January 15, 1867.

SIR: I have examined the papers sent me in regard to Norton's canceling stamp, as suggested by your letter of the 20th December.

It is difficult for me to determine the amount which ought to be allowed for the use of that invention. The Department has saved already several hundred thousand dollars by its use, and I have no doubt will continue to save large sums by its future use. The question of value to the Department has long been settled.

The necessity to the Department of its continued use is beyond question. It is also necessary that some settlement be immediately made with the owners of the patent for this canceling stamp. About the 1st day of February next the Department must again advertise for furnishing canceling stamps, and Norton's stamp is the one desired. It is the best there is. If no settlement is made by the Government so that these stamps can be made and furnished to the Department, without interference or embarrassment from the owners of the patent, it is apprehended the Department will be compelled to resort to a more expensive and less approved method of canceling stamps, and so incur great expense and suffer great loss.

I cannot undertake to fix what the value of this invention is to the Department and to the public. The fact that this Department derives the chief benefit from this improvement and that, economically, it is a necessity, is no argument against a full and fair compensation for its exclusive use. I think $20,000 entirely too small a sum, and that $50,000 is not a fair measure of the great value of this invention.

In conclusion, permit me to urge that this question be settled in some way, and on some terms at this session of Congress.

Very respectfully, &c.,

ALEXANDER W. RANDALL,
Postmaster General.

Hon. T. W. FERRY, Of Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I raise the point of order that this contains an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order; it is not an appropriation bill.

Mr. FERRY. I will state for the information of the House that this invention was brought to the attention of the Department in 1860, and after subsequent improvements the Post Office Department adopted the use of it in 1863. For nearly four years the Government has used it. The patentees presented the case for purchase or compensation in the Thirty-Eighth Congress; and the question of title arising, they were remanded to the courts, where an expense was incurred, as will appear by the papers, which I will not detain the House by reading, of nearly eighteen thousand dollars in prosecuting the suit to test the title of the invention. They appeared again in the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, of which I have the honor to be a member, considered the subject. A letter from Postmaster Dennison was submitted recommending the payment of the small sum of $20,000 and the costs of litigation with an implied royalty. The majority of the committee united upon the sum of $50,000, while a minority were in favor of $100,000, the parties claiming $125,000, for the past and future use and title to the invention.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill making appropriations for the service of the Navy for the year ending the 30th of June, 1868.

Also, that the Senate had passed House joint resolution No. 304, to amend section five of an act entitled "An act to increase the duties on imports, and for other purposes."

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KASSON submitted the following privileged report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1176) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1868, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from their first and fourth amendments.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the sixth amendment of the Senate.

That the Senate recede from the third amendment, and that the two Houses agree to said proviso, with the following amendment: strike out all after the word "provided," in the fifth line to the end of the paragraph at line eighteen, and insert in lieu thereof as follows:

That the civil engineer and naval storekeeper, when required at any of the navy-yards, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and the persons employed at the several navy-yards as master machinists, master carpenters, master joiners, master blacksmiths, master boiler-makers, master sail-makers, master plumbers, master painters, and master caulkers, shall be men skilled in their several duties, and appointed from civil life.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the seventh amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: strike out all of said amendment after the enacting clause, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That no officer or employé of the Government shall require or request any workman in any navy-yard to contribute or pay any money for political purposes, nor shall any workman be removed or discharged for political opinions, and any officer or employé of the Government who shall offend against the provisions of this section shall be dismissed the service of the United States.

T. A. HENDRICKS,
W. T. WILEY,
WILLIAM SPRAGUE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN A. KASSON,
N. P. BANKS,
F. A. PIKE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move that the House now take a recess.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at eight o'clock and forty-five minutes a. m.) the House took a recess until eight o'clock, p. m.

EVENING SESSION—SUNDAY.

The House reassembled at eight o'clock p. m., [Sunday, March 3.]

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the following bills and joint resolutions; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 234) to incorporate the National Capital Insurance Company;

An act (H. R. No. 604) to define and punish certain crimes therein named;

An act (H. R. No. 916) for the relief of James M. Bishop;

An act (H. R. No. 1095) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay certain draft to W. W. Potter, late acting military agent of the State of New York;

An act (H. R. No. 1176) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending 30th June, 1868;

An act (H. R. No. 1182) to establish certain post roads;

An act (H. R. No. 1187) for the relief of Oliver Humphrey;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 86) referring the papers in the case of F. A. Gibbons and F. X. Kelley to the Court of Claims; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 305) to amend section five of an act entitled "An act to increase duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864.

Mr. COBB, from the same committee, also reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 438) for the relief of the heirs of John E. Bouligny;

An act (S. No. 499) for the relief of Frank Pugsley, late a private soldier in company I, third regiment of New Hampshire volunteers; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 167) for the relief of certain enlisted men of the seventh regiment of West Virginia volunteers.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. STEVENS. I rise to a personal explanation, though it is not often that I ask leave for any such purpose. I have made it the rule of my life not to contradict any calumny or slander that enemies may circulate against me, except that once or twice when I have been charged with entertaining the foolish opinions of infidelity, or atheism rather, I have denied it.

But I am every day receiving letters asking whether the statements contained in a certain publication in the Cincinnati Commercial are true. Of course I cannot answer all the letters that are sent to me on the subject, and I take this mode of replying to them.

It will be recollected that some time since there appeared in the Cincinnati Commercial an article which was referred to upon this floor some time since by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LE BLOND.] The article purported to relate conversations between the two gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. ASHLEY and Mr. BINGHAM] and myself, in which the name of General Grant was also involved. Now, I desire to say that so far as any conversation is concerned which I am represented by that article to have had, the statement is wholly false; there is not in it even the vestige of truth out of which to fabricate the lie. There was nothing so far as I heard—I did not hear all the conversation that took place between the two gentlemen from Ohio, [Mr. ASHLEY, and Mr. BINGHAM]—but so far as I did hear the conversation there was nothing in it to give any foundation for such a fabrication.

I desire to make this statement, because I am frequently called upon by letters to know whether this statement is true. It may seem very late for me to make this explanation. But the Speaker will remember that I have deferred it thus long at the special request of my excellent colleague from the Fayette district, [Mr. Dawson,] who has several times objected to my making the explanation. I have no kind of hostility to anybody on that account.

When I called by letter upon the author of that article to know who gave the information upon which he based his statement, he declined to give it upon the ground that it would involve a member of Congress. Sir, I do not believe that that was the true ground of his refusal; I do not believe that any member of Congress gave him any such information. For, sir, and I may as well say it now, so far as I know, I do not know of any member of this Congress who would propagate such a falsehood against me or anybody else. So far as I know, there has been more harmony and less acrimony and animosity among members of this Congress than among the members of any other Congress with which I have had any acquaintance.

In the ardor of debate, undoubtedly we have sometimes given and received what might be considered harsh epithets; but so far as I am concerned I do not remember one of them, and there is not a member of this House toward whom I feel the least animosity. I desire to say publicly to the members upon the other side, that although they have differed from me and have sometimes been severe in their criticisms of my policy, they have always treated me with a courtesy and kindness which I deeply appreciate. That is all I have to say on this subject.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. JULIAN, by unanimous consent, reported adversely upon the following memorials; which were laid on the table:

Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Kansas, praying Congress to grant for the use and benefit of the Freedman's University sections of land in the State of Kansas from any public lands not otherwise disposed of; and Memorial of the Governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, for the donation of town sites in aid of a common school fund.

NORTON'S CANCELING STAMP—AGAIN.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 582) entitled "An act to provide for the payment of past and future use and purchase of the invention and patent upon post-marking of letters, packets, &c., and for the cancellation of postage stamps thereon," made by and patented to Marcus P. Norton, of Troy, New York, April 14, 1863, and re-issued August 23, 1864.

Mr. FERRY. I think, Mr. Speaker, the House will bear me out in the statement that I have not during the two sessions of this Congress unnecessarily taxed its patience. The subject before the House is one to which I have given considerable attention; and appreciating the value of time in these closing hours of the session I shall not consume any more than may be necessary to do justice to the merits of the question.

The device for which this bill proposes to provide compensation combines the two operations of post-marking and stamp canceling upon letters; and both are performed at one blow instead of two by the old method of two instruments; and the compensation proposed to be granted is designed to cover the past and future use of the invention by the Government, together with the title to the invention. I may state to the House that in the post office of New York the invention was tested by continued use from 1860 to 1863; and the result was such as to lead the Postmaster General to adopt it in many of the principal post offices of the country; and for the past four years the Government has been using these instruments as fast as they can be made. The late Postmaster General, Mr. Dennison, has stated by official letter that the instrument at the date of his letter had been introduced into certain leading offices in the northern States, and that the use of it had already saved to the Department two hundred and fifty-four clerks. Estimating the average salary of these clerks at $800—although I believe the average is $900—the amount thus saved by the Government is over two hundred thousand dollars, and the aggregate for the past four years would be over eight hundred thousand dollars.

This subject was before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads at the last session of Congress, and simultaneously before the corresponding committee of the Senate. The committee of this House acted upon the question, and I now ask leave to have read as a part of my remarks a very brief report from that committee.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred a "letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting additional papers relating to Norton's marking and canceling stamp," report that they find that letters-patent of date April 14, 1863, were granted to Marcus P. Norton, of the city of Troy, New York, and by him duly assigned to Jacob Shavor and Albert C. Corse, on the 20th day of April, 1863, and duly recorded, as required by law, and a reissue granted to said Shavor & Corse on the 23d day of August, 1864; which said invention, so patented, assigned, and reissued, was for, and upon, improvements in "post office post-marking and postage stamp canceling device," and which invention has been in practical and continuously exclusive use by and under the order and direction of the Postmaster General since the 1st of April, 1863, without compensation whatever to said patentees, nor upon any other stipulation than their consent that the same might thus be used until its utility and advantage to the Government should be effectually tested, when a fair and equitable compensation for either its use or the patent should be made to them by the Government.

The invention having been sufficiently proved, and its utility satisfactorily tested by uninterrupted use in various post offices of the States, application was made to the Thirty-Eighth Congress for compensation therefor, in accordance with the informal stipulation already referred to. Another claimant to said invention appearing, the committee of that Congress who were then considering the subject of compensation decided that, since the validity of the title to the same was called in question, that should first be determined by the courts, and the case was accordingly thereupon remanded.

By a transcript of the proceedings and judgment, now submitted as rendered in the United States circuit court of the northern district of the State of New York, it appears that the question of validity of title was tried, and decided in favor of the patentees, Shavor and Corse. Again, therefore, the patentees appear before the present Congress claiming a suitable remuneration for their invention on condition of an assignment of all their right and title to the same to the United States.

The value of this invention to the Government is verified in the nature and manner following, to wit:

Having in use the said stamp, the postmasters at Washington, District of Columbia; Baltimore, Maryland; New York city, Brooklyn, Albany, Troy, Syracuse, Rochester, and Buffalo, New York; Hartford, Connecticut; Boston, Springfield, and Worcester, Massachusetts; Cincinnati, Ohio; Detroit, Michigan; and Chicago, Illinois, formally certify that in their several offices the Government is thereby saved from one third to one half the stamping and canceling clerk hire theretofore employed, and that "it greatly facilitates the dispatch of letters for transportation in the mails;" that "it greatly economizes in time in the making up of the mails for transportation;" that "it cancels, in the most perfect and permanent manner the postage stamps on letters, packets, &c., and at the same time gives on the envelope an intelligent post-mark;" and that "it prevents frauds by the chemical cleansing or washing of postage stamps for reuse or reissue after once used."

Its utility, facility, and economy are so far established that it is being introduced to the larger post offices of the States as rapidly as they can be supplied. The Government has contracted for their manufacture with Messrs. Fairbanks & Co., of New York, at the price of six dollars each, and is now supplying offices at the average rate of five hundred per annum. From the interruption of postal facilities growing out of the late rebellion the southern States have not been supplied, but will be, as stated by the Postmaster General, as fast as the Department can effect their introduction.

The Post Office Department seems committed to their general and continuous use, so long at least as no other improvement shall commend supersede them. The nearest approach to a practical substitute for this invention is one of English device, manufactured by Turner & Co., London, and to be seen at the Washington post office. This is a more complex and expensive stamp. Its only novel merit is self-inking. The stamp employed is the same combination of stamping and canceling covered by the "Norton patent," and is claimed by him to be an infringement of his invention, and that he holds a patent for his like combination stamp under the English Crown of date February 4, 1863. The similarity of the two stamps in this respect is quite obvious. The cost of this English stamp is $100, ninety-four dollars more than the Norton make, and by the complication of its structure must by use be subject to frequent repairs. A trial of the two methods of execution, fairly tested in the presence of your committee, attested the superiority of the Norton stamp. The same number of letters (100) was stamped and canceled by the Norton stamp in twenty-eight seconds, which by the same operator required forty-five seconds with the English stamp. The Norton stamp is therefore deemed the most perfect and serviceable device extant. The Government in consulting its interest has fully committed itself to its adoption, and over three years' use determines it an indispensable requisite to the safe, rapid, and economical operation of marking, stamping, and canceling in the Postal Department.

The patentees claim, as a just compensation for the title and past and future use of their said invention the sum of $125,000.

The Postmaster General, on the other hand, in a letter on the subject, filed with the papers in the case, recommends as a proper compensation therefor the sum of $20,000, and the further sum of $12,282 70, with interest, being the amount of expenses incurred by the patentees in establishing their legal title to the invention. It is set forth in said letter from the Postmaster General that at the date thereof the Government saved by the use of said stamp the compensation of two hundred and fifty-four clerks of the various salaried classes. At an average salary of $800 per annum, this saving would amount to the sum of $203,200, and an aggregate at this rate for the three years the Government has enjoyed the use of the stamp the sum of $609,600. In view of this computable saving directly traceable to the use of this stamp and without approximating the gain by its future use in many more offices throughout the States where they are being rapidly substituted for the old discarded device, it would seem that the sum stated by the Postmaster General is not an adequate or just compensation for such undeniable and valuable benefits which the Government derives.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed the deficiency appropriation bill, with sundry amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. As there are several amendments to the deficiency bill, I move that they all be non-concurred in, and that the House ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes between the two Houses.

Mr. MAYNARD. I insist the amendments of the Senate shall be read, so that we may know what we are voting on.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to have the amendments read.

The amendments of the Senate were then read in extenso.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the amendments just read be non-concurred in, and that the House ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed Mr. STEVENS, Mr. FARNSWORTH, and Mr. KASSON managers at said conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 598) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

NORTON'S CANCELING STAMP—AGAIN.

Mr. FERRY resumed the floor.

Mr. HALE. I did not understand the sum that was recommended by the Postmaster General.

Mr. FERRY. I was about to state that the report just read in the hearing of the House was founded on the sum agreed upon by the committee, to wit: $50,000. The letter of the late Postmaster General, Mr. Dennison, recommended the sum of $20,000, together with some $13,000 taxable costs, aside from attorney fees and a royalty, something like two dollars for each of these instruments. The committee agreed on $50,000. The patentees were unwilling to accept that, and that unwillingness led to action in this Congress. The Senate first took up the question, and the committee in that body were unanimous in recommending the sum of $100,000 for the past and future use and title to this device.

Mr. FINCK. I wish to ask the honorable gentleman from Michigan whether he has received any information of the invention of an entirely new improvement which is destined to supersede this stamp?

Mr. FERRY. I have received information of two supposed improvements, but in the opinion of the Department they are not improvements, but in fact are alleged infringements of the present device.

Mr. FINCK. I wish to ask my colleague further, before he calls the previous question, whether he will permit me to offer an amendment striking out $100,000 and inserting $50,000?

Mr. FERRY. I will give my colleague that opportunity.

Mr. FINCK. I also want to say a few words on the subject.

Mr. FERRY. If the House will bear with me I will yield a reasonable time to the gentleman as well as to others.

Mr. FINCK. I wish to ask my colleague one more question. I have a recollection in the investigation of this claim there was a conflict between certain parties as to which one was entitled to this sum if it should be awarded for this stamp. Now, does the bill of the Senate make any provision by which the Postmaster General is authorized to determine who is the rightful claimant?

Mr. FERRY. I reply to the gentleman from Ohio that the courts have already determined in whom rests the title to this invention. During the Thirty-Eighth Congress the court decided that the title was in this patentee.

Mr. FINCK. If I remember correctly there was still a question undisposed of as to which one was the rightful claimant on the record introduced before the committee. The House committee in considering the question made some provision by which the money was to be divided among the claimants. Does this bill make any such provision?

Mr. FERRY. I answer the gentleman by reminding him that the House will have seen from the reading of the bill that it provides that the Postmaster General shall pay to the parties who appear to be the owners of the device.

I was going on to state, when interrupted, that the committee in the Senate unanimously agreed upon $100,000 for this invention. I will add that it was with remarkable unanimity that the Senate agreed to that amount, and it was in the face of the letter of Postmaster General Dennison and based upon the records and merits of the case.

When the patentee refused to accept the $50,000, at the instance of the committee I addressed the present Postmaster General, Mr. Randall, asking whether the device was still in use, and whether in the opinion of his Department it was, as claimed to be, the best instrument extant. The letter which I received in reply was read here before the recess, and I wish to call the attention of the House to two points in that letter, as many members are now in the Hall who were not present then. The Postmaster General says:

"The question of value to the Department has long been settled. The necessity to the Department of its continued use is beyond question. I think $20,000 (alluding to the letter of the former Postmaster General) entirely too small a sum; and that $50,000 is not a fair measure of the great value of this invention."

This letter is dated January 15, 1867.

And now, while up, I want to call the attention of the House to another peculiarity of this device. It not only stamps the post-mark perfectly upon letters, but by the use of an elastic substance, to wit: cork, in the canceling part of the machine, the enamel of the stamp is so far broken as to allow the ink to be thrown into the body of the stamp, and so defacing it as to prevent its being cleansed by chemical process and the possibility of its fraudulent reuse by which the just revenue of the Department could be diminished. It came to the attention of the Postmaster General that in the city of New York certain parties were inviting the benevolent to send them their old stamps to be made into papier-maché articles, the avails of which were to be used for "the education of young men for the ministry"—affording another illustration of the tendency of fallen human nature to "steal the livery of Heaven to serve the devil in;" but it was discovered that the stamps that were sent in response to this appeal, instead of being devoted to the education of young men for the ministry, were washed by chemical process and fraudulently reused for postal purposes.

Now, this bill gives the right to use this instrument not merely to the Postal Department, but to the Government generally; and if we acquire that right, it will come into use in the internal revenue department also, which can only be properly protected by the perfect cancellation of all stamps used in its multiplied forms and ramifications. As I have said, this instrument not only breaks the stamp, but impregnates it with ink so as to effectually prevent its reuse; while by the other method, to wit, the use of iron or hard wood instead of cork, the ink is placed merely upon the surface of the stamp, does not penetrate it, and therefore does not prevent it from being cleaned and used again.

Thus it will be seen that the Government is benefited by this device in two ways: by the facilitation of its postal business, and by the protection of its internal revenue interests. As the report states, and as has been shown by satisfactory testimony, the use of this instrument wherever applied saves one half the clerical stamping force which would otherwise have to be employed; so that the sum so saved to the Government during the past four years is definitely computable and aggregates $800,000; its use for a term of years within the life of the patent, even if no greater number of offices in the land are furnished with the device, will save the Government millions.

Hence I believe that the amount proposed by the Senate committee to be paid for the title and right to use this instrument is not too much; as a minority of the House committee to whom the matter was referred such is my opinion. In fulfillment of a promise I now yield ten minutes to my colleague on the committee from Indiana, [Mr. FARQUHAR.]

Mr. HILL. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. FERRY. I will do so.

Mr. HILL. I understand that this bill proposes to pay $100,000 for this instrument. Now, I believe that a former committee of this House reported $50,000 as a proper amount to be paid for it; and that the value of the instrument was estimated by Postmaster General Dennison at $20,000. Am I correct in this?

Mr. FERRY. Yes; Postmaster General Dennison appraised the value at $20,000, with $13,000 additional as royalty.

Mr. HILL. Then I ask the gentleman to permit me, at some stage of this bill, to offer an amendment striking out $100,000, and inserting instead the sum named by Mr. Dennison, $20,000.

Mr. FERRY. I am not willing to open the question for an amendment of that kind at present.

Mr. HILL. I do not ask the gentleman to do it now, but at some time before the bill is finally disposed of.

Mr. FERRY. I will do that. I now yield to my colleague, [Mr. FARQUHAR.]

Mr. FARQUHAR. I am very sorry, Mr. Speaker, that my friend and associate upon the committee, having occupied the attention of the House upon this subject for nearly an hour, can give me only ten minutes in which to explain to this House why we should not pay this large price for this little instrument, although it is such a wonderful economizer; for the gentleman's calculation, if carried out mathematically, will demonstrate that in the course of from fifty to one hundred years we can save enough by the use of this canceling-machine to pay our entire national debt. [Laughter.] Viewed in this light the machine is certainly fitly named; and it would be interesting to consider the problem, if one canceling-machine will save $800,000 in four years, how many such machines would it take to pay off the national debt in fifteen years? [Laughter.]

Now, sir, I desire to consider seriously for a few minutes this proposition to pay the large sum of $100,000 to some gentleman who claims and demonstrates by certificates from the Post Office Department that his inventive genius has saved to the Government $800,000 in four years. Notwithstanding this claim and these certificates, I undertake to say that the use of that machine has not saved the labor of more than fifteen men during the time it has been in use, and does not do so now. I have most reliable information from a gentleman in the employ of the Government, in one of the largest post offices in the country—perhaps the largest next to that in the city of New York, I mean Chicago—that three clerks perform the stamping duties in that office, and that this canceling-machine saves only the labor of one clerk there. He says that it would save the labor of one clerk in Boston, one in Philadelphia, probably one in Baltimore, one in this city, and two in New York. And yet this claimant comes here with his statements and certificates to show that the use of the machine in one office has saved us $200,000 a year.

Sir, the Postmaster General who preceded the present incumbent of the office reported $20,000 as the outside limit to which he would go to meet the demands of this patentee. He proposed to pay $20,000 for the past use of the stamp and for the right to use without limit in the future; and he could not be induced to consent to pay one farthing more for the right to use the machine; although he was willing to add $13,000 to make good to this claimant the expense to which he had been put in establishing his right to the patent. We are confidently told by this gentleman and his friends that this machine is the only one fit to be used, and that all others are valueless in comparison with it; and yet it took $13,000 to demonstrate its superiority to its two or three competitors.

Now, sir, $20,000 was the amount first recommended by the committee; afterward the committee were induced, by the representations made to them that the appropriation was not only as payment for the use of the stamp for the last four years, but in consideration of the continuance of its use for all time to come, to recommend an appropriation of $50,000, in order to cover all expenses and to meet all demands.

But since the committee of this House took action upon this subject, I think it has come to the knowledge of the committee this session—I know it has come to the knowledge of several members of the committee—that there is another stamp, a rival stamp, a new invention. My information is that it is a far superior stamp to the one which it is claimed here the Government of the United States should pay $100,000 for.

I am warned by the finger of the dial that I must hasten to a conclusion. I will ask gentlemen upon this floor to consider for one moment the object and purpose of this bill. It is to appropriate $100,000 to pay this man of profound genius—for what? For producing this little canceling stamp, substituting in the place of metal simply a piece of cork, and nothing else.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was delivered to the House by Colonel WILLIAM G. MOORE, his Secretary, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 588) for the relief of Richard Cheney;

An act (H. R. No. 1154) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under authority of law, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 1166) to authorize the building of light-houses therein mentioned, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 205) for the erection of an equestrian statue to the memory of Brevet Lieutenant General Winfield Scott;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 222) prohibiting the payment by any officer of the Government to any person not known to have been opposed to the rebellion and in favor of its suppression; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 268) to pay Lieutenant John H. Hamlin for military services.

NORTON'S CANCELING STAMP—AGAIN.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill in relation to Norton's canceling stamp.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will only say that this is a stamp by which the postage stamps on a letter are defaced by the operation of post-marking the letter.

Mr. FERRY. I now yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. GRISWOLD.]

Mr. ALLEY. I think, as chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, the gentleman might allow me to be heard.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I will waive the floor for the present.

Mr. FERRY. I will yield to the chairman of the committee [Mr. ALLEY] for five minutes.

Mr. ALLEY. I cannot discuss this question properly in five minutes.

Mr. FERRY. I will yield to him for eight minutes.

Mr. ALLEY. I decline to accept so short a time.

Mr. FERRY. Well, I will now yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. GRISWOLD.]

Mr. GRISWOLD. I hope the House will not be carried away by any erroneous ideas as to the intrinsic value of this device, for compensation for which application is now made to Congress. I know the applicants in this case, and I am somewhat familiar with the trouble and expense to which they have been subjected in establishing their rights to this device. I know, too, that by the concurrent testimony of the present Postmaster General and the preceding Postmaster General the value of this device to the Government is fully conceded.

It has been said that the idea of giving $100,000 for so small a device as this is perfectly preposterous. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FARQUHAR] says it only saves the labor of one or two men in each of the principal post offices in the United States. Assuming that the gentleman is correct in that, and that only two hundred and fifty offices throughout this country use this device, and that only $500 a week is saved thereby to the Government in clerk hire; in each year there will be saved to the Government an amount almost sufficient to pay what is here asked.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, on the bill (H. R. No. 1184) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and care of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution (H. R. No. 608) to enable the Secretary of War to carry out an agreement in relation to the water-power at the United States arsenal at Rock Island.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 543) to abolish and forever prohibit the system of peonage in the Territory of New Mexico and other parts of the United States;

An act (S. No. 563) supplementary to the several acts of Congress abolishing imprisonment for debt;

An act (S. No. 595) to regulate the disposition of an irregular fund in the custody of the Freedmen's Bureau; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 175) for the relief of Dyer B. Pettijohn.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1184) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from so much of their second amendment as proposes to strike out the second section of the bill, and agree to the same; and the House agree to the section proposed to be inserted by the Senate to said second amendment.

HENRY D. WASHBURN,

WILLIAM HIGBY,

TEUNIS G. BERGEN,

Managers on the part of the House.

E. D. MORGAN,

LOT M. MORRILL,

JOHN B. HENDERSON,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. This report leaves the fortification bill in the form in which it went from the House, with the exception of an additional section providing for experiments in regard to fortifications.

Mr. MAYNARD. The committee, I understand, retain the provision for testing fortifications?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. Yes, sir. I request the Clerk to read the additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

And be it further enacted, That in order to determine the relative powers of resistance of the turret and broadside systems of iron-clad vessels-of-war, and whether or not our present heaviest guns are adequate to the rapid destruction of the heaviest plated ships now built, or deemed practicable on either system, and whether or not our heaviest stone forts will resist our heaviest guns, and if not, what increase in strength, by adding either stone or iron, or variation in form, is necessary to that end, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized to detail a joint board of not less than six competent officers, three from the Army and three from the Navy, whose duty it shall be to construct and test by firing upon them such targets as they may deem necessary for the purposes above named; and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized and directed to supply the board with such facilities for this purpose as they may require, provided it can be done from the unexpended funds and materials now at their disposal; the expense to be borne equally by the War and Navy Departments, and from such funds at their disposal as the Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy may designate respectively.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire also to inquire whether the bill as reported contains the proposal submitted by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LE BLOND,] providing that only fifty per cent. of the sums appropriated shall be expended during the next fiscal year?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. That provision was stricken out by the Senate; but it has been restored by the conference committee.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The Speaker laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in further answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 24th January, 1867.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 2, 1867.

The message, with the accompanying documents, was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

COTTON CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the House of January 4, 1867, relative to cotton claims; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WENTWORTH submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House five thousand extra copies of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury concerning cotton.

The SPEAKER. This resolution will be referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing.

NORTON'S CANCELING STAMP—AGAIN.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I desire to say briefly, as my time is restricted, a few words in regard to the value of this device, for I conceive it is a very valuable invention. I believe no one pretends to question its value and utility. We have had the letter of the Postmaster General which speaks highly of its usefulness to the Government. We have here the patentee, with the record showing the establishment of the exclusive right before the civil tribunals of the country to this invention. We have seen that they have expended $15,000—they say $20,000—in perfecting this device which we are told saves annually to the Government more than is proposed to be paid for it altogether. Yet, sir, we are told, notwithstanding all these facts, that it is absurd to pay them this money. I hope, sir, the House will not be driven from a fair and dispassionate consideration of this question.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York whether this device, as we are told, is anything more than a piece of cork?

Mr. GRISWOLD. It is a simple one; but by its use one man in the Post Office will do the work of two. The gentleman, with his mathematical knowledge, can easily tell how much labor it saves to the Post Office, and therefore can himself make an estimate of what it is worth.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. What is the cost of one of these instruments?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I believe the report of the committee states it to be six dollars.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. How many does the Government want to use? Say there are two hundred and fifty post offices at six dollars apiece, the whole cost would amount to $1,500. Now, when the Government can purchase all of these instruments that it needs for $1,500, why should it pay $100,000?

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 896) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1868, and for other purposes.

NORTON'S CANCELING STAMP—AGAIN.

The SPEAKER. The time allotted to the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I appeal to the gentleman from Michigan to give me a few minutes more.

Mr. FERRY. I will yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The only information I have is in the report of the Senate Committee, which is accessible to every member of the House. I ask whether the compensation for the use of the patent is to be measured by the cheapness of the machine. When the machine is so simple, and to be obtained at so small a price, I ask whether it is not the more valuable?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. But why should the Government pay $100,000 for a patent right when for $1,500 they can get all the use of it that it needs?

Mr. GRISWOLD. The Government has no more right to use this patented article than this patentee has to use any other patented article without paying for it.

Mr. FINCK. I wish to ask whether anybody uses this canceling stamp except the Government of the United States?

Mr. GRISWOLD. It is only available for the purposes of the Government.

Mr. FERRY. How many minutes have I left?

The SPEAKER. Eleven minutes.

Mr. FERRY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. GRINNELL.]

Mr. GRINNELL. This is an acquaintance I made some three years ago in the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. There is no question about its being a valuable invention, but it does not become us to make a calculation based on the foundation of my friend from Michigan. The price we are to pay is not to be established by the time and money saved. We might as well go into a calculation of the time and money saved by the steam-engine, and therefore say it shall all go to the benefit of the inventor. There are subsequent inventions which make the first one better and more useful. This invention, as I have said, is a valuable one; but I believe it is contradicted that another invention has recently come before the country which may entirely supersede it.

Shall we go back and inquire into the particulars of the worthiness of an invention by the dollars and cents saved? We cannot do it. We are to pay tribute to genius, we are to reward inventions so far as we can, but we are not to form any estimate based upon such calculations.

It was proposed three years ago to pay some thirty thousand dollars. That was the recommendation of a friend of the patentee. But the claim has grown to be worth from fifty to one hundred thousand dollars. I maintain that it has no such value to the American people. It becomes us, however, to decide what is fair and reasonable. Let the claim, therefore, go to the Committee of Claims for adjustment.

Mr. FERRY. I yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.]

Mr. CONKLING. I seek the floor for the purpose of making only one remark, and then making an inquiry. I wish to say that I differ entirely as to this case, and all other cases, from those who affirm that the measure of value is what an invention may have saved to the public. That would be an extraordinary rule of damages, I submit, before any tribunal in which justice is administered. I would like to know how much McCormick's reaper would be worth at this day if it were to be prized at the sum which as a labor-saving machine it has saved to the toiling millions of this nation? And the same question might be asked with regard to the sewing-machine, as well as many other useful inventions.

But I rose more especially for another purpose. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] administered the Post Office Department in the days when this machine had its rise and progress. I would like to hear from him something which would reconcile this conflict of judgment as to the amount which Congress ought to pay. I know but little about this, and would like for one to vote for whatever sum is just. I think if the gentleman from Iowa would favor us with his views it would probably tend to enlighten us on the subject, although I am not aware what his views are.

Mr. KASSON. I do not wish to take the floor without the consent of the gentleman in charge of the bill. If he is willing I will make a brief statement without any argument.

Mr. CONKLING. How much time has the gentleman from Michigan left?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes; at the end of which he must demand the previous question or surrender the floor to some other gentleman.

Mr. FERRY. I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KASSON. The application for the adoption of this improvement was made, I believe, during my connection with the Post Office Department. I deemed it a useful invention, a labor-saving invention. The amount recommended, however, by the Senate committee surprised, I may say alarmed me. I regard it as largely in excess of a just claim, and as resting upon figures which a very brief examination will show to be erroneous. From what source those figures came I know not, only I am certain that my friend from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] is not responsible for them.

It is claimed that it saves the labor of two hundred and fifty clerks, and the estimated saving of expense drew from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FARQUHAR] a statement as to the probability of its canceling the national debt. The fact is the entire amount of stamps sold in 1864 was three hundred and thirty-four millions, and in 1866 three hundred and forty-seven million five hundred thousand. This invention, it is claimed, will cancel forty-five letters a minute; it would therefore cancel two thousand seven hundred an hour, or twenty-seven thousand in a day of ten hours, or nine million seven hundred and twenty thousand a year. Fifteen clerks, therefore, would cancel one hundred and forty-five millions, and thirty clerks nearly the entire amount of the stamps that have been sold annually, estimated upon that basis. Making a large allowance as you please, and it would appear that with this instrument in universal use some fifty clerks could easily cancel all the stamps that are placed annually upon the letters dropped in the post offices of the country. So it will appear from this calculation to be absolutely impossible that it saves the labor of two hundred and fifty clerks in this one kind of labor. It is simply an impossibility upon the figures.

Now, when you remember that a stamp is not delivered by the Postmaster General to all the post offices of the country, that all the rural offices are without it, and that in numerous offices the stamp is canceled with a pen, it will appear, of course, that the estimate must be exaggerated. Still, the invention is of essential use in the larger offices of the country, does save the labor of a number of clerks, and I suppose the Postmaster General was nearer correct as to what would be an equitable estimate of the obligation on the part of the United States than the committee of the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. I would inquire of the gentleman whether any sum has ever been fixed by way of stipulation or proposition on behalf of anybody authorized to represent the claimant?

Mr. KASSON. Not during my knowledge of the facts. The party was anxious for the adoption of the invention by the Department, and wished it to be placed on trial. It was put on trial, and I have an impression, not definite enough, however, to justify a prejudice of his claim, that a sum less than that recommended by the Postmaster General would have been accepted at the time it was proposed.

Mr. CONKLING. How much?

Mr. KASSON. I do not wish to venture a statement, because my memory is not definite. If it was I would give it.

Mr. FERRY. I would reply, so far as time is allowed me, to the implication that I have drawn upon my imagination for figures, as would seem to have been indicated by my colleague. I hold in my hand a certified statement signed by the Postmaster in this city, together with his assistants and stamping clerks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's hour has expired.

Mr. ALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will occupy the time of the House but a very few moments. I think I can make this case perfectly clear if the House will give me its attention.

Nearly all the gentlemen who have spoken upon this question have made misstatements. The gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] who administered the Post Office Department with so much credit to himself and advantage to the country, is certainly mistaken in some of his statements. He has stated that not more than thirty or forty clerks would be employed, when we have the authentic statement from the Department, from Postmaster Dennison, that two hundred and fifty clerks were employed something less than a year ago.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman misunderstood me. I stated that upon the basis that is claimed in this report as to the saving of the machine not over fifty clerks would do all the work.

Mr. ALLEY. I am very glad this discussion has arisen, for this is a case of more importance than appears upon its face. I regard it for one as a most monstrous proposition to ask Congress to give to the claimants $125,000, for that is the claim they have made upon Congress. Now, I have received a letter from the claimant, in which he informs me that if I will vote for the bill that has come from the Senate, and so consent to grant him $100,000 for his patent, he will withdraw his suit from the Court of Claims which he now has, in which he lays the damages at $400,000, and feels quite sure, he says, that he shall obtain a judgment from that court in the sum of $200,000. He appeals to me, believing me to be in the interest of the Government, to consent that this bill shall pass the House giving him $100,000 as the easiest, best, and most economical settlement that the Government can make of the claim which he has presented.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Will my colleague allow me to ask whether it is true that only about two hundred and fifty of these machines are used, which cost but six dollars apiece?

Mr. ALLEY. The Government has less than one thousand in use at the present time.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to ask my colleague this question: whether as a matter of business the Post Office Committee took into consideration the suggestion made by my colleague four years ago, that they could have all the machines they wanted for five dollars apiece, amounting to five hundred or a thousand.

Mr. ALLEY. I will come to that if my colleague will allow me to go on and state the facts of the case just as they are, and the House I think will then understand the whole merits of the case. This case was presented to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and we gave it a most thorough investigation. We received from Mr. Dennison, Postmaster General at that time, a communication, in which he advised a settlement upon this basis: that $20,000 should be paid for the patent and all the rights and privileges under it, and in addition thereto the sum of twelve thousand and some odd dollars, which had been expended by these parties in suits at law, as I understood it, encouraged by the Department, in order to test the validity of the claim to the patent. The validity of this claim, I believe, was fully established, and upon that ground the Postmaster General recommended the addition of the $12,000, making the whole sum $32,000 in round numbers.

Now, it seemed to me that that was to the fullest extent all that should be allowed, $32,000. Upon a full and thorough investigation of this case—and no case was ever presented to a committee which received a more thorough investigation than this did—in my judgment that was the largest sum that should be allowed. I fully agreed with the Postmaster General that that was to the fullest extent all the allowance that should be made.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill of the House No. 1227, making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes: had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate, Mr. FESSENDEN, Mr. GRIMES, and Mr. STEWART.

NORTON'S CANCELING STAMPS—AGAIN.

Mr. ALLEY. The Postmaster General did not recommend, as my friend from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] has stated, that there should be paid a royalty in addition. What he did recommend was that if the sum he recommended was not accepted, then a royalty of from one to two dollars for each of these stamps might be paid. The Government was then using something like eight hundred of these stamps, which cost six dollars apiece, and my understanding is that a very large profit is made upon the manufacture of the article at that price. But a royalty of two dollars each, even if a thousand were used by the Government, would be only $2,000. And I was not in favor of any sum exceeding that amount; and it was with reluctance that I consented that the committee should report an appropriation of even the sum of $32,000.

But some of the members of the committee took a view of the case entirely different from the view which I took. Looking at the matter from their stand-point, I think it must be admitted that their view was correct. The members of the committee will remember, however, that in the arguments which I used before the committee I took a ground precisely similar to that taken by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. GRISWOLD,] that the value of the patent had very little to do with estimating the royalty which should be paid for the use of the article; and upon that ground I estimated that the whole amount to be appropriated should not be over $20,000. Some of the committee were in favor of paying $100,000—at least one of them was, my friend from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY,] I do not know how it was with the others.

It was finally agreed, as a matter of compromise, that the sum of $50,000 should be reported, if the parties would be content with that sum, for costs of the suit and everything else. Though I declined to present that report to the House, I did consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] should report the sum of $50,000 under the authority of the committee.

But the parties having virtually refused that sum; having carried their case into the Court of Claims and demanded of the Government the sum of $400,000, and saying that they feel perfectly sure that they will succeed in getting $200,000, for one I feel absolved from any obligation to support their claim in this House for even the $50,000 which the committee reported.

Now, with regard to this matter of a new invention. It has been stated that a new invention has recently been made which will entirely supersede this one. Such appears to be the fact to this extent: the Third Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Beverly, under whose observation these matters more particularly come, wrote me a letter the other day, in which he called my attention to this new invention; and I think he stated that he regarded it as better than this one of Mr. Norton.

As time is precious and gentlemen all around me seem to desire that I should draw my remarks to a close, I will present but one other point. These parties have claimed that unless the Government of the United States pay them for the use of this stamp, they will be under the necessity of refusing to allow the Government to use it. Having carried their claim into the Court of Claims, they intend, as I understand, to let the matter be contested there, and recover whatever sum the court may, in its judgment, award to them. That being the case, I think we have no need to fear that the Government will be deprived of its use. Even if it was, as they allege, such a great saving to the Government—and I have no doubt it is a great saving of expense—I think the Government runs no risk in losing the benefit of such an invention, inasmuch as the other invention can be used in lieu of it; and inasmuch as it is worth not a dollar for any other purpose and no other party can use it.

And this fact, in the view of other members of the committee as well as myself, had and still has considerable weight when taken in connection with the further fact that all the principal Governments of the world except our own, in granting patents, reserve to themselves the use of the patents for Government purposes. If our Government followed the example of Great Britain and other countries these gentlemen could not claim a single dollar for the use of this patent; but such has not been the policy of our Government, and therefore I for one should be willing to award to these claimants every dollar that may be honestly and justly due them.

I now surrender the floor to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY,] who has charge of this bill.

Mr. FERRY. I have no desire to consume unnecessarily the time of the House with the discussion of this case; and I shall in a short time call the previous question. I think the House will acknowledge that I have to a generous extent yielded my time to the opponents of the bill. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FINCK,] one of my colleagues on the committee.

Mr. FINCK. I move to amend the bill by striking out "$100,000" and inserting "$85,000." I think that the proposition to pay so large a sum as $100,000 for the use by the Government of this invention is one which should not receive for one moment the serious consideration of this House. It appears to me that if we pay this gentleman $35,000 we shall deal with him very liberally. I admit that the testimony in the case has disclosed that he has already expended about thirty-two thousand dollars in litigation for the purpose of establishing his right to this patent. I am willing to vote to reimburse to him this amount, and pay him $3,000 additional. This, I think, would be liberal compensation on the part of the Government.

Mr. MAYNARD. Has not this patentee refused to accept less than $100,000? Has he not said that rather than accept less he prefers to prosecute his case in the Court of Claims?

Mr. FINCK. Yes, sir. In a letter addressed to one of my colleagues on the committee this man declined to accept less than $100,000, declaring that if this were not granted to him he would prosecute his claim, and could recover $200,000.

Mr. FERRY. The report which has been read is based upon the affidavits of the postmaster in this city and the postmaster in the city of New York, both of whom state that by this invention the Government has saved one half the number of post-marking clerks formerly necessary. I desire also to state that I went myself, with other members of the committee, to witness the operation of this invention in competition with other stamping apparatus, and we witnessed what is stated in the report. In addition to that I learned from the stamping clerks themselves that by means of this invention two clerks can now perform the same amount of work that formerly required the services of four clerks. I now call the previous question.

Mr. HILL. I move that the bill and pending amendment be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WENTWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed, with a prepared index, for the use of the House, twenty thousand copies of the internal tax laws as they shall stand after incorporating the provisions of the act recently passed, so that, so far as is practicable, the provisions of the different laws upon the same matter shall be printed in connection.

Mr. LAFLIN also reported, from the Committee on Printing, the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House, of the reports of the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury concerning cotton, five thousand extra copies with the accompanying statements.

Mr. LAFLIN also reported, from the Committee on Printing, the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That two thousand copies of the report and accompanying testimony of the committee on the New York custom-house be printed, and five thousand of the report only.

Mr. LAFLIN also reported, from the Committee on Printing, the following resolution:

Resolved, That five thousand extra copies of the bankrupt bill, when approved by the President, be printed in pamphlet form for the use of the House.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to amend by striking out "when" and inserting "if;" so as to read, "if approved by the President."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was adopted.

SOUTHERN RAILROADS.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the same committee, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That the testimony and report of the select Committee to investigate the affairs of Southern Railroads be printed; and the Clerk of the House be, and is hereby, instructed and required to cause the same to be laid before the next House of Representatives for their consideration.

LANMAN'S CONGRESSIONAL DICTIONARY.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the same committee, made an adverse report on the following resolution and moved that it be laid on the table:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of each member of the House the same number of Lanman's Congressional Dictionary as that ordered by the Senate for the use of each of its members.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I hope the sense of the House will be tested on this resolution on the motion to lay it on the table.

Mr. LAFLIN. I do not desire to occupy the time of the House in discussing a proposition of this character, but if I was satisfied the House would not agree with the report of the committee I should wish to discuss this question. If there is any disposition not to have discussion, but to postpone this subject indefinitely, I will make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion to postpone indefinitely is debatable, while the motion to lay on the table is not.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us have the question on laying on the table.

Mr. LAFLIN. Very well, then.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 65, noes 50.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana, and Mr. LAFLIN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 69.

So the resolution was not laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CLARKE] as representing the minority of the committee.

Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio. If the previous question be ordered, I ask the Chair whether I will be entitled to any time?

The SPEAKER. Only those who report a bill or resolution are entitled to discussion after the previous question has been seconded.

Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio. I wish to state then if the resolution is passed each member will be entitled to thirty copies. In my opinion it is a most excellent book. It contains more matter essential for the information of gentlemen here than any other that has been published. I look upon it as a most valuable work for public information, and especially for the use of the members of this House. A former edition was ordered by the House, and I believe two editions by the Senate.

I do not propose to enter into any extended discussion of the subject; I think there is propriety in our purchasing it. I have been laboring in the committee to get the resolution in such a position that the House could act upon it; and having said this much I will surrender the floor to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. LAFLIN. Before I proceed I wish to inquire if the previous question be seconded whether I would be entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reported the resolution adversely, but he would nevertheless be entitled to the floor if the previous question was seconded.

Mr. LAFLIN. I do not wish to occupy the floor but for a single moment. I have endeavored to present this report for the past two or three days. Since I conscientiously believe it contrary to the interests of this Government that this House should adopt a resolution of the character proposed to our committee, I have not felt authorized to make our report without some opportunity for explanation.

Now, sir, before the previous question is called I wish to make to the House two or three statements. In the first place, we have to pay the expense of printing this book. That is the first thing, costing $1 16 for each copy. But it does not stop here. We not only have to pay the expense of printing, but we go into a private copartnership with the proprietor of this work and pay him a dollar for each copy that is printed. I also wish the House to remember that the printing of this book at the present session of Congress insures and guarantees its printing for all future Congresses as long as this copyright exists. It is not simply a question whether we are to pay the compiler of this work so many thousand dollars for the work he has done, not to pay him in one grand sum to-day, but whether he is to be made a pensioner on the bounty of the Government and to receive an annuity for life.

I agree with very much that my respected and very honest colleague on the committee [Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio] has said. Indeed, under certain conditions I would like to see this book printed, but I stand here to say to the House, in somewhat approximating to my ideas of what our committee ought to do in the interest of the Government, that I have been endeavoring to negotiate with the compiler of this work for the possession of his copyright.

While I would not hold myself to that proposition strictly, yet I have said to this gentleman, who is so anxious that the Committee on Printing should "just give the House an opportunity to act in the matter," that I would prefer to entertain a proposition from him for the purchase of the work at an expense of $50,000.

Mr. HILL. I simply desire to ask the gentleman by how many Congresses preceding this one this book has been ordered?

Mr. LAFLIN. The House of Representatives once ordered this book, and so has the Senate; how many copies I do not know. So far as I am concerned it does not make one particle of difference what action has been taken upon this matter; but—

Mr. MILLER. Has not the Senate ordered the book?

Mr. LAFLIN. If the gentleman will only wait till I get through my statement I will be happy to answer his questions; but I decline to be interrupted.

I have already said that the Senate have ordered it. It makes no difference to me whether the House shall order the printing of one copy or of thirty copies for each member; the principle involved is just the same. Now, let members of this House think for a moment what principle ought to govern in the publication of books at the public expense. Plainly we ought to publish in that way only such books as contain information valuable to the public, and which are of such a character that private enterprise will not or cannot afford to publish them. When we depart from this rule we launch ourselves upon "an ocean of extravagance which is both shoreless and starless;" and I would like to know how any man can make an argument in favor of publishing Lanman's Dictionary of Congress, which contains nothing but statistical information, showing where and when certain members of Congress were born, when they entered the Assemblies or Senates of their respective States, when they became members of Congress, what committees they were on, and when they died, which would not be also an argument for publishing McPherson's History of the Rebellion, or Frank Moore's Rebellion Record, or, what would perhaps be of far more value to us all, the New American Cyclopaedia, or, as my friend from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] suggests, Greeley's American Conflict. The moment it gets to be understood that Congress is willing to enter into private copartnerships with authors, just the moment it is discovered that all that is necessary to secure the gratuitous services of the Government as a publisher is to offer a book containing highly complimentary notices and short biographies of members of Congress, we will be flooded with applications without limit.

Now, I have no hostility to this book. I have had no conflict or quarrel with its compiler. But I have been induced to take this position, in conjunction with the gentleman from West Virginia, simply and solely upon the ground I have stated. I think I have made my own position upon this matter sufficiently clear; and now, if any gentleman desires to question me on the subject, I will be happy to answer him.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have heard it intimated by several members that measures of a threatening character have been taken to secure the passage of the resolution in reference to this book. If that is true, I think it ought to appear in this discussion, that we may know the grounds on which we are expected to act. I therefore ask the chairman of the committee or any other gentleman to state the facts in reference to this allegation.

Mr. LAFLIN. I will reply to the gentleman that there is evidence before the committee of the character that he has indicated, and that it is contained in a letter which was addressed to us officially by the compiler of this book. [Cries of "Read!" "Read!"]

Mr. LAFLIN. I will send it to the Clerk, to have that part of it read which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

"It has come to my knowledge that a few members of the House have opposed me on account of the bitter personal hostility of Hon. ROBERT C. SCHENCK, and feeling that your opinion may be influenced in the same manner, I think it my duty to make a brief statement in my behalf. And I am encouraged to do this by the fact that during the late recess of Congress a number of the most prominent Representatives have written to this effect: that they had been prejudiced by Mr. SCHENCK, that they were satisfied I had been badly treated, and that they would hereafter advocate the printing of my book.

"But to the point in question. Eight years ago Mr. SCHENCK caused to be placed in my hands an elaborate and highly complimentary biography of himself for insertion in my Dictionary, which was then newly started. His interest in the matter was so great that he wrote me a letter stating that he regretted his inability to call upon me in person, and begging me to call upon him when next he visited Washington.

"That biography and the honorable member's letters are still in my possession, and, with other very curious particulars, will figure conspicuously in the history of the Dictionary of Congress which I propose to publish. Because I informed Mr. SCHENCK that I could not possibly print his essay he became greatly annoyed; and from that time to this he has done all in his power to injure me.

"With regard to all his curses and unjust slanders I am quite indifferent, excepting one—

Mr. HALE. I rise to a point of order. Unless my friend from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] desires to have this letter read—

Mr. SCHENCK. I do.

Mr. HALE. Then of course I waive my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the point of order that the gentleman was about to raise, and if it is insisted upon he will sustain it.

Mr. HALE. I do not insist upon it.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the letter, as follows:

"That exception is the charge that I was in sympathy with the rebellion. In view of all that I have written and all that I have endured in defending the Union, this charge is simply cruel and infamous to the last degree. I was a defender of President Lincoln for years, and I enjoyed his personal friendship and good will. My warm and true friends in Congress may be counted by the score, and with two or three exceptions they are all Republicans. When Rev. Mr. Bonté was almost literally turned into the streets of Georgetown by the rebels of that place on account of his Union sentiments I was one of the two or three who stood by him to the last, and unsparingly condemned his persecutors; and to-day my rebel enemies in that place are numerous and very bitter, and make themselves happy by sneering at me as an Abolitionist.

"But I must close. If your committee, as I am inclined to believe, have any prejudices against me on account of Mr. SCHENCK's slanders, I only ask that they will give me an opportunity to defend myself with unanswerable proofs.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"CHARLES LANMAN."

Mr. SPALDING. Does that letter contain a threat?

Mr. LAFLIN. I would like to know in what other way the gentleman would interpret Mr. Lanman's announcement that certain documents relating to a member of this House will figure conspicuously in his history of the Dictionary of Congress.

Mr. SPALDING. I can see very well that there is a matter there between Mr. Lanman and my colleague, [Mr. SCHENCK,] but I cannot see that the House is threatened in any way.

Mr. SCHENCK. You have not heard all yet.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that this letter is not relevant to the resolution before the House, and as it may provoke a reply, if any gentleman makes the point of order that it is not relevant, the Chair will sustain the point of order, as he would have done before if it had been raised.

Mr. LAFLIN. I ask unanimous consent for the gentleman from Ohio to make an explanation, if he desires to do so.

Mr. RADFORD. I object.

Mr. LAFLIN. Then I move to suspend the rules in order to allow the gentleman to make an explanation.

Mr. SPALDING. Would it be in order to move to exclude the letter from the Globe?

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules is not debatable.

The question was upon suspending the rules; and (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended.

Mr. LAFLIN. Now I believe I am at liberty to speak of this letter, and I am very glad that I have that liberty.

It had been stated time and again that the gentleman from Ohio had written a letter to Mr. Lanman of the character described in the letter that has just been read; and when this matter was referred to us officially we felt it to be our duty to investigate it, and we called upon Mr. Lanman to appear before our committee. At that meeting of the committee my colleague from Ohio and my colleague from West Virginia were present; and if in any particular I fail to state correctly what transpired there, I beg each or either of them to correct me.

When Mr. Lanman came before the committee he submitted to us a letter from Hon. Mr. SCHENCK, of Ohio, which he alleged authorized him to make the statement which he had made. And now I wish to state to this House just what was the character of that letter. If I remember aright the letter was dated at Dayton, Ohio. I may be mistaken in that; at all events, it was dated at some place other than Washington. In the letter Mr. SCHENCK wrote Mr. Lanman that he had been informed that some one had prepared a biography of him [Mr. SCHENCK] for insertion in his [Lan-man's] Biographical Dictionary; that he wished to take that early opportunity to inform him that he did not desire any publication of the kind to be made until it had first come under his revision; and then stated that when he came to Washington he hoped that he should have an opportunity to see Mr. Lanman. And Mr. SCHENCK went on to state further, not by any means inviting the publication of any notice of himself, that from what he could learn of the proposed biographical notice it was of such a character that he would not like to see it published. And Mr. Lanman himself acknowledged that Mr. SCHENCK's letter afforded no proper foundation for his statement. So much for that letter. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] if he desires to make any statement.

Mr. SCHENCK. I hardly know whether to avail myself of this permission or not. It is by no means pleasant to me to have my name brought in this connection; but perhaps I may as well make a statement here and now as anywhere else or at any other time.

If gentlemen will refer to the Congressional Globe for 1865, they will find that when this same proposition was at that time before the House for the purchase of Lanman's Dictionary, I opposed it in a few remarks which are there fully reported. The result of the debate upon that occasion was that the proposition was most emphatically defeated. The first paragraph of what I said on that occasion, as embodying my general objection, perhaps is worth reading, since I am permitted to read at all. It will be found on page 391 of the Congressional Globe, for the second session of the Thirty-Eighth Congress, and is as follows:

"Mr. Speaker, this is one of those resolutions for book purchasing and book distributing at the expense of the Government which I think ought not to pass. It is proposed to buy, for the use of members of this House and for distribution, a book which, if it has any merit, belongs to that class that ought to be obtained by application at the bookstores in the usual way by those who have occasion for it. I would as soon think of distributing any other Dictionary as a Dictionary of Congress, which, I believe, is simply intended to give a brief biography, not only of every honorable gentleman here now, but of all those who at any time heretofore have served in the legislative councils of the nation. It seems to me that it ought to be enough to defeat a resolution of this kind to refer to the fact that it is a book whose general character is such that members and their constituents ought to supply it to themselves, if they are curious in that kind of literature, without putting the public to the expense of purchasing it for them."

I then went on to criticise the book from a copy which I had before me—I wish I had one now—pointing out a large number of errors in it and objections to it. Among other things I showed that whenever there was occasion to refer to those who were noticeable for their rebel proclivities, as for instance, Jacob Thompson, the rebel member of Buchanan's Cabinet at the commencement of the late war, the notice was of a eulogistic character. But I will not now detain the House by reading that portion of my remarks on that occasion. No reference was made to Mr. Lanman personally, although he chose to so regard it, for the simple reason that I had then never seen the man; nor have I since seen him, or had the slightest personal acquaintance with him—so far as I was concerned not caring whether he was living or dead—until I had an opportunity of meeting him in the room of the Committee on Printing, in that interview to which I was invited, and of which the chairman of that committee [Mr. LAFLIN] has spoken.

Now, what was the consequence of my opposition to this proposition two years ago when it was before the House. This man Lanman wrote letters to me, stating that he understood I would be a candidate for a higher position than that of Representative, (I have the letters here now,) offering his services to assist me, and stating that we could help each other. I took no notice of his letters; and failing in that he took to writing letters of a different character. I took no notice of them. Then there came out in the papers of this city a most violent and scurrilous attack upon me, of which I took no notice. Papers containing the attack were inclosed to members of this House among others to Mr. DRIGGS, of Michigan, who, with other friends, brought them to my notice. I paid no regard to them whatever. Time wore on. Then there came to me from various parts of the country this last year, when I was a candidate for a higher position to represent my State in the other branch of Congress—

Mr. GRINNELL. Do you call that a higher position?

Mr. SCHENCK. Call it higher or lower, as you please; it is a position to which I was not elected. There came to me from various parts of the country copies of a still more virulent attack upon me, published in a copper-head paper in Bridgeport, Connecticut, the authorship of which, or the responsibility for which—I believe Mr. Lanman only admitted the authorship of one paragraph or so of the article—but the responsibility for the whole article Mr. Lanman admitted in this interview with the committee to which reference has been made. In that scurrilous attack was repeated the substance of the article which had been published in Washington two years before; and there was added to it every stale slander about myself, every lie almost that had ever been told in regard to my career. It was accompanied with such articles as one which I hold in my hand, these articles being mailed from New York, Philadelphia, and Cincinnati, and reaching me all about the same time. They contained, for instance, something of this sort, which I read from one of the originals:

"It may gratify Mr. SCHENCK to know that in reply to his speech against Mr. Lanman at least one hundred thousand copies of the inclosed editorial from a Connecticut paper will be circulated throughout the country. Others from the pen of Mr. Lanman himself are also in pickle, and will go more fully into particulars, giving abundant proof of every assertion."

If the House had a taste for garbage, I might have one of these attacks upon me read. They are, however, here on my table, and may be examined by any gentleman who is curious in this sort of literature. The substance of the whole matter is that, for having made a speech against the purchase of this book from some man whom I did not know, I have been assailed and vilified by the fellow ever since. I am not alone in this respect. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BEAMAN] received a letter threatening him for having moved on one occasion to lay on the table a resolution for the purchase of this book. If the gentlemen will let the House have the benefit of that letter, I will yield for the purpose of having it read as a specimen of the manner in which members are held to account for daring to attempt to economize in matters of this sort.

Mr. BEAMAN. Mr. Speaker, it was not my fortune or misfortune, as the case may be, to make any speech against Mr. Lanman or his book. But members of the House will recollect that during the last session of Congress there was introduced here a resolution similar, I suppose, to the one now under consideration, which I have not heard read. At that time I made a motion to lay the resolution on the table. I knew nothing, or at least, very little of Mr. Lanman, and had no acquaintance with him whatever. I made the motion because I deemed this book, if not an entirely useless publication, one not proper to be published by order of this House. A few days after the resolution was laid on the table, I received a letter which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

GEORGETOWN, D. C., June 4, 1866.

SIR: Some time ago, when, without my knowledge, Hon. Mr. HART offered a resolution for printing the new edition of my Dictionary of Congress, you were the member who stepped forth to prevent even the reception of said resolution. That blow from you was unexpected, and I write this simply to say that your unkind treatment of me is appreciated. The time may come when you will regret this petty investment of your temporary power. Your right to dislike me as a man, and to vote against my Dictionary, I do not question; but I did not expect that I should find a personal enemy in the person of a Representative from my native State; a man, moreover, for whom I have always entertained the kindest feelings, and one whom I had supposed to be ever actuated by the ordinary teachings of Christianity. You have not treated me as you would have wished to be treated under similar circumstances.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES LANMAN.

Hon. F. C. BEAMAN, &c.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I could talk for an hour on this subject, stating, if it were proper or desirable, many very curious matters in connection with it. I have here a great many letters which I took the precaution to preserve after I found the course which this man was pursuing. I had forgotten that I had ever written a letter to Mr. Lanman; but it seems that being eight or nine years ago in New York, where my business called me in company with another member of Congress, I received from Mr. Lanman a circular proposing to publish my biography. I suppose there is no gentleman here who has not received many such circulars.

Mr. HILL. I would inquire of the gentleman whether the biography was to be written, like certain biographies mentioned by Lord Byron, on either side, as might be desired?

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not know about that. I learned he had in his possession something of that sort. I knew from what source it had come. I knew a friend of mine had been present when I received a circular of that kind the year preceding, and had afterward returned to me—he I think himself had received a letter, Lanman knowing his intimacy with me—asked some data about my birth, marriage, &c., and I gave them to him. When Lanman sent his circular to me again, finding he had received a biography, and apprehensive that the same had been furnished by this too partial friend of mine, which I would not care to see spread out in the form of an eulogistic notice, the form it would take, I wrote to Lanman if in possession of anything of that kind I trusted he would not publish it until I had an opportunity of seeing it, because as I knew a partial friend might make an eulogistic notice, I should prefer as a matter of good taste not to see it in print. This was about the amount of my communication to him, except the addition that he might call and see me at Washington, where I expected to be after a few days from that time.

The biography, sir, I have never seen. Whether it is a good one or not I cannot tell. I trust it is if it shall ever see the light. Upon this he put into these publications that I was slandering him all over the country and attacking him personally, because I had furnished him with a long eulogistic notice of myself and was angry at him because he would not publish it without abridgment, which I demanded he should do. It was directly the reverse; and as my colleague [Mr. CLARKE] on that committee as well as the chairman of the committee, who has just spoken, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LATHAM] will remember, when he came to produce it the only letter he had, and the writing of which I had forgotten myself, I admit, so far from sustaining it, contradicted the charge he had made in every particular.

Now, then, why do I refer to this? Simply for the purpose of explaining why it is this man undertakes to make capital for himself on the ground of persecution, when the fact is he has been attempting to bully and follow with scurrilous abuse any one who, upon principles of public economy, chose to object to this publication of his dictionary? Whether he abuses me or not is of no consequence to this House or to the country; whether anything he has said is true of me or any one else is of no consequence to me or to the country; but this whole matter only tends to show how he is attempting to operate upon and enlist the sympathies of others. And, sir, I am glad this opportunity has been given in order once for all that this matter may be made fully apparent to the public.

I will not dwell upon this; but I repeat again my opposition to this book is on just the ground

I placed it a year ago. We might as well buy Bancroft's history—better, perhaps; that we might as well buy any other dictionary than one in this shape; and I went on to criticise the dictionary, giving the instances of men spoken of as in Congress who were long since dead, and of a member spoken of as dead who was still in Congress. I showed a great many other errors connected with this dictionary. I stated some sixty-odd mistakes made of the same kind, the memoranda of which I held in my hand, having examined the dictionary with this view. He has availed himself of this criticism since then, I understand, to correct these mistakes, although I have not seen the last edition of his dictionary. I stated he had always slighted my colleague, Mr. Giddings, while, as I remarked before, he had spoken in an eulogistic manner of those who were upon the other side in this rebellion.

There was but one instance which by any possibility might be distorted into a charge that he was himself a rebel or a sympathizer with rebels, and that is what I said about Jacob Thompson. And here I have his letter in which he says after I had made that remark his attention was called to it, and he was disgusted to find what he had published eulogistic of Mr. Thompson, and could only account for it by the fact that he had written that biography some seven or eight years ago when he was a clerk under Mr. Thompson in the Department of the Interior.

Now, it is not perhaps in the best taste to allude to any notice of myself in this dictionary, particularly as my biography has, very much against my will, come to be a subject of consideration here. But there is a very curious expression in the little notice he has made of me. I am represented, not according to the fact, as any one of my military friends will remember, for my promotion came afterwards as having been appointed a brigadier general and a major general of the United States in the "troubles of 1861." He calls the rebellion "the troubles of 1861." I believe there is nothing like that except in the Nasby letter, in which the author speaks of "a little unpleasantness occurring between the two extremes of the nation." [Laughter.] I refer to that to show the animus of the book, and to show what a bearing it would look as if it had in that way, whether intended or not. Whether he is or has been a sympathizer with the rebellion, or whether he is or has been an extremely loyal man, or has been on both sides of the question, according as he met his customers, it is not possible for me to say, for I do not know anything about it. I can only judge of him and his work from the book itself.

Mr. Speaker, this matter of book-making under the auspices of Congress is continually growing to be a greater and greater abuse. Of late it has been in some degree checked. Here, however, is a flagrant instance of an attempt to open it with one I think of the worst of all the jobs ever attempted. For the purpose of having our vanity tickled by seeing our names in print we are expected to enter upon a career of publishing, which, while it costs the Government I do not know how much, will put into Lanman's pocket, or into the pocket of the owner of the copyright, some five thousand seven hundred dollars a year. That is the calculation handed to me this moment by some gentleman; and it may be copyrighted from year to year for every amendment in a new edition.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. How many copies does Congress take?

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not know. Once the House was inveigled into purchasing four for each member.

Mr. ROLLINS. Seven.

Mr. SCHENCK. But in the two succeeding sessions the House laid its hand upon the matter and prevented that piece of extravagance. I take credit to myself on one occasion for being instrumental in doing it, and I think my friend, the chairman of the committee, has the credit of doing the same thing.

I hope when gentlemen come to vote upon the question by yeas and nays they will bear in mind how large the expense is, and will act accordingly.

Mr. BROMWELL. I suggest that some of us may find a use for this book for electioneering purposes.

Mr. SCHENCK. That may or may not be important. Sometimes the less that is known about a man the better for him. [Laughter.]

I believe I have complied with the desire of my friend from New York in making an explanation. I would not have done it except that I was so pointedly referred to, and my history so wrought up with the progress of legislation upon this subject that I could not very well afford to sit silent and not answer the appeal made to me. I return to my friend the floor.

Mr. LAFLIN. Unless there is some one who desires to be heard I will close the discussion with a brief statement, which I think will satisfy gentlemen that I am not making an improper proposition.

Several MEMBERS. Vote, vote!

Mr. LAFLIN. As there seems to be a disposition to come to a vote, I move the previous question.

Mr. HALE. I believe it is now in order to move to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. After the previous question is seconded, the motion will be in order.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HALE. I now move to lay it on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was laid on the table; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the House adjourn. We have nothing but dictionaries and patent cases before us, and we might as well adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That would terminate the session of Congress.

Mr. WINDOM. I change it to a motion for a recess till ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask the Chair to inform the House when, with safety as regards pending bills, the House can take a recess till to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the committees of conference are in session on the appropriation bill. The Chair heard from them a few moments ago. They sent word saying that the Senate would remain in session longer than the House in consequence of executive business. It is usual for the committee to report to the Senate first. After the action of the Senate is taken, the House can then very probably take a recess until nine or ten o'clock to-morrow. The Chair understands that the committee will probably be through within half an hour.

Mr. WINDOM. I withdraw the motion if there is anything to do.

The SPEAKER. The House will proceed to business on the Speaker's table, all other business being excluded by order of the House, except privileged reports and questions of privilege:

COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I submit the following privileged report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, on the joint resolution of the House, No. 226, extending the provisions of section two of the act entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," approved July 14, 1864, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses, as follows, namely:

That the House agree to the first amendment of the Senate, with an amendment, which is to strike out the words of the said amendment and insert in lieu thereof these words: "and whose authority shall be proven to the satisfaction of the accounting officer," and that the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its second amendment.

ROBERT C. SCHENCK,
RALPH HILL,
A. J. KUYKENDALL,
Managers on the part of the House.
S. C. POMEROY,
IRA HARRIS,
LYMAN TRUMBULL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH R. MORRIS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 66) for the relief of Joseph R. Morris; which was read a first and second time.

The preamble recites that it appears from the records of the Patent Office that Joseph R. Morris, of Houston, Texas, on the 13th of April, 1861, filed his petition, affidavit, specification, and drawing, and made application for a patent for "a new and useful improvement in furnaces," and paid the customary fee on such application; that on the 15th of April he deposited his model of the improvement according to law in the Patent Office; that on the 8th of June thereafter the invention was examined by the examiner, and a patent duly ordered to be issued; that on the 11th of June thereafter a circular was issued by the Patent Office to the effect that the patent was ordered to be issued in accordance with the application upon the payment of the final fee of twenty dollars; and that it appears that he was prevented from obtaining his patent by the state of civil war which interdicted all communication between the State of Texas and the Patent Office at the city of Washington. The joint resolution, therefore, authorizes the Commissioner of Patents to issue the patent to Joseph R. Morris as of the date and with like effect as though it had been issued on the 8th of June, 1861, except that the patent may be issued to run the usual number of years from the usual time of its issuance, any law to the contrary notwithstanding; provided, that if, at or prior to the day when the patent shall actually be issued, any person or persons shall be actually issuing the improvement in furnaces, such person or persons shall not be made liable in damages for such prior use, or for the continuing use of such as have already been constructed.

Mr. JENCKES. That joint resolution explains itself, and needs no explanation from me.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Is there any evidence that this man himself did not contribute to the state of things which prevented him from obtaining his patent?

Mr. JENCKES. He produced evidence of his loyalty, which satisfied the committees of both Houses of Congress.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Was there any evidence that no one else had obtained a patent for the same thing?

Mr. JENCKES. Certainly there was. The Patent Office could not grant the patent if there was anything against the novelty of the invention. It has been thoroughly examined, and the claim has been found to be just and proper.

The bill was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JENCKES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATIONS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 178, in relation to national banking associations; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I ask that this joint resolution may be put upon its passage now.

The joint resolution was read. It provides that in all cases where a national bank has paid, or may pay, in excess of what may be or has been found due from the bank on account of the duty required to be paid to the Treasurer of the United States, the bank so having paid or paying such excess of duty may state an account therefor, which, on being certified by the Treasurer of the United States and found correct by the First Comptroller of the Treasury, shall be refunded in the ordinary manner by warrant on the Treasury.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I can state in a very few words the object of this joint resolution.

Several MEMBERS. It is all right.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Then I will not take up the time of the House by making any statement.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire merely to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] whether any law has been passed in relation to taxing the stock of national banks? As the law has been they have been taxed where located.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. This joint resolution has nothing to do with that subject.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the gentleman accept an amendment to change that?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. That would kill the joint resolution.

Mr. BAXTER. I must object to any amendment.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. A tax was illegally demanded of the national banks. Some of them paid the tax, others protested against it and refused to pay it. The case was tried, and it was decided by the courts that the tax had been illegally demanded. This joint resolution is merely to allow the Treasury Department to pay back to the banks the tax which they paid when the demand was made, and place them in the same position with the others that refused to pay the tax.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is there any law now under which, in circumstances like those suggested by this joint resolution, these banks can get refunded to them the money they have paid?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. There is not. I was requested last year by the Treasurer of the United States to introduce a similar provision into the bank bill. I did so, and it stands there in the precise words in which the Treasurer gave it to me, and in a form which the House adopted upon my explanation.

The joint resolution was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House No. 865, granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from the city of Stockton to the town of Copperopolis, in the State of California.

The message further announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House to the joint resolution of the Senate No. 173, to facilitate the settlement of accounts of disbursing officers.

JOSHUA H. BUTTERWORTH.

The House resumed the consideration of business upon the Speaker's table, the next business being Senate bill No. 620, for the relief of Joshua H. Butterworth; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CHANLER. I am instructed by the Committee on Patents to ask that this bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was read at length. It authorizes the Commissioner of Patents to proceed upon, determine, and decide the application of Joshua H. Butterworth, for an extension of his patent for an improvement in safe and bank locks, the same as though the patent had not been extended once already; and the Commissioner is to examine the application and decide upon it on the same evidence and in the same manner as in other cases where extensions of patents are applied for, and without regard to the time when the application is made.

Mr. PRICE. I would like to put a question to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHANLER,] who seems to have charge of this bill.

Mr. CHANLER. I will yield for a question.

Mr. PRICE. I wish to ask whether this is not the second extension of this patent.

Mr. CHANLER. It is.

Mr. PRICE. I thought so. That is enough.

Mr. CHANLER. The facts of this case are stated in the report made by the Senate committee. By the reading of that report gentlemen will see that this is a very meritorious case. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Patents and the Patent Office having duly considered the petition of Joshua H. Butterworth, praying an extension of his patent for bank and safe locks, beg leave to report:

That letters-patent for the improvement aforesaid were issued on 11th April, 1846, and that an extension thereof was granted from the 11th April, 1860, to the 11th April, 1867. They further report that there is satisfactory evidence that from the time of the issuing of the original letters-patent the patentee has used reasonable diligence to introduce his improvement into public use, but that from infringements upon the improvement, and other circumstances beyond his control, the true value of the improvement has but recently become appreciated by the public, and consequently he has failed to receive any adequate remuneration. Indeed, it appears that the expenditures of the petitioner has exceeded his receipts.

It also appears that the improvement is novel and is now regarded as useful.

The committee, therefore, considering that the improvement is novel in its character, is a useful invention, and that the petitioner, without fault or laches on his part, has failed to receive any remuneration for his invention, think that he is entitled to the relief he asks; and they report a bill accordingly.

Mr. CHANLER. The facts as stated in this report have been confirmed by the investigation of the House committee, and I am authorized to present the bill to the consideration of the House.

This patent is for a lock which is now used in the Treasury Department of the United States as being the best lock yet invented for the protection of bank safes, &c. But as the banking community are naturally slow in yielding their confidence to anything of this kind, the patentee has been unable thus far to remunerate himself for the great expense to which he has been subjected in bringing his invention into use. The lock is composed of a system of plates and wheels in combination, which are capable of adjustment in such a way by the owner of the safe that none but himself can open it. The lock has no key. The merits of this lock are known to many gentlemen on this floor. My colleague, [Mr. DODGE,] well known as a banker in the city of New York, has personal knowledge of the merits of this invention, and can give the House any further information which may be desired. I now yield to him.

Mr. DODGE. Mr. Speaker, I will simply say that having known the inventor of this lock for the past twenty years, I know that he has been and still is a poor struggling man, who after the labor of years is just succeeding in bringing his invention into remunerative use. I believe that this bill is perfectly just, and ought to be passed.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman from New York to say that this lock is used in the Treasury Department and is considered very safe. I want to advise the gentleman to recall that remark, for if he does not do so he cannot succeed in getting this bill through the House.

Mr. CHANLER. I should be glad to do anything to accommodate the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOTFIELD,] who seems to be the special guardian of the Treasury.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I only suggest to the gentleman that, in view of the prodigal spirit manifested by the appropriations made here, this House will never indorse anything that is calculated to keep money in the Treasury. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANLER. I spoke only of the mechanism of the lock. I do not profess to be conversant with Treasury matters.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I hope the gentleman will not call the previous question.

Mr. CHANLER. I am solicited by gentlemen all about me to call the previous question.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I desire to debate the bill.

Mr. CHANLER. Members are desirous and anxious to reach other matters on the Speaker's table. I therefore demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHANLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BOSTON POST OFFICE, ETC.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 176, relative to the post office and sub-Treasury at the city of Boston; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ALLEY. I move that the joint resolution be put upon its passage.

The joint resolution provides that the mayor and postmaster of the city of Boston, the Assistant Treasurer of the United States at the city of Boston, the president of the Board of Trade of the city of Boston, Alpheus Hardy, Daniel Davis, and John A. Andrew, of said city, be appointed a commission to select a proper site for a building for a post office, and for the accommodation of the sub-Treasury in the city of Boston; and that they report to the Postmaster General and the Secretary of the Treasury at their earliest convenience the selection upon which they, or a majority of them, may agree, and the price at which said site can be purchased by the Government for the service contemplated in this resolution. If a new site be selected, and if said report meets the approval of the Postmaster General and the Secretary of the Treasury, they shall communicate the same, with such additional suggestions as they may think proper, to Congress.

Mr. ALLEY. Unless some member desires to put a question on the subject I move that the resolution be put upon its passage.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question. That resolution provides for the selection of a site for a post office and sub-Treasury at Boston. I believe a week ago we passed a similar resolution in regard to the city of New York. They have, I understand, construed the law we passed in reference to that city as authorizing this commission to go on and purchase the post office site, and they are now examining plans and employing architects and other persons for the purpose of carrying on the work.

Mr. ALLEY. The gentleman is entirely mistaken in regard to the object of this resolution.

Mr. ROSS. What is to be the expense?

Mr. ALLEY. There is no expense about it.

Mr. BERGEN. I simply wish to inquire, since the House refused a few days ago to make an appropriation for a post office for the city of Brooklyn with twice as many inhabitants as Boston, why should we pass this joint resolution for Boston?

Mr. ALLEY. Probably if it were the same thing as that for Brooklyn I would not ask it to be passed. This contains no appropriation, but simply makes provision for the necessary preliminary inquiry. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. ALLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OCEAN MAIL TO THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 603, to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. McRUER. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads recommends the passage of the bill with an amendment.

The bill provides:

That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized to invite proposals, by public advertisement, for the period of sixty days, in one or more newspapers published in the cities of Washington, New York, Boston, and San Francisco, respectively, for mail steamship service between the port of San Francisco, in the United States, and the port of Honolulu, in the Hawaiian Islands, by means of a monthly line of first-class American sea-going steamships, to be of not less than one thousand tons, Government measurement, each, and of sufficient number to perform twelve round trips per annum between said ports; and to contract with the lowest responsible bidder for said service for a term of not more than ten years, to begin from the day the first steamship of the said line shall depart from the port of San Francisco with the mails for the Hawaiian Islands: Provided, No bid shall be considered which shall amount to more than one hundred thousand dollars for the twelve round trips per annum, nor unless the same be from a citizen or citizens of the United States, and accompanied by an offer of good and sufficient sureties (also citizens of the United States) for the faithful performance of such contract: And provided further, That before the acceptance of the said steamships by the Postmaster General for the said service, they shall be subject to inspection and survey by an experienced naval constructor, to be detailed for that purpose by the Secretary of the Navy, whose report shall be made to the Postmaster General.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That any contract which the Postmaster General may execute under the authority of this act shall go into effect on or before the 1st day of January, 1868, and shall, in addition to the usual stipulations of ocean mail steamship contracts, provide that the Government of the United States shall be entitled to have transported, free of expense, on each and every steamer, a mail agent to take charge of and arrange the mail matter, to whom suitable accommodations for that purpose shall be assigned; that, in case of failure, from any cause, to perform any of the monthly voyages stipulated for in this contract, a pro rata deduction may be made from the compensation on account of such omitted voyage or voyages; that suitable fines and penalties may be imposed for delays and irregularities in the performance of the service; and that the Postmaster General shall have the power, at any time, to determine the contract in case of its being underlet or assigned to any other party.

Mr. McRUER. The amendment I propose is to strike out $100,000 and insert $75,000 where the same occurs, so that it will read, "But no bid shall be considered which shall amount to more than seventy-five thousand dollars."

Mr. SCOFIELD. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. McRUER. I do not.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Here is a contract for $750,000.

Mr. McRUER. The Thirty-Eighth Congress granted a subsidy of $300,000 to establish a mail line between the port of San Francisco and some part of China, touching at Honolulu, in the Sandwich Islands. Communication with those islands was a very desirable feature of that bill, because we have very important interests there. Those islands have been developed by American commerce, and a large portion of the foreign population of the islands is American. That line has just been put in operation under favorable auspices. But Congress during the present session saw fit to release that company from its obligation to touch at the Sandwich Islands upon the consideration that it should establish an independent line between a port in Japan and the port of Shanghai, in China, and for the reason that it would enable it to make more rapid passages, and thus bring to a certain extent the commerce of Europe to our shores by the way of San Francisco.

Now, since the company has been released from that obligation this bill has been introduced into this House, having first passed the Senate, granting a subsidy of $100,000 to establish an independent line. We ask that $75,000 instead of $100,000 shall be granted. If there is any branch of American industry that requires support from the Government at this time it is our commerce, which has been to a great extent swept from the seas during the rebellion. This bill is important in a commercial view; it will increase our trade with these islands. The whaling interest demands this connection with them. That is one of the most important interests in this country.

And this bill is important politically. Before many years the Sandwich Islands will doubtless yield to the advancing tide of civilization, change its form of government, and probably become a republic. In short, this connection is demanded by every interest of this country. I move the previous question on the bill and amendment.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McRUER. I will yield five minutes.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I do not want five minutes. I do not wish to lay any obstacle in the way of the passage of this bill if it ought to pass. But I wish to call attention to the fact that the bill proposes a contract for ten years at $100,000 per annum as it now stands, or $75,000 if the amendment shall be adopted. Now, we had a contract with a line of steamers running west from San Francisco and stopping at the Sandwich Islands, but during this session it was proposed to release that line and the proposition was carried. So we permitted the line to pass those islands and go straight to China and back. Now comes in a proposition to pay $1,000,000, or if the amendment is adopted $750,000 additional, for communication with Honolulu.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman has a very exaggerated way of stating it when he says it is $750,000. It is $75,000 a year for ten years. It is not paying out at once $750,000 for this very important aid to American commerce, but we extend it over a decade.

Mr. SCOFIELD. The gentleman is only repeating in my own language what I have said, only in not so pleasant a way. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. Ah!

Mr. ALLEY. A single word in behalf of the committee. This bill was not reported from the House committee; it came from the Senate. It was fully considered, however, by the House committee, and we agreed to report a bill fixing the subsidy at $75,000. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company took a contract to run a line of steamers from San Francisco via the Sandwich Islands to China. They were released from the performance of that portion of the contract this winter against the judgment of our committee.

I believe it was put in an appropriation bill. It was all wrong, in my opinion. It may have been done in consideration of additional service to be rendered by the company. I know nothing, however, about that. At all events this communication should not be stopped, and $100,000 is probably as low an amount as the service could be obtained for. But, in the opinion of parties who know most about it, there are those who are so much interested in the political and commercial relations of our own country with the Sandwich Islands that the subsidy may be reduced $25,000, and hence our committee were unanimous, I believe, in recommending $75,000 instead of $100,000. To this amendment I think there can be no objection.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered;

Mr. HILL moved to lay the bill and pending amendment on the table.

The motion was disagreed to—ayes 46, noes 61.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I wish to inquire whether this Government did not have a contract with another steamship company for this same service, to take Honolulu in its route, from which we have released that company, and if we are not now proposing to give this company $75,000 per annum to perform the same service.

Mr. McRUER. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HILL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 63, nays 49, not voting 79; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, James M. Ashley, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Dodge, Eliot, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Kelley, Ladin, Lynch, Marquette, Marston, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McIndoe, McRuer, Miller, Morrill, Newell, Paine, Pomeroy, Price, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Schenck, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—63.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Baker, Boyer, Broomall, Buckland, Cooper, Cullom, Dawson, Defrees, Eckley, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Finck, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hayes, Hill, Hise, Hogan, James R. Hubbard, Julian, Kerr, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Mercur, Moorhead, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Perham, Pike, Ritter, Ross, Sawyer, Scofield, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Stevens, Stokes, Taber, Thayer, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, and Wentworth—49.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Benjamin, Blow, Brandegee, Bromwell, Bundy, Campbell, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Culver, Delano, Deming, Denison, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eggleston, Farguhar, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hart, Henderson, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Hubbard, Humphrey, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Latham, Lettwich, Loan, Longyear, Marshall, McCullough, McKee, Morris, Moulton, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Phelps, Plants, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Rogers, Rousseau, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Stilwell, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trowbridge, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Winfield, and Wright—79.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. McRUER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1184) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868;

An act (H. R. No. 761) to amend existing laws relative to internal revenue, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 303) to enable the Secretary of War to carry out an agreement in relation to water-power for the arsenal at Rock Island.

RECESS ORDERED.

Mr. THAYER. I rise to a privileged motion. I move that when the House take another recess it be till to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. KELLEY. Say nine o'clock.

Mr. HIGBY. I would inquire of the Speaker whether, in his opinion, two hours, from ten to twelve o'clock to-morrow morning, will be sufficient to finish the business of this Congress?

The SPEAKER. If the appropriation bills should be out of the way, two hours would be sufficient. The Chair cannot tell what the action of the Senate on the conference report on the deficiency bill will be. The conference committees have agreed and their report is now before the Senate.

Mr. HIGBY. I move to amend by making it nine instead of ten o'clock.

Mr. THAYER. I accept the amendment.

The motion, as modified, was agreed to.

LAND DISTRICTS IN TERRITORIES.

Mr. JULIAN. I desire to make a motion in relation to the action of the House upon the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 746, for the organization of land districts in the territories of Arizona, Idaho, Utah, and Montana. The Senate have disagreed to the report of the committee of conference upon that subject. The amendment of the Senate is to strike the territory of Utah from the bill as it passed the House. When it came back here I moved a non-concurrence in the amendment of the Senate, and the appointment of a committee of conference. The motion was agreed to, and the committee of conference was appointed, which committee restored Utah to its place in the bill. The Senate have refused to agree to the report of the committee of conference. I am satisfied that Utah, in common with the other Territories, ought to have the benefit of the machinery of the land office. But I am not willing that Montana should be made to suffer by the refusal of the Senate to include Utah in the provisions of the bill.

I therefore move that the committee of conference be discharged, and that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JULIAN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRENCH EXPOSITION.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 164, supplementary to other joint resolutions to enable the people of the United States to participate in the advantages of the Universal Exposition at Paris in 1867; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BANKS. I ask that the House proceed to act on this joint resolution.

The joint resolution was read at length. It is provided by the first resolution:

1. That the commission of the United States at the Universal Exhibition, to be held at Paris in the year 1867, shall consist of the commissioner general and honorary commissioner, whose appointment was approved by the joint resolution of January 22, 1866; also of the thirty commissioners, whose appointment was provided for by the joint resolution of July 5, 1866, and of twenty commissioners whose appointment is hereinafter provided for.

2. That the commissioner general shall be the president of the commission thus constituted, with a vote on all questions that may arise.

3. That the commission shall meet at Paris as early as possible before the opening of the Exhibition, upon the call of the commissioner general, and, when properly organized, shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for efficient action, with power to elect a vice president from their own number, who, in the absence of the commissioner general, shall preside at all meetings of the commission, and to appoint committees and chairmen of groups.

4. That the commission may designate additional persons, not exceeding twenty in number, being citizens of the United States, known to be skilled in any branch of industry or art, who are hereby authorized to attend the Exhibition in behalf of the United States, as honorary commissioners.

5. That the commission may employ a secretary and clerks for the commission, the necessary scientific assistants and draftsmen, and may engage suitable rooms for the commission.

6. That no commissioner shall act as agent for the show or sale of any article at the Exhibition, or be interested, directly or indirectly, in any profits from any such article.

The second resolution provides that there shall be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as follows:

For additional freights from New York to Havre, $15,000.

For transportation and freight from Havre to Paris, $10,000.

For return freight of articles owned by the United States or lent to the Government by individuals, $10,000.

For marine and fire insurance on the articles thus lent, $3,000.

For additional steam-power at Paris, in the "palace" and the "annex," or supplemental building, and in grounds adjacent, $10,000.

For the exhibition of machines, agricultural and other, and for the erection of buildings to illustrate the education and agriculture of the United States, $15,000.

For the necessary expense of collecting, classifying, labeling, and packing mineralogical and metallurgical specimens, to complete the exhibition of the mineral wealth of the United States, $5,000.

For the necessary expense of laborers and extra service in the offices at Paris and New York, $5,000.

For the expenses of a secretary, clerks, scientific assistants, and draftsmen, rooms, and other incidental expenses of the commission, $20,000.

The third resolution provides that it shall be the duty of the general agent at New York, and of the commissioner general at Paris, to transmit to Congress, through the Department of State, a detailed statement of the manner in which the expenditures herein authorized are made by them respectively.

Mr. BANKS. It is not my purpose to press this resolution against the judgment of the House.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. As this joint resolution contains an appropriation, I make the point of order that it must be first considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BANKS. I feel it is my duty to ask the action of the House on this joint resolution. I will, therefore, move a suspension of the rules, in order that it may be considered in the House at this time. Before the vote is taken, I ask the privilege of making a few remarks.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I object to any debate on the motion to suspend the rules, which is an undebatable motion.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I would like to know the total amount of the appropriations contained in this bill, and also the aggregate sum which we have appropriated heretofore for this Exhibition.

Mr. BANKS. I move to suspend the rules; and pending that motion I shall be glad, if there be no objection, to make a statement of facts. I shall not occupy more than three or five minutes.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I shall not object if there be allowed an opportunity to reply.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection five minutes will be allowed to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] and afterward five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOTFIELD.]

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to press the passage of this resolution in opposition to the general judgment of the House. I feel it my duty to ask a vote on it; and in order to avoid its being sent to the Committee of the Whole, where it would not be reached, I have moved a suspension of the rules.

Mr. Speaker, at an earlier period of this session the sum of $156,000 in paper was appropriated for this object. The appropriations embraced in the bill just read amount to $93,000; so that if this bill should be passed the aggregate appropriation for this purpose will be $249,000. The necessity for this additional appropriation arises from the fact that the provision adopted by the House for the transportation of the industrial products of the country in public vessels was disagreed to by the Senate, under the representations of the Navy Department. All freight, therefore, has to be paid in money. Another reason is that the contributions for the Exhibition from different parts of the country have been much larger than they were expected to be. A still further reason for this additional appropriation is the fact that there has been so much delay in consummating the passage of this measure that it is now necessary to use steamers instead of sailing-vessels for the purpose of transportation. Two sailing-vessels have been freighted and sent abroad with our products. A steamer is now loading at New York for the same purpose. A large portion of the freights are at Havre and New York. The western portion of the country has thus far been least represented. The agent of the State of New York, who is very earnest for the passage of this resolution, stated to me when he was here a few days since that the representation of western life—of the educational establishments, the cereal and agricultural products of the West and Southwest, contributed by Wisconsin, Minnesota, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Arkansas, and Alabama, must, unless a further appropriation to pay for freights be made, remain either at New York, to which place they have been shipped without charge, through the liberality of the railways and express companies, or else at Havre. About twenty-five thousand of the $93,000 proposed to be appropriated in this resolution will be expended for freights, the other portion going for other charges.

I do not like to ask the House, after what has transpired here, to vote this additional sum of money; and I think it quite possible that a smaller sum would answer the purpose and secure a proper representation of the industrial interests of this country. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO,] upon whose motion a limitation was put in the resolution passed by the House some time since, expressed his willingness to suggest to the House a reduction of this appropriation from $93,000 to $50,000. If he were in his place now he would propose this reduction. I have only to say, Mr. Speaker, that the western portion of the country is especially interested in this additional appropriation. Great exertions have been made in collecting the industrial products of the West—mineral, agricultural, and mechanical—and they are now either at New York or Havre. Other sections of the country are also interested. A short time since every member of the Pennsylvania delegation in this House signed a paper in encouragement of the collection of representations of the mineral wealth of that State; and a most complete and perfect collection has been obtained. Machinery from New England waits for this money. I suggest a reduction from $93,000 to $50,000; but I will not press the passage of the resolution against the general wish of the House.

Mr. MAYNARD. Before the gentleman takes his seat I would be glad if he would give us some general idea of the extent to which the industry and resources of the country are likely to be exhibited at the coming Paris Exposition.

Mr. BANKS. If the House will allow me I will send an extract of a letter, written by one of the commissioners, to be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"The efficiency of western exhibitors has been vitally important in saving the nation from failure. As it is, we shall have a splendid triumph, and we shall owe it almost exclusively to the West and its wonderful products. It does seem passing strange that it can be necessary to urge western men to support a measure so peculiarly calculated to promote their immediate interests so immensely, and to permanently exalt the character of their portion of the American Union in the eyes of the civilized world."

"Then, too, the enormous gain to this western continent by emigration. Who gets it but the West? While upon the Atlantic sea-board are burdened with all of the most worthless of the emigrants, who stop in our cities and fill our jails and poor-houses, the young and vigorous and thrifty all go to the western prairies to load them with golden harvests. The West, the great intelligent West, will not thank any of her members for yielding for a moment to any ill-timed feeling of parsimony. The people know more than the politicians, and see further and deeper, and they know too much to begrudge the seed which will yield so rich a harvest. Such narrow-mindedness better becomes the atmosphere of Spain or priest-ridden Italy than the living, growing, expanding West."

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I would inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts whether there was not referred to his committee, or to the Committee on Commerce, a joint resolution or memorial of the State of Wisconsin on this very subject?

Mr. BANKS. Resolutions have been referred to the committee from the Legislature of Wisconsin, and also I am informed from the State of Minnesota. These and many other resolutions have been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, asking for the passage of this resolution.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I am aware, sir, that for the past few weeks I have made myself offensive to some members and other persons interested in the passage of certain bills making large appropriations by raising objections and calling the attention of the House to them. I wish to say to the House now, I have done that not expecting and not desiring to obstruct the passage of the appropriations, but to call the attention of the House to them, hoping others might know more about them than I did.

All I have to say about this now is that I believe it is only the first installment, large as it is, a quarter of a million, for which we are taxing the farmers in the name of the farmers for the benefit, I was going to say, of the farmers; I do not mean to apply it in any offensive sense to the gentlemen who are taking charge of this matter of the Exposition, still I believe the advantage and honor of the farming interest are far less considered than they would persuade us. Here is one quarter of a million, and another quarter of a million will have to be paid before we are through with it. I think we might as well stop here. I recollect when the gentleman from Massachusetts applied for an appropriation, which I will say was an extraordinary appropriation, which everybody thought was large and everybody said ought not to be made, but which he finally carried through by his eloquent speech on the occasion, one installment came and now another, and in the next Congress I apprehend, we will have two or three more before we will get clear of it.

Mr. MILLER. How much already has been appropriated for this purpose?

Mr. BANKS. One hundred and fifty-six thousand dollars.

Mr. ROSS. Does the gentleman think it would impair the bill if he struck out the additional twenty men which it provides for?

Mr. BANKS. I do not know who they are. Whoever is appointed will serve without pay.

Mr. GRINNELL. I wish to ask the gentleman if he is aware that the honorable gentleman from the Galena district [Mr. WASHBURN] who made such desperate and prolonged opposition to this matter has written from Europe that this Exposition promises to be a grand affair, and that he hopes the best men will be sent, as it will redound to the glory of the nation.

Mr. BANKS. If the House will allow me, I will say in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the appropriation already made is not in excess of that contemplated by the House at the time the resolution was passed, except in one particular. It was estimated in gold by the Senate instead of in paper, as by the House, which made a difference of $56,000; and the freight was contemplated through the instrumentality of public vessels, which I think might have been done.

The Navy Department resisted that; it was surrendered by the Senate; we yielded to it in the House, and that has caused the additional appropriation which has been made. But I submit the question to the House. I will not press it against the general judgment of the Representatives of the people.

Mr. DAVIS. I think that this country ought to feel a deep interest in this Exhibition.

I am just as much in favor of economy as one—

Mr. BANKS. I yield to the gentleman only for an inquiry, because the motion is to suspend the rules.

Mr. SCHENCK. I thought the rules were suspended to allow the gentleman from Massachusetts five minutes to make a reply.

The SPEAKER. They were suspended for that purpose.

Mr. BANKS. I move to suspend the rules that the House may vote at once upon the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 51, noes 46.

So (two thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

DARIEN SHIP-CANAL.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a joint resolution (S. R. No. 181) concerning the right of way for the survey and construction of a ship-canal through the Isthmus of Darien; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ELIOT. I ask that that resolution be put upon its passage.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of State be, and is hereby, directed to take such steps as may be necessary to obtain from the United States of Colombia authority for the United States to make the necessary surveys at the Isthmus of Darien for a ship-canal to connect the waters of the Atlantic and those of the Pacific oceans, and the terms upon which such right of way may be obtained by this Government.

Mr. ROSS. Is that the resolution that we voted down a day or two ago?

The SPEAKER. This is certainly not the same. If it were it would not be here.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. We passed a bill a few days ago directing the Secretary of the Navy to detail certain vessels to convey an exploring party to survey this route. This resolution directs the Secretary of State to see what can be done to acquire the right of way. There is no appropriation in it; and I suppose it ought to follow the other.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IRON-CLAD ONONDAGA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was an act (S. No. 614) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transfer the United States iron-clad Onondaga to George Quintard, of New York; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. LYNCH. I hope that this bill will be now put upon its passage.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Navy to deliver to George Quintard, of New York, for his own use and behoof, the United States iron-clad Onondaga, upon payment by him, his heirs or assigns, to the Treasury of the United States of the sum of $759,673.

Mr. LYNCH. This has the approval of the Navy Department and of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LYNCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FIRE DEPARTMENT OF WASHINGTON.

The next business on the Speaker's table was an act (S. No. 625) to amend an act entitled "An act concerning the fire department of Washington city;" which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WELKER. I am instructed by the Committee for the District of Columbia to recommend the passage of this bill.

The bill was read. It repeals so much of the act concerning the fire department of Washington as provided for the use and occupation of the Union engine-house by the city of Washington.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WELKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CUSTOMS FORFEITURES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was an act (S. No. 577) to regulate the disposition of the proceeds of fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred under the laws relating to customs, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ELIOT. I am authorized by the Committee on Commerce to ask the House to put this bill upon its passage with three amendments, which I will send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The amendments were read by the Clerk, as follows:

Section one, line seven, page 1, after the word "merchandise" insert the words "of greater value than $500."

Section two, page 3, line twenty-two, strike out "distinctly and specifically" and insert "the character of."

Section four, page 4, strike out from the words "the ninety-first," in line one, to the words "ninety-nine," in line four, inclusive.

The amendments were agreed to.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. ROSS. I do not quite comprehend the bill from merely hearing it read in this way. I do not understand why so large a portion of these forfeitures should be given to the officers. I suppose that these officers are already paid by the Government; and we do not pay our sheriff or our constable anything extra for doing his duty and arresting a thief.

Mr. ELIOT. This does not increase the amount allowed to these officers by the law now; it only changes the mode of its distribution.

Mr. ROSS. Why should it be changed?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will allow me, I will state a case which actually occurred and which bears upon this matter. There was a case in which the duty and the penalty, if it had been fully levied, would have amounted to $46,000; but it was compromised for $35,000, and the expenses, $3,000, being deducted, there was $32,000 left, half of which went into the Treasury of the United States, one quarter to the informer, and the other quarter to the naval officer, surveyor, and collector. That is according to the law now. Under the provisions of this bill the duty in all such cases must first be paid into the Treasury, and only the surplus can be so divided.

Mr. ROSS. But what propriety is there in giving the officers this proportion of the proceeds?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. That is done now. The object is to make them more zealous. I think this is an excellent bill; it puts a stop to the black-mailing that has been going on hitherto.

Mr. ELIOT. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADJUSTMENT OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 578, to extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri, and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time.

Mr. THAYER. I am instructed by the Committee on Private Land Claims to recommend that this bill be passed.

The bill was read at length. It provides that the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri, and for other purposes," approved June 22, 1860, shall be extended and continued in force for the period of three years after the passage of this act.

Mr. THAYER. In 1860 Congress passed an act appointing the land officers in the States named in this bill, the registers and receivers, commissioners to examine titles which had originated under the authorities exercising dominion before these Territories were acquired by the United States; as Congress has always been in the habit of passing. The act of 1860 required these commissioners simply to investigate the titles and report the result of their examination to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The Commissioner of the General Land Office is required to report to Congress, and nothing comes of the examination until Congress takes action upon it.

The act of 1860, being limited in duration to five years, has now expired. The effect of this bill, if passed, will be to extend the provisions of that act for three years longer. As Congress retains the final control over all these cases, I do not perceive that any injury can possibly come from the passage of this bill. I hope, therefore, it will be passed.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THAYER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MOTION FOR A RECESS.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, (at twelve o'clock, midnight, Sunday,) moved that the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take the liberty of saying that if members desire to have the public business concluded by the expiration of this Congress a recess should not now be taken. The Chair is informed that the Senate have agreed to the report of the committee of conference upon the deficiency appropriation bill. After that report shall have been acted upon by the House, a recess may very properly be taken. But the bill may fail absolutely if a recess is taken before it is finally acted upon.

The motion of Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, for a recess was not agreed to.

COINAGE, WEIGHTS, AND MEASURES.

Mr. KASSON. As I am about to close my connection with Congress, I have a slight favor to ask of this House. I ask consent to submit the following resolutions for consideration at this time:

Resolved, That the Committee on a Uniform System of Coinage, Weights, and Measures have leave hereafter to file their report, when completed, with the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That when said report shall be filed the usual number shall be printed, and, in addition thereto, two thousand extra copies for the use of the House and three hundred extra copies for the use of the committee.

Resolved, That the rule establishing said committee be so amended that the title thereof shall be, "The Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures;" and the number of members shall be seven.

I will say that the proposition to change the rule has been submitted to and approved by the Committee on the Rules, and the proposition in regard to extra copies has been submitted to and approved by the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The law requires that the motion to print extra copies shall be referred to the Committee on Printing; and it will be so referred.

Mr. LAFLIN. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report the following resolution, upon which I call the previous question:

Resolved, That three hundred extra copies of the report of the Committee on a Uniform System of Coinage, Weights, and Measures, this day authorized to be hereafter made, be printed with covers for the use of the committee making the report, and two thousand copies without covers for the members of the House.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I would ask if the Committee on Printing can report such a resolution without having a session?

The SPEAKER. The Committee is authorized to report at any time and to hold its sessions, if need be, on the floor of the House while the House is in session.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution reported by the Committee on Printing was agreed to.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The resolutions offered by Mr. KASSON were then agreed to.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 148) presenting the thanks of Congress to Cyrus W. Field, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 1227, making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS submitted the following report from a committee of conference:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1227) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 13, 1867, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, numbered one, three, four, five, six, seven, nine, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fifteen, sixteen, nineteen, twenty-two, twenty-three, and twenty-four, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their amendments numbered two, eight, ten, fourteen, seventeen, and eighteen.

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the twentieth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same, with an amendment, as follows: in line three of said amendment strike out the words "for the present fiscal year;" and after the word "clerks" in line four insert the following words: "to take effect from and after the 1st day of January, 1867," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the twenty-first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same, with amendments as follows: in line eight of said amendment, after the word "eastern," insert "and western;" and in same line strike out the word "district" where it first occurs and insert "districts;" and the Senate agree to the same.

THADDEUS STEVENS.

JOHN A. KASSON.

Managers on the part of the House.

W. P. FESSENDEN.

J. W. GRIMES.

W. M. STEWART.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. STEVENS. Unless some member desires to ask some question I will ask that the vote be now taken upon agreeing to this report.

Mr. CONKLING. I would like to inquire whether the salaries of the Federal judges, as now fixed by law, are raised by any amendment of the Senate in which the committee of conference recommend concurrence? If those salaries, or any of them, have been raised, I would inquire how many of them have been raised, what is the highest salary, and what the lowest proposed by this report. And then, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] will allow me, I would like to make a single remark.

Mr. STEVENS. The highest salary is that of the judge for the district of California, which is now fixed by law at $5,000, and is not changed by this report. The next highest is that of Louisiana, $4,500. Then come a number of others, beginning with Massachusetts; then New York, in which I think there are three districts; then Pennsylvania and one or two of the western districts, which are raised to $4,000. All the others are $3,500. Perhaps, in order to have the matter stated accurately, the Clerk better read that provision.

The Clerk read as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the salary of the district judge of the district of California shall be $5,000; the salary of the district judge of the district of Louisiana shall be $4,500; the salaries of the district judges of the district of Massachusetts, northern, southern, and eastern districts of New York, eastern and western districts of Pennsylvania, the district of Maryland, northern district of Illinois, southern district of Ohio, and the district of New Jersey, shall be $4,000 each; and the salaries of the district judges of every other district shall be $3,500 each; and said salaries shall be in full compensation for the official services performed by said judges, and shall take effect at the commencement of the next fiscal year; and no other allowance or payment shall be made to them for traveling expenses or otherwise; and the amount necessary to pay the increased compensation herein provided shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania state how many amendments the Senate have put on this deficiency bill?

Mr. STEVENS. I cannot tell.

Mr. CONKLING. A considerable number, I suppose, and involving a large amount.

Mr. STEVENS. A considerable amount, of which we have struck off perhaps $200,000.

Mr. CONKLING. If the gentleman will allow me, I will make a single remark.

Mr. STEVENS. Very well.

Mr. CONKLING. I desire to do so, in order to justify a little of the emphasis with which I perhaps may have spoken last night in reference to another bill about which the two Houses had disagreed.

This very amendment, raising the salaries of these judges, was among those from which the Senate last night affected to recede; though we in the conference committee saw very clearly that the design was to reserve them to be placed in some other bill. And here they come, to plague us, if not the inventor.

Now, every gentlemen will remember that according to the Constitution we can never reduce the salaries of these judges; so that for life, and I may say forever, by this bill, we are raising very largely the tariff of judicial pay.

Some of these judges are friends of mine, and as a mere matter of personal feeling I could rejoice in their good fortune. There is the judge of the northern district of New York, toward whom personally I have the kindest feelings, and I regret that for the last year he has been compelled to spend a large part of his time under medical treatment and in repose, so that he has not been able to attend to his official duties. It will seem, however, rather harsh to the chief justice of the State of New York, for example, who labors in court many months, and labors out of court if he does his duty, that gentlemen performing lighter duty shall receive hundreds of dollars more than he. It will seem to some people extraordinary, in those districts where, gentlemen around me know better than I, the judicial labors are so small, that we should fix perpetually a certain rate of compensation, the highest known by the State of New York to be paid to the highest judicial officer of the first republican State in Christendom in proportion to population.

Mr. UPSON. How much is to be performed in the eastern district of New York?

Mr. CONKLING. I will say in that regard that the judge of the eastern district will discharge the duties of his own district, and owing to the advanced age of the judge of the southern district he performs for him, too, a considerable amount of duty.

Mr. RAYMOND. There is not a more laborious judge in the State of New York than the judge of the eastern district.

Mr. CONKLING. I have said about all I rose to say; I did not intend to detain the House but a moment; I will not make the motion; I have done enough in that way. I was about to remind the House we are now fixing minimum salaries to be paid to Federal judges in the smallest districts for the lightest labor to be performed by any judge at $3,000, which in the State of New York is deemed to be the highest salary which should be paid to the highest judicial officer in the Commonwealth; I do not hesitate to say I deem it excessive. If any gentleman will sit down and make the computation of the amount of increase of pay running for the lives of these men this will lead to, he will find it will be numbered by thousands of dollars. That is where we are, because we did not insist upon keeping those amendments before the House and make them as we think they ought to be.

Mr. STEVENS. I think, sir, every man understands perfectly well whether there is too much paid to the judges in his own neighborhood. I am quite sure that it is time we should adjourn, and therefore I demand the previous question.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I would like to know whether this is the only objectionable feature?

Mr. CONKLING. I understand there are twenty amendments receded from before to be put into this bill.

Mr. JENCKES. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me for a few minutes.

Mr. STEVENS. I withdraw the previous question, and yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. JENCKES. I wish to say a word in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from New York as to the conduct of the Senate in the conference committee. We know nothing of it here but what the gentleman has reported. I trust that the Senate committees of conference will be animated by a different sentiment when the honorable gentleman takes his seat in that body.

It seems to me, however, that the fact stated should have no consideration or weight in this matter. Sir, in the Congress of the United States for many years it seems the least honorable part of the Government has been this of the judges. There has not been a judge on the Atlantic or lake coast who has not been called upon to decide questions in admiralty law and in the law of nations requiring the greatest legal and highest judicial talent—questions of the gravest importance submitted to men to whom we paid the small pittance of $2,000 a year. The judge of the district court of Connecticut labors now nearly ten months in the year unceasingly. The judge in Rhode Island, holding both circuit and district court, labors as long. The judge in Vermont labors nearly, if not quite as much. They are required to hold circuit courts in the absence of the supreme court judges.

Mr. Speaker, I do not consider it any argument against agreeing to this amendment that the State of New York does not pay its judges what it ought to. It does not follow that because that great State is mean in its treatment of its judges the United States of America should be mean also.

Mr. ROSS. Is there any law prohibiting these judges from resigning at any time? [Laughter.]

Mr. JENCKES. No; but there is a policy which prevents men who are competent to discharge the duties of the position from accepting these offices when they become vacant.

Mr. STEVENS. I demand the previous question upon agreeing to the report.

Mr. ALLEY. I move to lay the report on the table.

The SPEAKER. If that is done it will carry the bill with it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I hope that will not be done, because this bill contains some important appropriations.

The SPEAKER. This bill contains $11,000,000 of pension appropriations.

Mr. ALLEY. I withdraw the motion.

The question recurred upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I demand the yeas and nays. This bill increases salaries, and for that reason I am opposed to agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Upon ordering the yeas and nays upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference, there were—ayes 10, noes 73. So (one fifth not voting in favor thereof) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question recurred upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference; and being put, there were—ayes 70, noes 20; no quorum voting.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, and Mr. DAWSON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 28.

So the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the House now take a recess.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at twelve o'clock and fifty minutes a. m.) the House took a recess until nine a. m.

The House resumed its session at nine a. m.

WILLIAM H. WEBB.

Mr. DARLING. I desire to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill for the relief of William H. Webb.

No objection being made, the bill was taken up, received its several readings, and was passed.

Mr. DARLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DUTIES ON FOREIGN MERCHANDISE.

Mr. DARLING. I desire now to take up Senate bill No. 609, allowing duties on foreign merchandise imported into the port of Albany, to be secured and paid at that port.

No objection being made, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, received its several readings, and was passed.

Mr. DARLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DARLING. I ask the House to take up Senate bill No. 622, to repeal the provisions of the law authorizing the introduction of foreign goods into the United States without inspection at the usual ports of entry.

No objection being made, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, and was read a first and second time.

Mr. ELIOT. I move that this bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES FULTON.

Mr. DARLING. I desire to take up Senate bill No. 557, for the relief of James Fulton, paymaster in the United States Navy.

No objection being made, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the proper accounting officers of the Government to allow to James Fulton, paymaster in the Navy, in the settlement of his accounts, credit for the sum of $17,213 95 for clothing and small stores abstracted from the inspection building in charge of said Fulton while on duty at the navy-yard, Washington.

Mr. PRICE. I call for the reading of the report of the committee upon this bill.

The Clerk read the report of the committee, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the "petition of James Fulton, paymaster United States Navy, praying to be released from all responsibility for a deficiency in the clothing and small-store account of the inspection in the Washington navy-yard, discovered in October, 1866," has had the same under consideration, and beg leave respectfully to report:

The petition sets forth that the petitioner was ordered to the Washington navy-yard as paymaster of the yard and inspector of provisions, clothing, and small stores, on the 1st of February, 1865. That soon after he reported for duty the war against the rebellion closed, and that in consequence thereof the onerous burden fell upon him of paying off, transferring, arranging the bounties, accounts, &c., of the sailors attached to the Potomac flotilla, amounting to two thousand five hundred men, besides receiving and inspecting all the provisions, clothing, and small stores turned into the inspection from the different vessels of the flotilla. That this work was in addition to his regular work of paying off monthly the officers of the station and the mechanics and laborers of the yard, amounting to one thousand five hundred men. That during a period of twenty months he disbursed $2,500,000, or $125,000 per month. That this work was so arduous that he and his clerks were compelled to work nights and Sundays to keep his books up. That in consequence of being so busily employed in the pay-office he was necessitated to intrust to the clerk of the inspection, A. N. Thompson, the duties of that department. That this man Thompson had held the position of the clerk of inspection for several years, and had been highly recommended by all former paymasters under whom he had served for honesty, capacity, &c., and that in consequence of such recommendations he was retained. The petitioner, having full confidence in Thompson, and forced to do so by the pressure of duties upon him, sets forth that he intrusted to Thompson the keys of the inspection building, which is separate from the pay-office. That Thompson availed himself of the opportunity to steal a large amount of valuable articles, such as black silk handkerchiefs and sewing silk, which he could very easily conceal under his coat and elude the vigilance of the sentry at the navy-yard gate. That not until October, 1866, was the deficiency in the clothing and small store account discovered, and that when discovered was immediately reported to the Navy Department. Thompson was immediately arrested and sent to jail, in default of bail to the amount of $10,000. He was subsequently bailed out, and is now awaiting his trial.

Accompanying the petition is a copy of the testimony of the witnesses in the case, and also of the bill found against Thompson by the grand jury of the District of Columbia, which appear to be conclusive of his guilt.

The Navy Department takes a very favorable view of Paymaster Fulton's application, as is apparent from the following correspondence:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON,
February 11, 1867.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, relating to the petition of Paymaster James Fulton, and to transmit in reply a communication from the chief of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing upon the subject.

The Department has now, as it has always had, the fullest confidence in the honesty and integrity of Paymaster Fulton, and places perfect reliance upon his statements.

The inclosures accompanying your letter are herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

G. WELLES,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. JAMES W. GRIMES,
Chairman Naval Committee, United States Senate.

BUREAU OF PROVISIONS AND CLOTHING,
February 11, 1867.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the letter of Hon. J. W. GRIMES, chairman of the Naval Committee of the Senate, with the papers in the case of Paymaster J. Fulton, referred by you to this bureau, and to report:

That Paymaster Fulton has always maintained the highest reputation at the department and in the service for integrity and fidelity in the discharge of his duties.

Owing to the insufficient number of paymasters in the Navy at the time he was ordered to the Washington navy-yard, in February, 1865, it was impossible to assign another paymaster with whom to divide the duties, which were of so laborious and complicated a nature as would otherwise have made it advisable to do so.

His accounts for the expenditure of very large sums of money have been promptly and fully settled.

His duties in disbursing money were such that he was much absent from the inspection building, and this gave to his clerk, who was thus necessarily left in charge, the opportunity to pursue a continuous and systematic course of dishonesty.

Mr. Fulton received from his predecessor the very highest recommendation of this clerk for honesty and ability, and therefore very naturally gave him full access to articles of value at the inspection building, when other duties obliged him to give his personal attention at the pay-office, in another part of the yard.

Such confidence had this clerk inspired that Mr. Fulton, as well as those paymasters who had preceded him, had taken the clerk's written account of the articles on hand, instead of making that thorough personal examination which would have been desirable.

In Mr. Fulton's case more than in any other this was pardonable, since, owing to the pressure of business incident to the close of the war, his duties were more arduous than had ever been performed by any paymaster at that yard.

The difficulties of Mr. Fulton's position, owing to the breaking up of the Potomac flotilla, were very great, and I have no doubt that he gave to the public property intrusted to him all the care and attention which he would have given to it had it been his own.

Considering Mr. Fulton's case an exceptional one, I hope that an examination of the papers in the case (which are herewith returned) will secure a favorable report for that officer.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
H. BRIDGE, Chief of Bureau.
Hon. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy.

In reference to the amount of loss sustained by Paymaster Fulton through these depredations by Thompson, and for which he asks relief, there is submitted to the committee the following letter from the chief of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF PROVISIONS AND CLOTHING,
WASHINGTON, January 14, 1867.

SIR: In the examination and settlement of your account as inspector of provisions and clothing at the navy-yard, Washington, District of Columbia, there is found a deficiency of $17,257 99, as follows:

Clothing.....	$12,797 28
Small stores.....	4,460 71
	<hr/> $17,257 99

Very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,
H. BRIDGE, Chief of Bureau.
Paymaster JAMES FULTON, United States Navy, Washington, District of Columbia.

In view of the facts above recited, your committee agree in the opinion expressed in the communication from the Secretary of the Navy that this is an exceptional case, and believe that it is one in which relief can equitably and properly be granted, and they therefore beg leave to report the accompanying bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DARLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THANKS TO CYRUS W. FIELD.

Mr. DARLING. I ask unanimous consent to take up a resolution returning thanks to Cyrus W. Field.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I demand the regular order.

EXCHANGE OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was joint resolution (No. 179) to provide for the exchange of certain public documents; which was read a first and second time.

The resolution is as follows:

Be it resolved, That fifty copies of all documents hereafter printed by order of either House of Congress, and fifty copies additional of all copies printed in excess of the usual number, together with fifty copies of each publication issued by any Department or bureau of the Government, be placed at the disposal of the joint Committee on the Library, who shall exchange the same through the agency of the Smithsonian Institute for such works published in foreign countries, and especially by foreign Governments, as may be deemed by said committee the equivalent of said works, to be deposited in the Library of Congress.

The resolution was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being upon the passage of the joint resolution, it was put, and decided in the negative.

So the joint resolution was rejected.

ELIZA WELLS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 611, to extend to, and for the benefit of, Eliza Wells letters-patent heretofore issued to Henry A. Wells, deceased; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MYERS. I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I demand that the bill shall be read.

The bill was read. It provides that the letters-patent granted to Henry A. Wells in 1846, and resigned to Henry A. Barr in 1860, numbered 1086 and 1087 respectively, and bearing date the 4th of December, 1860, shall be, and are, extended to and for the benefit of, Eliza Wells, as administratrix of the estate of Henry A. Wells, deceased, for the further term of seven years from and after the 25th of April, 1867.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to state that the passage of this bill has been unanimously recommended by the Senate Committee and by the House Committee on Patents. The report is very full and very satisfactory; but unless the reading of it is asked for I will not detain the House at this time by having it read. I will state in a few words, however, the reasons which satisfied us that the bill should pass. It is for the relief of Mrs. Eliza Wells, a very old lady, and her children, the widow and heirs of Henry A. Wells, deceased, the inventor of a very valuable improvement in the machinery for manufacturing hat-bodies. It appeared in proof before the committee that hat-bodies which formerly cost twenty-five cents apiece, were by this means reduced in cost to eight cents apiece; and from the statistics before us it appeared that the public had saved at least $6,000,000 by the invention of Mr. Wells; yet the inventor died in extreme poverty and had to be buried by the charity of friends.

There is one peculiar feature in the case to which I ask attention. We had the proof before us by affidavits and otherwise that a great number of the licensees under this patent unite in asking that it may be extended and state that they will gladly pay a royalty to this old lady and her children. I can truly say on behalf of the Committee on Patents that we have never had a more meritorious case before us. I believe that a number of gentlemen on this floor are acquainted with the circumstances of this case and feel the propriety of granting the relief asked. This bill does not propose to take one dollar out of the Treasury. I think I may be permitted to repeat in conclusion, a remark which I have made on a former occasion, that as the Committee on Patents during this and the preceding Congress have reported favorably on very few cases, their recommendation is entitled to some weight. I call the previous question.

Mr. UPSON. I move the bill be laid on the table.

On the motion there were—ayes 11, noes 29; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. UPSON and Mr. DAWES.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 18, noes 35; no quorum voting.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that there be a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following-named members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Ancona, Anderson, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Benjamin, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Brandegee, Bundy, Campbell, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cooper, Davis, Delano, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hart, Hawkins, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jones, Julian, Kelso, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Latham, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marquette, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McRuer, Mercier, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Nicholson, O'Neill, Phelps, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Ross, Rousseau, Sawyer, Shanklin, Spalding, Starr, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Van Arnam, Robert T. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Whaley, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Wright.

The SPEAKER. One hundred and two members—more than a quorum—have answered to their names.

Mr. DARLING. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

ELIZA WELLS—AGAIN.

Mr. UPSON. I withdraw the motion to lay the bill on the table, and call for the reading of the report.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

Report of Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of Eliza Wells, widow of the late Henry Augustus Wells, of the city of New York, praying for an extension of the letters-patent for valuable improvements in the process of manufacturing fur hat-bodies.

The committee find that letters-patent of the United States were granted to the said Henry A. Wells, a citizen of the State of New York, for improvements in the mode of manufacturing hat-bodies, bearing date April 25, 1846. That said Wells died March 27, 1851, and the petitioner was appointed administratrix of his estate January 5, 1852.

The term of said letters-patent expired April 25, 1860. Prior to its expiration the said patent was extended by the Commissioner for a further period of seven years, under the act of July 4, 1836, section eighteen, which term expires April 25, 1867.

It is in proof that the invention has proved one of great value to the public, working a complete revolution in the manufacture of hat-bodies, and saving to the public a sum not less than $6,000,000.

The petitioner prays that said patent may be extended for a further period of seven years, to enable the widow and heirs of the inventor to realize a reasonable compensation for the labor, skill, and ingenuity expended by the husband and father.

It is shown that Henry A. Wells devoted many years of his life to the study and perfection of this invention, which reduced to practice a method of forming hat-bodies, as a substitute for the laborious hand process of "bowing." The cost under the old method of manufacture was about twenty-five cents per hat-body, while under this invention it was reduced to less than eight cents.

That after said letters-patent were granted, up to March 21, 1848, the inventor received for his five years' labor the sum of $4,254, the proceeds of the use of said patent, less the sum of $2,216 51 paid by him for defending his right at law. At this time he conveyed to sundry assignees all his right, title, and interest in and to said patent to secure the payment of his debts, the said assignees agreeing to pay to him during the life of said patentee, and to his heirs, the sum of $1,200 per annum. Up to this time the said Wells had expended nearly fourteen thousand dollars in sustaining his patent, saving only a bare pittance for the support of his family. In March, 1851, the said Wells died, and was buried by the charity of relatives.

The petitioner was regularly paid said annuity of $1,200 up to the time of the expiration of said letters-patent, which sum was the sole means of support of the petitioner and her family up to April, 1860.

At this time, the petitioner, being in straitened circumstances, and finding herself unable to procure the means for an extension of the patent, and enforce the same against the many opposing interests in existence, and finding herself about to be deprived of all means of support, assigned all her interest in said patent for the sum of $10,000 and a yearly annuity of $1,200 during said extension.

The whole of said $10,000 was expended in legal expenses relative to said patent, and she has since been wholly supported on the annuity aforesaid.

The said extension expires on the 25th day of April, 1867, and unless the same is further extended by Congress for a period of seven years, she, the petitioner, in her old age, with a family of three children dependent almost wholly upon her for support, will be deprived of all means of subsistence, and she and her family reduced to absolute poverty.

In view of the great value of the invention to the public, the fact that the inventor wholly failed in his lifetime to reap any reasonable reward for his invention, dying under circumstances of great pecuniary distress, and that the petitioner and her family will be entirely deprived of their means of support and become dependents upon the charity of friends unless this patent be extended, your committee report in favor of granting the prayer of the petitioner, and beg leave to submit the following bill:

Mr. MYERS. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded; there being—ayes sixty-five, noes not counted.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

The motion was not agreed to; there being—ayes 34, noes 65.

The main question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. MYERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 746) to create the office of surveyor general in the Territory of Montana, and establish a land office in the Territories of Montana and Arizona;

An act (H. R. No. 885) granting land to aid in the construction of a railroad from the city of Stockton to the town of Copperopolis, in the State of California;

An act (H. R. No. 1173) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 1227) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 226) extending the provisions of section two of an act entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermasters' stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," approved July 4, 1864;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 270) for the relief of J. H. Riley; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 304) in relation to the erection of a jail in the District of Columbia.

EXCHANGE OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. LAFLIN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House laid on the table the joint resolution (S. No. 179) to provide for the exchange of certain public documents.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurred on the passage of the joint resolution.

The resolution was read at length. It provides that fifty copies of all documents hereafter printed by order of either House of Congress, and fifty copies additional of all documents printed in excess of the usual number, together with fifty copies of each publication issued by any Department or bureau of the Government, be placed at the disposal of the joint Committee on the Library, who shall exchange the same through the agency of the Smithsonian Institution for such works published in foreign countries, and especially by Foreign Governments, as may be deemed by said committee an equivalent; said works to be deposited in the Library of Congress.

The joint resolution was passed.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 578) to extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri," and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 614) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transfer the United States iron-clad Onondaga to George Quintard, of New York;

An act (S. No. 577) to regulate the disposition of the proceeds of fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred under the laws relating to the customs, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 603) to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands;

An act (S. No. 620) for the relief of Joshua H. Butterworth;

An act (S. No. 625) to amend an act entitled "An act concerning the fire department of Washington city," approved February 18, 1867;

An act (S. No. 576) relating to appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 66) for the relief of Joseph R. Morris;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 176) relative to the post office and sub-Treasury of the city of Boston; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 181) concerning the right of way for the survey and construction of an inter-oceanic ship-canal through the Isthmus of Darien.

GOVERNMENT OF REBEL STATES.

The Speaker laid before the House the following letter from the Clerk of the House of Representatives; which was read and laid on the table:

CLERK'S OFFICE.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES, WASHINGTON, D. C., March 2, 1867.

SIR: I have the honor to state that, in accordance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 2d instant, I have presented to the Secretary of State the bill entitled "An act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States," together with the certificates of the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate, showing that the said act was passed by a vote of two thirds of both Houses of Congress after the same had been returned to the House of Representatives by the President with his objections, and after the reconsideration of said act by both Houses of Congress, in accordance with the Constitution.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

EDWARD McPIERSON,

Clerk of the House of Representatives.

HON. SCHUYLER COLFAX,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

REV. SAMUEL M. BEATTY.

The House, according to order, resumed the consideration of business on the Speaker's table, the first business in order being a bill (S. No. 463) for the relief of Rev. Samuel M. Beatty, of Ohio; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length. It provides for paying to Samuel M. Beatty, of Ohio, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $413 60, the pay and allowance due to him as chaplain from January 12, 1863, to April 25, 1863, at the United States hospital at Cleveland, Ohio.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

COURTS-MARTIAL IN THE ARMY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 628) entitled "An act relative to courts-martial in the Army;" which was read a first and second time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that this bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SCHENCK. As chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs I shall not oppose the indefinite postponement of this bill. It is a measure the passage of which is desired by the Judge Advocate General of the Army, and which I find contains some valuable matter, but along with it much which I think would not meet the approval of the Committee on Military Affairs or of the House. At this period of the session there is no time for the proper consideration of such a measure, but I hope it will be brought up at some future time.

The motion of Mr. GARFIELD was agreed to; and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

D. B. ALLEN AND COMPANY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 613, to provide for the payment of D. B. Allen & Co. for services in carrying the United States mails; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that the sum of $23,000 be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of D. B. Allen & Co., for carrying the United States mails between New York and San Francisco in 1864 and 1865, during the suspension of the overland mail service on the overland route, and that the same shall be in full payment for said service.

Mr. ALLEY. I move that the bill be put on its passage.

Mr. BENJAMIN. That bill has not been before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. McRUER. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that it has been before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and that it comes here recommended by that committee.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I make the point of order that the bill contains an appropriation, and must therefore, under the rules, be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point comes too late. It ought to have been made before the gentleman made his other point.

Mr. McRUER. It has been duly considered by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and I now demand the previous question on its passage.

The previous question was not seconded; only twenty voting in the affirmative.

Mr. BENJAMIN moved that it be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 606, to amend an act entitled "An act for the removal of causes in certain cases from State courts," approved July 27, 1866; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move that the bill be put on its passage.

The bill provides that the act for the removal of causes in certain cases from State courts, approved July 27, 1866, be amended as follows: that where a suit is now pending, or may hereafter be brought, in any State court in which there is a controversy between a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought and a citizen of another State, and the matter in dispute exceeds the sum of $500, exclusive of costs, such citizen of another State, whether he be plaintiff or defendant, if he will make and file in such State court an affidavit that he has reason to and does believe that from prejudice or local influence he will not be able to obtain justice in such State court, may, at any time before the final hearing or trial of the suit, file a petition in such State court for the removal of the suit into the next circuit court of the United States to be held in the district where the suit is pending, and offer good and sufficient surety for his entering in such court on the first day of its session copies of all process, pleadings, depositions, testimony, and other proceedings in said suit, and doing such other appropriate acts as by the act to which this act is amendatory are required to be done upon the removal of a suit into the United States court; and it shall be thereupon the duty of the State court to accept the surety and proceed no further in the suit; and the said copies being entered as aforesaid in such court of the United States, the suit shall there proceed in the same manner as if it had been brought there by original process; and all the provisions of the act to which this is amendatory respecting any bail, attachment, injunction, or other restraining process, and respecting any bond of indemnity, or other obligation given upon the issuing or granting of any attachment, injunction, or other restraining process, shall apply with like force and effect in all respects to similar matters, process, or things in the suits for the removal of which this act provides.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOUTWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

A. G. SLOO AND COMPANY.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was the Senate joint resolution No. 165, to refer the claims of the trustees of A. G. Sloo to the Court of Claims.

The joint resolution states that doubts are entertained whether the claim of the trustees of Albert G. Sloo upon the Government of the United States for compensation for extra services in carrying the United States mails from 1851 to 1859, inclusive, is embraced by existing laws giving jurisdiction to the Court of Claims; and it therefore provides, in order to remove all doubts on that subject, that the said claim of the trustees of Albert G. Sloo be referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication thereof, on the petition of said trustees presented to said court, pursuant to authority conferred on said court by any existing law to examine and decide claims referred to it by Congress.

Mr. DELANO. I understand this claim involves a considerable sum of money, not less than $1,000,000. I do not know its merits. I do not rise to make objection to the case but to call for information.

Mr. SCHENCK. My attention has been called to this case. It is one of those cases where there have been favorable reports by both Houses heretofore, but there is a conflict in regard to the amount. I think this is one of those cases which ought to have the deliberate examination of a court, and not hurried through here. I hope, therefore, the joint resolution will be passed, and that this matter will be referred to be examined judicially by the Court of Claims.

Mr. UPSON. I think we had better keep the matter within the control of the House. No objection is made that it has not been considered here.

Mr. SCHENCK. My experience is that large claims acquire a sort of momentum and will go through the House without much consideration. The hugeness of a claim is usually in its favor instead of against it. There has not been that examination there ought to be in this case, and the question is whether Congress should be the arbiter or it should be referred to the Court of Claims to be judicially examined. The solicitor of the Court of Claims informs me this joint resolution is necessary to remove doubts entertained on the subject.

Mr. UPSON. If there is any doubt about it, I think it should be referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. SCHENCK. I trust that reference will not be made. I think the resolution as it passed the Senate is a just and fair one. I say this after examination of the whole matter. I say also in relation to it that it has had most favorable reports made by Judge Collamer, whose knowledge on that subject every one will admit, as well as that he was both a good lawyer and an honest man.

Mr. SPALDING. Has this ever undergone the investigation of any one of the House committees?

Mr. SCHENCK. It is not presented in the nature of a claim; it is simply a question of jurisdiction. It only removes the doubts which now exist as to whether the Court of Claims has jurisdiction at this time.

Mr. SPALDING. How much is the claim?

Mr. SCHENCK. It is large in amount. I will sum up by saying that the Postmaster General, who made a favorable and exceedingly able report on this subject, reported in favor of one amount in case a certain construction is given to certain contracts, and another amount if another construction is given, making it a judicial question. I think the court is a better tribunal to settle a judicial question like this than Congress.

Mr. STEVENS. Does it not go before the Court of Claims without the passage of this resolution?

Mr. SCHENCK. That is a doubt which the court wants removed, and which the solicitor of the court applies to have removed. The language of the resolution is prepared so as to remove all doubt and give jurisdiction to the Court of Claims.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee of Claims.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1234) to incorporate the joint-stock company of the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington.

ACCOUNTS OF DISBURSING OFFICERS.

Mr. DAWSON submitted the following privileged report:

The committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate joint resolution No. 173, to facilitate the settlement of accounts of disbursing officers, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, that the House of Representatives recede from their amendment to said resolution.

JOHN L. DAWSON,
JAMES F. WILSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
HENRY WILSON,
GEORGE H. WILLIAMS,
JAMES W. GRIMES,

The report was adopted.

Mr. DAWSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF NAVAL LAWS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 509, to amend certain acts in relation to the Navy, which was read a first and second time.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved that the bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was read in extenso.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by striking out in section two, after the word "that," these words:

The number of midshipmen authorized by law at the Naval Academy shall be exclusive of those who on the 5th of March of each year shall be members of the graduating class of that year and.

Mr. SPALDING. Does this bill propose to make a commandant of the Marine corps a brigadier general?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. It does.

Mr. SPALDING. I hope the House will vote against it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move to amend the eighth section by inserting after the word "ten" the words "appointed annually." The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. In the same section I move further to amend by inserting after the word "appointed" the words "for any vacancy already existing."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move the following as a new section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That officers on the retired and reserved lists of the Navy shall be entitled to promotion as their several dates on the active list are promoted; but such promotion shall not entitle them to any pay beyond that to which they were entitled when retired, unless upon active duty, when they shall receive the full pay of their respective grades: Provided, That no promotion shall be made to the grade of rear admiral upon the retired list, in order that there shall be in that grade the full number allowed by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to strike out the eighth section as follows:

That the commandant of the Marine corps shall have the rank and pay of a brigadier general of the Army.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I will say to the gentleman that the committee have thoroughly examined the subject, and that we submitted an elaborate report on the subject. We find that it was recommended by the Secretary of the Navy and by the most distinguished men connected with the Navy to embrace the commandant of that corps.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I will give the gentleman an opportunity to take a vote on this amendment to strike out the eighth section.

The question being put on striking out the section, there were—ayes 47, noes 46, no quorum voting.

The Chair ordered tellers; and Messrs. Rice, of Massachusetts, and SPALDING, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 64.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. SPALDING. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPALDING. I withdraw the call; I intended to move the yeas and nays on the paragraph, and not the passage of the bill.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I insist upon the call.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 94, nays 65, not voting 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Boyer, Bundy, Chanler, Cooper, Darling, Davis, Farnsworth, Ferry, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Hogan, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Jones, Kasson, Kelley, Kerr, Kuykendall, Labin, Latham, Le Blond, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McCullough, McKuer, Mercier, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Newell, Nicholson, Neill, O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, Rudford, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Schenck, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Starr, Stilwell, Strouse, Thayer, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Woodbridge, and Wright—94.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Baker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bergen, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Culom, De-frees, Delano, Farquhar, Finck, Goodyear, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hawkins, Hise, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hunter, Julian, Ketcham, Kootz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Leftwich, Marshall, McKee, Moulton, Paine, William H. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Sawyer, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spaulding, Stevens, Stokes, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Winfield—65.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Blow, Brandegee, Culver, Deming, Denison, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eekley, Eliot, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Humphrey, Kelso, Loan, Longyear, Marquette, McIndoe, Niblack, Phelps, Samuel J. Randall, Rogers, Rousseau, Nelson Taylor, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Hamilton Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Welker, and Stephen F. Wilson—32.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CLARK, one of its Clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 591) for the relief of Thomas D. Burrall;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 267) for the reduction of the military reservation at Fort Riley, and to grant land for bridge purposes to the State of Kansas; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 297) instructing the Secretary of the Interior to order a survey for a bridge or bridges across the Potomac.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 609) allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into the port of Albany to be secured and paid at that place;

An act (S. No. 557) for the relief of James Fulton, paymaster in the United States Navy; and

An act (S. No. 588) for the relief of William H. Webb.

ADMISSION OF LADIES ON THE FLOOR.

Mr. STEVENS. I make the usual motion on the last day of the session, that the families of members be admitted into the cloak-rooms of this Hall.

The motion was agreed to unanimously.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had chosen Hon. BENJAMIN F. WADE, one of the Senators from the State of Ohio, President of the Senate pro tempore.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a joint resolution of the House No. 283, authorizing the Secretary of State to present to Captain James G. Smith, of the British brig Victoria, a gold chronometer in token of appreciation of his services in rescuing from death the master, officers, crew, and passengers on board of the American brig E. H. Fidler.

THANKS TO CYRUS W. FIELD.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the joint resolution of the Senate No. 148, presenting the thanks of Congress to Cyrus W. Field; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read at length. The first resolution provides that the thanks of Congress be presented to Cyrus W. Field, of New York, for his foresight, courage, and determination in establishing telegraphic communication, by means of the Atlantic cable, traversing mid ocean, and connecting the Old World with the New, and that the President of the United States be requested to cause a gold medal to be struck with suitable emblems, devices, and inscriptions to be presented to Mr. Field.

The second resolution provides that when the medal shall have been struck, the President shall cause a copy of this joint resolution to be engrossed on parchment, and shall transmit the same, together with the medal, to Mr. Field, to be presented to him in the name of the people of the United States of America.

The third resolution provides that a sufficient sum of money to carry this joint resolution into effect shall be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The joint resolution was then read the third time, and passed unanimously.

BREVETS IN THE ARMY.

The House resumed the consideration of business upon the Speaker's table; the next business being Senate bill No. 634, relating to brevets in the Army of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length. It authorizes the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to confer brevet rank on officers in the Army of the United States on account of gallant, meritorious, or faithful conduct in the volunteer service, prior to appointment in said Army of the United States.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to say simply that a bill precisely similar to this passed the House unanimously some time since. But there seems to be a pride of paternity in some quarters about such bills, and the bill was killed in the Senate on the report of the Committee on Military Affairs of that body. The same bill is now sent back to us a Senate bill, being word for word and letter for letter the very bill which the House has already passed. The bill, in its present exact shape, was originally reported from the Committee on Military Affairs of this House by my colleague on that committee, the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.]

The bill was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRESENTS FROM EMPEROR OF RUSSIA.

The next business on the Speaker's table, was Senate joint resolution No. 184, authorizing Gustavus V. Fox, late Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and the officers of the iron-clad Miantonomoh and of the gunboat Augusta to accept presents tendered them by the Emperor of Russia; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRAZILIAN CHAMBER OF SENATORS, ETC.

The last business upon the Speaker's table was the Senate joint resolution No. 183, thanking the Chamber of Senators and Deputies of Brazil for their resolutions of sorrow and sympathy on the death of President Lincoln; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BANKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENRY MILLER.

Mr. FARNSWORTH, from the select Committee on the Murders of Union Soldiers in South Carolina, made a report in the case of Henry Miller; which, with the accompanying documents, was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 463) for the relief of Rev. Samuel M. Beatty, of Ohio;

An act (S. No. 611) to extend to, and for the benefit of, Eliza Wells, letters-patent heretofore issued to Henry A. Wells, deceased;

An act (S. No. 606) to amend an act entitled "An act for the removal of causes in certain cases from State courts," approved July 27, 1866;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 173) to facilitate the settlement of accounts of disbursing officers;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 178) in relation to national banking associations; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 179) for the exchange of certain public documents.

Mr. COBB, from the same committee, also reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 591) for the relief of Thomas D. Burrall;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 267) for the reduction of the military reservation of Fort Riley, and to grant land for bridge purposes to the State of Kansas;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 283) authorizing the Secretary of State to present to Captain James G. Smith, of the British brig Victoria, a gold chronometer in token of appreciation of his services in rescuing from death the master, officers, crew, and papers on board of the American brig E. H. Fidler; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 297) instructing the Secretary of the Interior to order a survey for a bridge or bridges across the Potomac.

PARIS EXPOSITION.

Mr. BANKS. I rise to a privileged motion. Several gentlemen who voted against the joint resolution of the Senate No. 164, supplementary to other joint resolutions to enable the people of the United States to participate in the advantages of the Universal Exhibition at Paris in 1867, have asked me to move again to suspend the rules, so that the joint resolution may be considered in the House and not in Committee of the Whole. I make the motion at their suggestion, feeling that it is my duty to submit the question to the House.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. BANKS. I have no objection to the yeas and nays. I will merely state that if the motion to suspend the rules is agreed to, I shall move to decrease the appropriation from $93,000 to $50,000, upon the suggestion of the agent for the State of Illinois, who has expressed the opinion to me that $50,000 will be sufficient to accomplish what is necessary.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 106, nays 51, not voting 34; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brownell, Buckland, Chandler, Sidney Clarke, Cooper, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Goodyear, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Hogan, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jencks, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Kuykendall, Lafin, Latham, Lettwich, Lynch, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McKuer, Moorhead, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Phelps, Plants, Pomeroy, Radford, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ross, Rousseau, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Stilwell, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, Wentworth, Whaley, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, Woodbridge, and Wright—106.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Beaman, Benjamin, Bergen, Broomall, Campbell, Rander W. Clarke, Cook, Defrees, Denison, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Hawkins, Hayes, Hise, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Jones, Kerr, Ketcham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, McCullough, McKee, Mercer, Miller, Morris, Niblack, Noell, Pike, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Sawyer, Scofield, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Stevens, Stokes, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Welker, and Williams—51.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Brandegee, Bundy, Cobb, Conkling, Culver, Dumont, Harris, Hart, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Koontz, Loan, Longyear, Marquette, McIndoe, Morrill, Patterson, Price, Samuel J. Randall, Schenck, John L. Thomas, Elihu B. Washburne, and William B. Washburn—34.

So (two thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended.

The House proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was read. The first resolution provides:

1. That the commission of the United States at the Universal Exhibition to be held at Paris in the year 1867 shall consist of the commissioner general and honorary commissioner, whose appointment was approved by the joint resolution of January 22, 1866; also of the thirty commissioners whose appointment was provided for by the joint resolution of July 5, 1866, and of twenty commissioners whose appointment is hereinafter provided for.

2. That the commissioner general shall be the president of the commission thus constituted, with a vote on all questions that may arise.

3. That the commissioner shall meet at Paris as early as possible before the opening of the Exhibition, upon the call of the commissioner General, and, when properly organized, shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for efficient action, with power to elect a vice president from their own number, who, in the absence of the commissioner general, shall preside at all meetings of the commission, and to appoint committees and chairmen of groups.

4. That the commission may designate additional persons, not exceeding twenty in number, being citizens of the United States, known to be skilled in any branch of industry or art, who are hereby authorized to attend the Exhibition in behalf of the United States as honorary commissioners.

5. That the commission may employ a secretary and clerks for the commission, the necessary scientific assistants, and draftsmen, and may engage suitable rooms for the commission.

6. That no commissioner shall act as agent for the show or sale of any article at the Exhibition, or be interested, directly or indirectly, in any profits from any such article.

The second resolution provides that there be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated:

For additional freights from New York to Havre, $15,000.

For transportation and freight from Havre to Paris, $10,000.

For return freight of articles owned by the United States or lent to the Government by individuals, 10,000.

For marine and fire insurance on the articles thus lent, $3,000.

For additional steam-power at Paris, in the "palace" and the "annex," or supplemental building, and in grounds adjacent, $10,000.

For the exhibition of machines, agricultural and other, and for the erection of buildings to illustrate the education and agriculture of the United States, $15,000.

For the necessary expense of collecting, classifying, labeling, and packing mineralogical and metallurgical specimens, to complete the exhibition of the mineral wealth of the United States, $5,000.

For the necessary expense of laborers and extra service in the offices at Paris and New York, $5,000.

For the expenses of a secretary, clerks, scientific assistants, and draftsmen, rooms, and other incidental expenses of the commission, $20,000.

The third resolution provides that it shall be the duty of the general agent at New York and of the commissioner general at Paris, to transmit to Congress, through the Department of State, a detailed statement of the manner in which the expenditures herein authorized are made by them respectively.

Mr. BANKS. I move to amend by adding to the fourth paragraph of the joint resolution the words "without compensation;" so that the additional commissioners to be appointed shall be required to serve without compensation. I also move to amend the second resolution by striking out the several sums therein named, and inserting at the end of the resolution a clause appropriating for all the purposes named the sum of $50,000. And now I call the previous question on the joint resolution and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BANKS. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; which was on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. BAKER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 108, nays 49, not voting 34; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Buckland, Chandler, Sidney Clarke, Cooper, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Garfield, Goodyear, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Hogan, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Hulburd, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Ketcham, Koontz, Kuykendall, Lafin, Latham, Lynch, Marquette, Marston, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, Moorhead, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Phelps, Plants, Pomeroy, Radford, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Spaulding, Starr, Stilwell, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Thornton, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, James F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, Woodbridge, and Wright—108.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Beaman, Benjamin, Bergen, Broomall, Bundy, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Dawson, Denison, Eckley, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Hawkins, Hise, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Jones, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Leftwich, Loan, Mercer, Miller, Pike, Ritter, Rollins, Rousseau, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Stevens, Stokes, Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Andrew H. Ward, Williams, and Stephen F. Wilson—49.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Brandegee, Conkling, Culver, Deffrees, Deming, Dumont, Eldridge, Farquhar, Harris, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Humphrey, Kelso, Kerr, Longyear, Marshall, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, McKuer, Morrill, Morris, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Price, Samuel J. Randall, Rogers, Ross, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Taber, John L. Thomas, and Elihu B. Washburne—34.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BANKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INSPECTION OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. KASSON, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 204) entitled "An act to provide for an annual inspection into Indian affairs, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference could not agree, and ask to be discharged from its further consideration.

JOHN A. KASSON,
ROBERT C. SCHENCK,
WILLIAM WINDOM,
Managers on the part of the House.
JAMES R. DOOLITTLE,
SAMUEL C. POMEROY,
ALEXANDER G. CATTELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, before the question is taken, I wish to submit a single observation on this subject. Since William Penn made a treaty with the Indians about two centuries ago, we in this country have pursued the policy of treating these tribes as foreign nations. This policy, practiced by the Government of the United States, has resulted in an annual expenditure of millions from the national Treasury. This practice has been pursued without the consideration or consent of this House; and it may yet be necessary for the House to assert its right to a voice in the administration of these matters by refusing to sanction the necessary appropriations until the Senate and the House can come to accord upon this subject, and treat the Indians as all other nations on this continent have treated them—as wards of the Government, and not as foreign nations.

The report was agreed to.

PUBLIC AFFAIRS IN MARYLAND.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I move a suspension of the rules to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the papers in the case of the investigation by the Committee on the Judiciary, pursuant to the order of the House, concerning public affairs in the State of Maryland, be placed in the custody of the Clerk of the House, to be by him submitted to the Fortieth Congress.

The motion to suspend the rules was agreed to; and the question was on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to amend the resolution so as to allow the chairmen of all the committees to do the same thing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. F. THOMAS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON ORDINANCE.

Mr. MARSTON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring.) That the following be added to the Joint Rules of the two Houses, namely:

Rule.—There shall be appointed a joint Committee on Ordinance, consisting of three members of the Senate and three members of the House, to whom shall be referred all matters in relation to ordinance and ordinance stores which shall come in question and be referred to them by either House, and whose duty it shall also be to report from time to time such measures in reference to those subjects as to the said committee may seem advisable.

Mr. MARSTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN AFFAIRS IN COLORADO.

Mr. HART, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted evidence taken in regard to the management of Indian affairs in the Territory of Colorado; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

DONAHUE, RYAN AND SECOR.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution No. 141, for the relief of Donahue, Ryan & Secor, builders of the iron-clad monitor Camanche.

Mr. WARD, of New York. I object.

Mr. HIGBY. I move to suspend the rules. The House refused to suspend the rules.

ELIAS BEALE.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill No. 584, for the relief of Elias Beale, late captain company H, eighth regiment Tennessee volunteer infantry. The House Committee on Military Affairs recommend its passage. It is perhaps not technically within the law, but the truth is the man served all the time as a captain while receiving the pay of a private.

The bill provides that the Paymaster General of the United States Army be authorized and directed to settle and pay, out of any money appropriated or hereafter to be appropriated for the payment of the Army, the account of Elias Beale, late a captain of company H, eighth regiment Tennessee volunteer infantry, for his services and all allowances as captain in said regiment in the service of the United States, from the 25th of July, 1863, to the 30th of June, 1865, being to the time he was mustered out of said service, deducting from the same all moneys that have been paid to him as a private in said service during said time.

There was no objection; and the bill was taken up, read a first and second time, and ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HALL J. KELLEY.

Mr. THAYER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported adversely on the petition of Hall J. Kelley, of Massachusetts, for a land grant; and the same was laid on the table.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

The SPEAKER. Several members desire to have leave granted to them to withdraw certain papers from the files of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

ENLARGEMENT OF THE PUBLIC GROUNDS.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds Senate bill No. 386, to enlarge the public grounds surrounding the Capitol.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I object.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I move to suspend the rules.

The rules were not suspended.

FOX RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. SLOAN moved to suspend the rules to take up Senate joint resolution No. 142, construing and giving effect to a joint resolution entitled "A resolution for the relief of the State of Wisconsin," approved July 1, 1864.

Objection was made.

The rules were not suspended.

PERMISSION TO RECORD VOTES.

Mr. DRIGGS. I have been absent from the House for several days on account of sickness, and I ask the unanimous consent of the House to record my vote on the passage of the two bills vetoed by the President.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the same privilege will be accorded to other members who were absent and desire to record their votes on the same bills.

Mr. THAYER. I make the stipulation that it shall not change the result.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it will not.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

EXPLANATION.

The SPEAKER. A few minutes ago the Chair stated that the President had signed the Army appropriation bill and the tariff bill relating to wool and woollens. On further examination he finds that the bill which was signed was that putting lastings, mohair cloth, &c., on the free list which was introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ALLEY.] [Laughter.] The bill in regard to wool and woollens has not been signed.

The Chair will also state that the President has signed the deficiency appropriation bill and the bankrupt bill. [Applause.]

COMMITTEE TO WAIT ON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. DAWES moved that a committee of two be appointed, in conjunction with a like committee on the part of the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States, to inform him that the Thirty-Ninth Congress was ready to adjourn, and to inquire whether he had any further communication to make to them.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed Mr. DAWES and Mr. LE BLOND as the committee on the part of the House.

DOCUMENTS OF RETIRING MEMBERS.

Mr. MAYNARD. I am desired by several members to appeal to gentlemen here who will be members of the next Congress, in respect to the undistributed public documents to which the retiring members of this Congress are entitled, but which they will not receive unless some action is had upon the subject by the next Congress.

I am aware that a resolution was passed by this House cutting off retiring members from the documents which they would otherwise receive. I submit that it is a matter of a good deal of importance to some members, and I take this opportunity as I am desired, so that it may go on the record, to ask of the Speaker his construction of the resolution which was passed the other day; whether a simple resolution of the next Congress would have the effect to repeal it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not undertake to anticipate what the Speaker of the Fortieth Congress will decide. The question will come within his province, and it is not within the province of the Speaker of the present Congress.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I think the Speaker would be perfectly safe in anticipating. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. It has been suggested as a reason why the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee may be offered, that a similar resolution was adopted in the Thirty-Ninth Congress in reference to documents for members of the Thirty-Eighth Congress. I merely wish to say that that resolution was not introduced until after the expiration of the franking privilege of the members of the Thirty-Eighth Congress, so that their documents would have been of no use to them for electioneering purposes. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is reminded by the statement of the gentleman from Indiana that the resolution to which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] has alluded, which rescinded a previous resolution in regard to giving books to outgoing members, was not introduced until after the 1st of December subsequent to the close of those members terms; at which time their franking privilege had ceased.

Mr. MAYNARD. A precedent occurs to me in the action of the Thirty-Seventh Congress in the passage of a resolution in regard to public documents—

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. That related only to the documents of rebels, I think.

Mr. HIGBY. I suggest that the Speaker be requested to advise with the Speaker of the Fortieth Congress and to ascertain his opinion in regard to this matter. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know who will be the Speaker of the Fortieth Congress. That officer is not yet in existence.

Mr. SCOFIELD. We are ahead of the Chair. We do know. [Laughter.]

Mr. HIGBY. I call for the regular order.

GREAT FALLS ICE COMPANY.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour of Saturday has now commenced. [Laughter.] The pending bill is an act incorporating the Great Falls Ice Company.

Mr. BLAINE. That is a very cool proposition at this time of day. [Laughter.]

Mr. THAYER. I move to postpone its consideration until this day week.

Mr. HIGBY. Is this the 2d day of March?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the second parliamentary day of March.

Mr. PRICE. Would it be in order to send for an Almanac to determine what day this is? [Laughter.]

Mr. FINCK. Is that a House bill?

The SPEAKER. No; it is a Senate bill. The morning hour cannot be interrupted, except by suspending the rules.

BANKING BILL.

Mr. HOOPER. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up the banking bill, which was made a special order for the 18th of December, and has not yet been reached. [Cries of "No! No!"]

The question was taken; and (two thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

GREAT FALLS ICE COMPANY—AGAIN.

The SPEAKER. The pending bill is Senate bill No. 64, incorporating the Great Falls Ice Company of Washington, in the District of Columbia.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Has that bill been before any committee of the House?

The SPEAKER. It has been reported by the Committee for the District of Columbia under the call for bills of a private nature, within the last forty hours, and the Clerk states that it was then read. It cannot be read again. It is reported with an amendment which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. Be it further enacted, That the stockholders in this corporation shall be individually liable for any and all debts contracted or incurred by said corporation, to the amount of their individual stock.

Mr. WELKER. I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. That will carry the bill with it.

Mr. BEAMAN. I hope that will not be done.

The motion was agreed to.

So the bill was laid on the table.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. MERCUR, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported adversely on the bill (H. R. No. 112) to establish and limit the rate of interest on money in the District of Columbia, and moved that the same be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

PAY OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. LATHAM. I move to suspend the rules, that I may offer the following resolution for consideration at this time:

Resolved, That the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE], a member of the Judiciary Committee, be, and he is hereby, authorized to report from said committee the bill referred to the same providing for a reduction of the salary of members of Congress, and to put the same upon its passage. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia, to suspend the rules to allow him to submit this resolution.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I desire to say a word upon it.

Mr. PRICE. I raise the point of order, that it is not in order for the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] to report that bill to the House for action until he shall have purified himself by paying back into the Treasury the extra salary which he has received. My point is that he must first remove the beam from his own eye before he troubles himself about taking out the mote that is in his brother's eye. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. LATHAM. I rise to a point of order. A motion to suspend the rules is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The question is upon suspending the rules.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORENEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed a resolution appointing a committee of two members to join such committee as might be appointed by the House, to wait upon the President and inform him that having transacted the business before them, they desired to know if he had any further communication to make to Congress.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. R. No. 509) to amend certain acts in relation to the Navy;

An act (S. R. No. 634) relating to brevets in the Army of the United States;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 148) presenting the thanks of Congress to Cyrus W. Field; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 184) authorizing Gustavus V. Fox, late Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and the officers of the iron-clad Miantonomah and gunboat Augusta to accept presents tendered them by the Emperor of Russia.

PAY OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS—AGAIN.

The question was taken on Mr. LATHAM's motion to suspend the rules; and there were—yeas 140, nays 23, not voting 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Ancona, Anderson, Arnell, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Bromwell, Buckland, Bundy, Campbell, Chandler, Reader W. Randall, Raymond, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, and Elihu B. Washburne—27.

Before the result of the vote was announced, the hour of twelve o'clock m. having arrived, the Speaker delivered the following

VALEDICTORY ADDRESS.

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives:

To be called to this responsible position by the voluntary choice of my fellow-members more than fills the measure of an honorable ambition. To be cordially supported by those of all political creeds, amid the exciting scenes so frequent in a body of American legislators, is an evidence of confidence and regard I shall prize to the latest moment of my life. But to be indorsed by you all in the resolution you have spread on your Journal, and which you have adopted with such unusual significance and earnestness, beggars me in words of thanks. To be able to retire from this chair when laying down its emblem of authority, with none to reproach me, on the one hand, for infidelity to the principles I cherish, and none on the other to impugn or deny the rigid impartiality with which I have striven to administer your rules, has been my earnest and daily endeavor in the years that now are garnered with the past.

The greatest of my official predecessors, whose memory is still enshrined in so many hearts, and who eminently honored this chair, declared as the essential of a Presiding Officer promptitude and impartiality in deciding the complex questions of order often sprung instantaneously upon him; firmness and thoroughness in his decisions; patience and good temper toward every member; and, above all, to remain cool and unshaken amid the storms of debate and during those moments of agitation from which no deliberative assembly is exempt, carefully guarding the rules of the House from being sacrificed to temporary passions, prejudices, or interests. Never hoping to reach this high standard, it has been ever before my mind, as the sculptor studies the model of the great master of his art, hoping to leave behind him a copy not entirely unworthy of the original.

Though death has not spared our circle, and New York, Kentucky, and Pennsylvania have been called to mourn the loss of faithful Representatives, we come to this closing hour with our ranks thinned less than usual by paralyzing sickness or wasting disease. We separate, after months of the conflicts and excitements of an eventful era, with a general good will as gratifying as it is creditable. We can never all meet again. But as in a distant landscape the eye rests with delight on its beauties, while its defects are thrown into unnoticed shade, my memory, as in after years we review our associations here, bring before us all the pleasures of this companionship in the national service, forgetful of the asperities which should perish with the occasions that evoked them!

But as these parting words are said, another Congress wait for our seats; and with a heart full of gratitude for your unvarying kindness, I declare the House of Representatives of the Thirty-Ninth Congress of the United States adjourned without day. [Prolonged applause.]

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. CULLOM: Six separate petitions of citizens of McLean county, Illinois, asking Congress to repeal the law authorizing the withdrawal of the legal-tender currency from circulation.

By Mr. HUNTER: Concurrent resolution of the Legislature of New York, urging the granting of pensions to the soldiers of the war of 1812.

By Mr. PERHAM: The memorial of Ebenezer Childs, for increase of pension.

By Mr. PRICE: The petition of citizens of Clinton county, Iowa, asking for relief to Mrs. Abigail Harvey.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 23, 1867.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. POLAND, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

Mr. CHANDLER presented resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, ratifying the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, submitted to the several States by a joint resolution of Congress, passed on the 18th day of June, 1866, to be designated article fourteen of Amendments to the Constitution; which were ordered to lie on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MORGAN presented two petitions of cigar manufacturers of Albany, New York, praying that a specific tax of five dollars per thousand may be levied upon all domestic cigars, and that the present duty on imported cigars may remain unchanged; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of citizens of the United States, praying for such an amendment of the Constitution as will prohibit legislation in any State or Territory which shall make a distinction among the citizens thereof on account of birth, race, or color; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BUCKALEW presented a petition of the officers of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the repeal of the law which allows the importation of books and maps intended for colleges and other literary institutions free of duty; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FOGG presented resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of New Hampshire soldiers, held in Manchester, in that State, on the 6th day of February, 1867, remonstrating against the passage of any act for equalization of soldiers' bounties which shall deduct the amount of local bounties from the Government allowance; which were ordered to lie on the table; and a motion by Mr. Fogg that the resolutions be printed was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. NORTON presented a petition of citizens of Minnesota, praying for the establishment of a mail route from Mankato to Minnesota Lake; which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of an increase of the duty on imported wool; which were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. RAMSEY presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of a survey of the Mississippi river between the falls of St. Anthony and St. Cloud, with the view of an improvement of the navigation of that river between those points; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. TRUMBULL presented resolutions of the Legislature of Illinois, in favor of a survey of the Des Moines rapids of the Mississippi river, with a view to their improvement by the construction of a canal; which were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

CAPTAIN JOHN J. YOUNG.

Mr. CRAGIN. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 682) for the relief of Captain John J. Young, of the United States Navy, have directed me to report it without amendment, and recommend its passage; and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If this is the time for reports, as there are many reports to be made I shall feel obliged to object.

Mr. RAMSEY. This is a House bill, and will not take a moment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There are a great many other bills on the Calendar just as urgent and meritorious as this, and I want to make some reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the present consideration of this bill? None being made the bill will be read.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which requires the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and allow to Captain John J. Young, of the Navy of the United States, the pay of captain of the "retired list" of the Navy of the United States, from the 12th of August, 1854, the date of his commission as captain, to the 10th of March, 1865, deducting therefrom all moneys which have been paid to him by the United States between the dates above given.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the memorial of Rear Admiral David D. Porter on the subject, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill, (S. No. 624,) granting a pension to — Heap, widow of Major D. P. Heap, late a paymaster in the United States Army.

The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 621) for the relief of Charles Rumsey, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1207) granting a pension to Charles Maus, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills and joint resolutions, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 1068) for the relief of Mary A. Cross;

A bill (H. R. No. 1092) for the relief of Milton Velzy;

A bill (H. R. No. 1153) for the relief of Mrs. Rachel McClelland;

A bill (H. R. No. 1189) granting arrears of pension to Sally Allen;

A bill (H. R. No. 1190) granting a pension to Mary Fitzpatrick;

A bill (H. R. No. 1191) increasing the pension of Isabella Fogg;

A bill (H. R. No. 1192) granting arrears of pension to Lewis A. Horton;

A bill (H. R. No. 1193) for the relief of Levisa A. Daniel;

A bill (H. R. No. 1194) granting back pension to Mary J. Dexter;

A bill (H. R. No. 1195) for the relief of Mary B. Fowler;

A bill (H. R. No. 1196) granting a pension to Peter Fisher;

A bill (H. R. No. 1197) for the relief of Charles Valence;

A bill (H. R. No. 1198) for the relief of the children of John Faris;

A bill (H. R. No. 1199) for the relief of William H. Hafer;

A bill (H. R. No. 1200) for the relief of Ann I. Duchman;

A bill (H. R. No. 1201) for the relief of George W. Knabb;

A bill (H. R. No. 1202) for the relief of Francis Barron;

A bill (H. R. No. 1203) for the relief of Rufus L. Harvey;

A bill (H. R. No. 1204) granting a pension to John Rogers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1205) granting a pension to William Gleason;

A bill (H. R. No. 1206) granting a pension to Joseph Wrenn;

A bill (H. R. No. 1208) increasing the pension of John Russell;

A bill (H. R. No. 1209) granting a back pension to Margaret Boucher;

A bill (H. R. No. 1210) increasing the pension of Levi M. Roberts;

A bill (H. R. No. 1211) granting a pension to Effie J. Harvey;

A bill (H. R. No. 1212) for the relief of Nancy Hinton;

A bill (H. R. No. 1213) for the relief of Elizabeth Staley;

A bill (H. R. No. 1214) for the relief of Daniel McMahon;

A bill (H. R. No. 1215) for the relief of Thomas Glasgow;

A bill (H. R. No. 1216) granting a pension to Mary Hosea;

A bill (H. R. No. 1217) granting a pension to David B. Champion;

A bill (H. R. No. 1218) for the relief of James Riddle;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 265) for the relief of Virginia S. Wilson, widow of the late Captain George W. Wilson;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 295) for the relief of Daniel Cole; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 296) for the relief of the orphan children of William Whelan.

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 622) to repeal the provisions of law authorizing the introduction of foreign goods into the United States without inspection at the usual ports of entry; which was read and passed to a second reading.

He also presented a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, directed to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, relating to the subject-matter of the bill last mentioned; which was ordered to be printed, to accompany the bill.

He also, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1166) to authorize the building of light-houses therein mentioned, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Susan Ten Eyck Williamson, reported a bill (S. No. 623) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan Ten Eyck Williamson; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 609) allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into the port of Albany to be secured and paid at that place, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 463) for the relief of Rev. Samuel M. Beatty, of Ohio, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1096) for the relief of J. & O. P. Cobb & Co., reported it without amendment.

BUSINESS OF PENSION COMMITTEE.

Mr. LANE. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions to ask the Senate to adopt the following order:

Resolved, That the Senate will have a special session, commencing at seven o'clock p. m. on Tuesday, February 23, for the purpose of considering bills from the Committee on Pensions.

I will state to the Senate that it will not take perhaps over an hour or an hour and a half. There are a great many hard cases, the bare recital of which is enough to bring tears from any sensitive heart. There are thirty-eight pension bills from the House of Representatives, and it will not take over an hour or an hour and a quarter to pass them all.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

IRON-CLAD ONONDAGA.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that all prior orders be suspended, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 614. It will not take more than a minute.

Mr. SUMNER. What is that bill?

Mr. GRIMES. Its title is "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transfer the United States iron-clad Onondaga to George Quintard, of New York."

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Navy to deliver to George Quintard, of New York, for his own use and behoof, the United States iron-clad Onondaga, upon payment by him, his heirs and assigns, to the Treasury of the United States of the sum of $759,673.

Mr. GRIMES. I ought, in justice to myself and to the committee that authorized me to report this bill, to state that this vessel was built by Mr. Quintard, has been in service some years, and he proposes to take her from the Government again at the same price that he has been paid for her, namely, $759,673, the sum specified in the bill, and that the Navy Department say that "it is thought with this money a more satisfactory vessel could be built, and no objection is known to returning her to the owner if the money is refunded." It thereby relieves the Government also of a large claim that Mr. Quintard has against the Government for an excess of cost over and above the amount of his contract.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 489.

Mr. CONNESS. I have got some morning business that I should like to dispose of before we proceed to the consideration of other business on special motion. I should like to know whether it is in order. I desire to offer a joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has called for petitions and reports of committees. The Senator from Iowa then moved that the Senate postpone the present and all prior orders, and proceed to the consideration of a bill; which the Senate voted to do. Now, according to the practice of the Senate it will be in order for the Chair to call for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions; but the Senator from Kansas moves to postpone the present and all prior orders, and the Chair will feel bound to entertain the motion. Otherwise he would call for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, that being in order under the rules for morning business.

Mr. CONNESS. I propose that we go on and finish the morning business before Senators call up bills.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to make a report.

Mr. POMEROY. It is usual, under the practice of the Senate, that a motion such as I have made be entertained, and if carried then to allow the business thus taken up to be laid aside informally to dispose of the morning business. I should have no objection to that course.

Mr. CONNESS. I think we had better get through with the morning business, and then let gentlemen call up their bills. This taking a mortgage on the time of the Senate is hardly in order.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We have already passed one bill.

Mr. CONNESS. That is no reason why the practice should be continued.

Mr. POMEROY. The bill to which I allude is of very great importance to the State that I have the honor in part to represent, and it must go to the House of Representatives to become a law. It is very important that it should be disposed of at this session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas move to postpone the present and all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him?

Mr. POMEROY. I made the motion, but I will withdraw it to allow reports to be made:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order, but the Chair will receive reports, if they are offered.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FESSENDEN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1126) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 625) to amend an act entitled "An act concerning the Fire Department of Washington city," approved February 18, 1867; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

INTER-OCEANIC SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. CONNESS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 181) concerning the right of way for the survey and construction of an inter-oceanic ship-canal through the Isthmus of Darien; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CONNESS. I should like to get the present consideration of this resolution. No Senator can have any objection to it, and it will occupy no more time than is consumed in its reading. It is important that it should be passed at once. I think the whole Senate will concede that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. CONNESS. I do. It will only occupy two minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider it at this time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I shall be compelled to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it lies over under the rule.

PAYMENTS TO LOYAL PERSONS.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 222.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator move to postpone all prior orders to consider his bill?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do; and I will make a little statement why I do it. I do it, and I object to the resolution of the Senator from California, not because I am opposed to giving unanimous consent, but it is the only opportunity I can get in the struggle to get the floor and to be in order to make the motion. I hope he will have the opportunity to present his resolution. I am not opposed to the resolution because I do not know what is in it; but it is simply because I see no other way to get a motion to consider the bills I have in charge before the Senate but to interfere against unanimous consent.

Mr. POMEROY. I yielded the motion which I made that the morning business might be completed. I did not suppose that I would be denied the privilege of introducing my measure and pressing it to a vote as soon as the morning business was disposed of.

Mr. CONNESS. I feel bound to express my obligations to the Senator from Kansas. I felt if anybody was entitled to the floor he was. The Senator from Illinois got the floor in another manner entirely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved to postpone all prior orders, and to proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 222.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 222) prohibiting payments by any officer of the Government to any person not known to have been opposed to the rebellion and in favor of its suppression.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported the joint resolution with an amendment, to strike out in lines nine, ten, and eleven, the words "or in favor of any person who during said rebellion was not known to be opposed thereto, and distinctly in favor of its suppression."

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is due to myself to state that I was not in favor of striking out those words. A majority of the committee were. The effect of striking out the words is simply to change the burden of proof. As the resolution comes from the House, before the Government would be authorized to pay, it must appear affirmatively that the party asking the payment had been loyal and true to the Union. If those words are stricken out, then the Government is prohibited to pay to any one who took part in the rebellion. The question is, whether it must appear affirmatively that the man was a loyal man before you can pay a claim which originated against the Government of the United States before the rebellion. There are cases, as I am informed, where parties had claims against the Government of the United States before the rebellion for services, perhaps in the Army, and subsequently joined the rebellion. The object of this resolution is to prevent the Government of the United States paying those parties and any of those claimants, although they may be pardoned now. The Committee on the Judiciary recommended an amendment to the resolution to strike out the words which have been read. Those words which are recommended to be stricken out require it to affirmatively appear that the party was loyal to the Government. That would leave the resolution then forbidding payment to any person who took part in the rebellion.

Mr. HOWE. That is right.

Mr. TRUMBULL. But then the resolution as it passed the House goes further. It prohibits the payment to any person who took part in the rebellion, or who was not known to be loyal to the Government.

Mr. JOHNSON. The law is very well settled, recognized as such by the Supreme Court, by all the members of that court, that the general rule of law is, that a pardon reinstates the party pardoned to the condition in which he was before the offense was committed, and authorizes him to sue, therefore, to recover a debt which he would not have been authorized to sue for without a pardon. This joint resolution upon your table as it came from the House, as it now stands, changes that rule; and it is for the Senate to say whether they will by law, defeat the effect which a pardon has under the law as it stands now. The claims that are to be prosecuted, and are now being prosecuted, are not claims against the Government arising during the existence of the rebellion, but arising antecedent to the rebellion, and claims, therefore, which but for the rebellion the Government would have been bound to pay, and would have paid. The majority of the committee thought that if it was proper to take from these parties, at least those who were pardoned, the right to sue, which the pardon of itself would give independent of any legislation, it was not right to subject them to the necessity of proving affirmatively that they were not in a condition to prosecute the claim. We supposed that the Government, if it denied the right of the claimant to recover the amount, ought to take upon itself the burden of establishing the grounds upon which that denial could be placed. As the honorable chairman has correctly stated, the whole effect of the amendment is to change what is called the onus of proof; the fact to be proved, and upon the existence of which the claim may or may not be allowed upon the Government, instead of placing it, as the House resolution did, upon the claimant.

The joint resolution, in my view of it, can only be maintained upon the authority which Congress has to refuse to pay a debt, whether just or unjust. No claims upon the Treasury can be paid without an appropriation, and Congress having the supreme authority to decide whether they will appropriate or not they have a right, so far as the question of power is concerned, to refuse to pay any claim. If the measure merely provided that the parties in the predicament in which these parties are supposed to be should not be at liberty to sue in the courts of the United States, then I am satisfied the courts would hold that the law in that particular was not obligatory, and that they would be entitled to sue; I mean those of them who have had granted to them the clemency of the Executive. In my view, therefore, as far as that class of the parties to be affected by the resolution is concerned, it is, although constitutional, because no money can be paid without the consent of Congress, obnoxious to the objection that Congress are refusing to pay debts which the courts of the country, if there was jurisdiction given to the courts over such controversies, would enable the claimants to recover.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is a little difficult to understand from the phraseology of this resolution what will be its effect. I recollect to have asked the Senator from Illinois, the chairman of the committee, when the committee was investigating it, what was the purpose of it. As I understood from him, the main object was to prevent the payment of any claims to military men for services prior to the war when the claimants themselves had gone into the rebellion. Of course I had no objection if that was the effect of the resolution, and would have no objection to it now. But if that is the class of cases to be reached, there is no need of the language of the resolution which the committee has recommended to strike out, because it is known to the Department, of course, what was the position, during the war, of the military men who belonged to the Army. There is no need of a provision which is against the policy of the law. It has never been the law of any country that a man shall be required to prove himself innocent. He is required to take an oath, we have the assurance of that, in presenting his claims. I was in favor of the amendment. The committee was unanimous, I thought, upon it; but the Senator from Illinois says he did not concur in the amendment proposed by the committee. I think the committee's amendment is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOGG. I have an amendment which I wish to offer. It is to insert at the end of the joint resolution the following proviso:

Provided, That this joint resolution shall not be construed to prohibit the payment of claims founded upon contracts made by any Department where such claims were assigned, or contracted to be assigned, prior to April 1, 1861, to creditors of said contractors, loyal citizens of loyal States, in payment of debts incurred prior to March 1, 1861.

The honorable Senator from Illinois assents to that amendment. I think there is no objection to it. It is not inconsistent with the general provisions of the joint resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. I offer an amendment, to insert after the word "rebellion" in the ninth line, these words:

Or in favor of any person who does not prove to the satisfaction of the proper accounting officers that he was opposed to the rebellion and distinctly in favor of its suppression.

Mr. President, I thought those words reported by the committee ought to be stricken out of the resolution, because they seemed to be indefinite, and not because they seemed to impose upon the claimant the burden of proving his loyalty. It does not seem to me a very heavy burden to lay upon the shoulders of one who claims money out of the Treasury to require him to show that he is a friend, and has been during the war a friend of the Government. Indeed, that is required now by almost all the laws upon your statute-books. You do require them to show that they have been loyal before you allow a dollar to be paid to them. The words which I have proposed to insert here will require no more than that. The expressions employed are rather more explicit than have been adopted heretofore; and my experience upon the Committee on Claims has satisfied me that it is necessary to be a little more explicit. Loyalty is a sort of sentiment, and a sentiment is a very difficult thing to prove, to establish by evidence. The language used here requires the claimant to show that he was opposed to the rebellion and that he was in favor of its suppression; and any man who was actuated by those views can usually establish the fact.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the policy of the resolution itself is exceedingly objectionable to the loyal citizens of the loyal States, as they have been termed. The interest which they have, many of them, is because they are creditors of the southern people, and the means in part which their debtors will have at their command to meet their debts are what they will be able to realize from their claims. You have already adopted an amendment at the instance of the honorable member from New Hampshire, which saves the right to prosecute the claim as against the Government and makes it obligatory upon the Government to pay the claim, if it should turn out to be just, where it has been assigned to some loyal citizen.

Mr. HOWE. Before the rebellion.

Mr. JOHNSON. Before the rebellion. But whether it is assigned before or after the rebellion is immaterial. I knew when I was officially in New Orleans as a kind of representative of the Government that a great many of the claims which were supposed to be good claims against the Government had been assigned, and that the creditors at the North were looking to the funds to be received, because of that assignment, as in many cases the only funds out of which they expected to be paid. Now, it would seem to me to be quite objectionable to say that the Government of the United States would confiscate debts because as between the mere creditor and the Government the creditor had at one time been subject to the offense of treason, or had attempted to destroy the Government, to the injury of the loyal creditor of that creditor. That is the effect. Just in proportion as you impoverish the people of the South, just in that proportion do you injure the people of the North.

Mr. SUMNER. It seems to me that on this question the opinion of the chairman of the Committee on Claims, who has a peculiar experience in this body, ought to prevail. If I had any doubt of the propriety of the amendment I beg to say that I should follow his suggestion. I shall gladly vote for it.

Mr. HOWE. I think we had better have the yeas and nays on this question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOWE. I will merely say once more to the Senate that the principle recognized in the amendment is a principle recognized in a dozen statutes which you have enacted since 1861; the principle of requiring a man, who demands money out of the public Treasury, to establish the fact of his friendship for the Government, his allegiance; and this is applied, not to current transactions, but it is applied to a class of suspended claims, and for the most part claims which have been suspended by reason of the war.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope the amendment will be adopted. I think it nothing unreasonable to require a man to show that he has been loyal to the Government.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I ask for the reading of the joint resolution as it stands without this amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, &c. That until otherwise ordered it shall be unlawful for any officer of the United States Government to pay any account, claim, or demand against said Government, which accrued or existed prior to the 13th day of April, A. D. 1861, in favor of any person who promoted, encouraged, or in any manner sustained the late rebellion; and no pardon heretofore granted, or hereafter to be granted, shall authorize the payment of such account, claim, or demand until this resolution is modified or repealed.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I understand that the resolution without this amendment will stand as the Clerk has read it, and it will then make a proper discrimination, conformed to the convenience of the Department in the settlement of accounts. Now, sir, the presumption will be, under the resolution as it stands, that persons who make claims from the insurrectionary States, shall prove to the Department that they sustained a loyal attitude during the war; but that presumption will not apply to claims from the State of Maine or from Wisconsin or from Oregon or from other parts of the country where insurrection did not exist. That will be the state of the case; but the accounting officers, where objection is made against a claimant, may still require him, although resident in one of the northern or western States, to make proof that he sustained the Government during the war. The objection I have to the amendment is, that it casts an unnecessary burden upon all claimants against whom there is no presumption from general circumstances; that it embarrasses the operations of the Government unnecessarily; that it is not required for the protection of the Treasury or for the vindication of the national honor. I called for the reading of the resolution in order that it may be apparent to every Senator in voting on this subject that an amendment of this kind is unnecessary to exclude persons who have taken part in the war against the Government, from prosecuting their claims against it. The resolution is complete as against them.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted yeas 25, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Conness, Creswell, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Howard, Howe, Morgan, Morrill, Patterson, Pomeroy, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, Williams, and Wilson—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Hendricks, and Johnson—6.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Cattell, Cragin, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Poland, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Stewart, and Yates—21.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

MURDER OF UNION SOLDIERS IN THE SOUTH.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That five thousand copies of the report of the select Committee of the House appointed to investigate the Murder of Union Soldiers in the South, with accompanying evidence, be printed for the use of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1039, being the Indian appropriation bill. The time has nearly arrived.

Mr. WADE. Mr. President—

Mr. SHERMAN. Let this bill be taken up, and then I will yield to anything until one o'clock.

Mr. WADE. I want to get up a bill which I have been trying for a long time to get up for the settlement of a controversy in Montana.

Mr. SHERMAN. My colleague can get that up at some other time.

Mr. WADE. There is a perfect state of anarchy there, and this bill certainly ought to pass. I have been endeavoring to get the floor for a long time to call it up, but have been totally unable to do so, and I do not know that I shall be able to do so this session. My lungs are strong enough, but I do not seem to have the luck to be heard.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Indian appropriation bill ought to be passed now, so that it may be engrossed. It is very large and bulky, and the differences between the two Houses ought to be reconciled as soon as possible. I therefore move to take up that bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope the Senator from Ohio will not call up that bill before one o'clock, at any rate.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the bill is taken up I will allow anything else to come up that can be passed by unanimous consent. You cannot pass a controverted bill before one o'clock.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We shall never pass any at all if we do not commence upon them.

Mr. SHERMAN. But one o'clock is the time set for this bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It will be time enough to call up the Indian bill then. I hope the Senate will not take it up in the morning hour.

NORTON'S MARKING AND CANCELING STAMP.

Mr. DIXON. I rise to a privileged question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY in the Chair.) The Senator from Connecticut will state his question of privilege.

Mr. DIXON. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider, if it is in order, and if I am not too late, the vote on the passage of the bill (S. No. 582) to provide for the payment of past and future use, and purchase of the invention and patent upon "post-marking of letters, packets, &c., and for the cancellation of postage stamps thereon," made by and patented to Marcus P. Norton, Troy, New York, April 14, 1863, and reissued August 23, 1864. I desire to move the passage of a resolution directing the Secretary to request the House of Representatives to return that bill. I will state to the Senate that I find that since the passage of the bill Mr. Norton, as attorney for other parties who, he says, own the patent, has brought a petition in the Court of Claims for some $400,000 for the past use of this same patent; I had very great doubts at the time whether the bill ought to pass, but I submitted to the opinion of the committee. If it comes before the Senate again, I doubt whether the Senate will agree to the sum of money named in it. I will inquire if I am too late?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the bill was passed on the 20th. If his information is correct, the time for its reconsideration has expired, and the Senator is too late.

Mr. DIXON. Then I hope notice will be taken of it in some other place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. GRIMES. I will inquire whether or not the bill alluded to by the Senator from Connecticut as it passed contained a provision that the sum of money voted should be taken in the discharge of all claims? Was there not such a provision?

Mr. CONNESS. Certainly. I think it is unfair that an impression should be made against this bill in the manner attempted by the Senator from Connecticut. I do not know nor cannot know until the Globe appears—which will now be many days—what the Senator said, as he spoke in a low voice, but it appears that he intimates there is something unfair about this matter. The subject received a very thorough consideration, and the appropriation made was not only for past uses but for future uses of the patent, and I am not disappointed to know that unless the right to use the patent is obtained a suit will be brought and an enormous claim established against the Government. It was to avoid that that the bill was passed.

Mr. DIXON. I desire barely to say to the Senator from California—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no question of that character before the Senate.

Mr. DIXON. I did not charge any unfairness. I suppose it is perfectly fair for these parties to get all they can out of the Government, but I think it is very well for the Senate to look into the proceedings further.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator made a charge in a manner as I think that it ought never to be made. He gave a hint that notice may be taken of some unfairness elsewhere, meaning the House of Representatives.

Mr. DIXON. I did not say that I hoped any notice would be taken of unfairness, but of the proceeding—

Mr. GRIMES. I think it is due to the Senator from Connecticut to say that the Senator from California misunderstood him. He did not allude to the House of Representatives, but alluded to the fact, that as he understood it, this gentleman had instituted proceedings in the Court of Claims for $400,000.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator from Iowa is mistaken or in error. At the conclusion of the Senator's remarks, as it will be seen from the report made, he said that since it was out of order here he hoped what he said would be taken notice of elsewhere.

INTER-OCEANIC SHIP-CANAL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. What is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill named by the Senator from Ohio, the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the honorable Senator allow me to have a vote of the Senate on the resolution I introduced this morning, which will excite no objection whatever.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not object, if it can be passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONNESS. I have no doubt it will. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration—

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope it will be taken up without any formal motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will proceed with the resolution by unanimous consent, if there is no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be read first to see if there is any objection.

The Secretary read the title of the resolution as follows: "A joint resolution (S. R. No. 181) concerning the right of way for the survey and construction of an inter-oceanic ship-canal through the Isthmus of Darien."

By unanimous consent the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of State to take such steps as may be necessary to obtain from the United States of Colombia the authority for the United States to make the necessary surveys at the Isthmus of Darien for a ship-canal to connect the waters of the Atlantic and those of the Pacific oceans, and also the right of way for such canal, should its practicability be demonstrated or the terms upon which such right of way may be obtained by the Government.

Mr. GRIMES. I will inquire where that comes from?

Mr. CONNESS. I will answer the Senator—

Mr. GRIMES. The last clause of it is what I particularly call attention to, authorizing the Secretary of State to adopt such measures as he may choose in order to acquire the right of way, if I understand it.

Mr. CONNESS. I will briefly state the case to the Senator and the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Do not debate it.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not propose to debate it. I think there can be no objection to it. I desire briefly to state—it will not take me a moment, and I do not wish to consume time—that an appropriation was made for this survey last year of $40,000, and the Secretary of State was urged by many leading gentlemen of the country, including the General of the Army, who takes a great interest in this subject, to obtain this leave from the United States of Colombia. It is found from a letter I hold in my hand from the Secretary of State that no steps have been taken by that functionary for the obtaining of this leave to survey nor the further steps necessary to the obtaining of the right of way. On the contrary, in his letter in answer to the resolution passed by the Senate calling upon him for information as to what steps he had taken, he replies that the minister of Colombia took the initiative in the matter, and laid a paper before the State Department offering the right of way, to which the Secretary of State says he and the President of the United States consented. That occurred on the 19th of March, 1866, and the Secretary of State, notwithstanding all the applications that were made to him on the subject to act in the premises, never took any further notice of the matter until the 23d of November last, when he addressed a note to the Colombian minister. From that time until the date of a resolution calling upon him for information he did nothing in the premises; and thus a year has passed during which these surveys might have been made. The purpose of this joint resolution is to direct the Secretary of State to proceed with this business and obtain the right to make this survey, and connected with that to ascertain the terms upon which a right of way can be obtained.

Mr. GRIMES. I think there is a word missing in the resolution.

Mr. CONNESS. In accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa I move to amend the resolution by striking out the words "also the right of way for such canal should its practicability be demonstrated or," so that it will read "and the terms upon which such right of way may be obtained by this Government."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the resolution read at length as it now stands.

The Secretary read the resolution as amended, as follows:

Resolved, &c. That the Secretary of State be and he is hereby, directed to take such steps as may be necessary to obtain from the United States of Colombia the authority for the United States to make the necessary surveys at the Isthmus of Darien for a ship-canal to connect the waters of the Atlantic with those of the Pacific ocean; and the terms upon which such right of way may be obtained by this Government.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill of the Senate (S. No. 467) to amend the act entitled "An act further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steam inspectors, and for other purposes," approved July 25, 1866.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 811, for the relief of certain drafted men.

The message also announced that Mr. N. P. BANKS, of Massachusetts, had been appointed a manager on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 904) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, in the place of Mr. J. F. FARNSWORTH, of Illinois, excused from service at said conference.

ENROLLED RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. R. No. 90) to provide for the ascertainment and apportionment of the proper quota of the direct tax of 1861 to the State of West Virginia, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY.) The Indian appropriation bill is now before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No.

1039) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1868.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest, in order to expedite business, that the amendments of the Committee on Finance be disposed of as they are reached in the reading of the bill. That is the usual course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection that course will be taken. The Chair hears no objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was on page 15, line three hundred and thirty-eight, to strike out "three" and insert "ten"; so that the clause will read:

For insurance and transportation of annuity goods and provisions, and iron and steel for blacksmiths, for the Chippewas of Red Lake and Pembina tribe, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 15, after line three hundred and forty-three, to insert the following:

For this amount, to pay the interest on certain non-paying stock, held in trust by the Secretary of the Treasury for the Chickasaw Indians, for the two fiscal years ending June 30, 1868, per tenth article treaty of April 23, 1866, $119,859 98.

Mr. SHERMAN. As this is an amendment involving a very large sum, if any Senator desires an explanation of it I am prepared to give it. Perhaps it is due to the committee to have the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, together with the papers accompanying it, read. I will ask that the letter of the Secretary of the Interior be read:

The Secretary read the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
WASHINGTON, D. C., February 9, 1867.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of this date, submitting an estimate of an appropriation to cover a deficiency on certain non-paying stocks held in trust by the Secretary of the Treasury for the benefit of the Chickasaw Indians, and respectfully commend the same to the favorable action of your committee, as the amount requested is needed to fulfill treaty stipulations with the said Indians.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. H. BROWNING,
Secretary.

Hon. W. P. FESSENDEN,
Chairman Committee on Finance, Senate United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have also a letter from the Treasurer and a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs showing that the money is justly due, and we must provide for it whatever may be said in regard to the treaties themselves. Unless Senators desire a further explanation, I will not consume the time of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 42, line nine hundred and seventy-eight, in a clause providing for a farmer for the Quapaws, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That the sum hereby appropriated for pay of farmer, as well as any unexpended balance heretofore appropriated for the same object, may, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be expended for subsistence, clothing, and such other useful articles as he may deem necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. There is a clerical error on page 42, line ten hundred and nineteen, in the name of a county in Iowa. It is printed "Tamer" in the bill. "Tama" is the name of the county.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The next amendment was on page 49, after line eleven hundred and eighty-one, to insert the following:

Lower Brules:

For first of five installments, being twenty-five dollars for each lodge or family engaged in agricultural pursuits on their reservation, (one hundred lodges,) to be expended in stock, agricultural and other implements, and improvements, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, the said stock, &c., to remain the property of the United States, to be used for the benefit of said lodges or families, and in no case to be sold or alienated by said band, per sixth article treaty of October 14, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, $2,500.

For pay of farmer, per sixth article treaty of October 14, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, $500.

For the erection of a blacksmith shop, per sixth article treaty of October 14, 1865, $500.

For the support of one blacksmith, and for tools, iron, and steel, and other articles necessary for the blacksmith shop, per sixth article treaty of October 14, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, $1,500.

Two Kettles:

For first of five installments, being twenty-five dollars for each lodge or family located on lands for agricultural purposes, (one hundred and thirteen lodges,) to be expended in agricultural implements and improvements, per fifth article treaty of October 19, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, $2,825.

Yanktonais:

For first of five installments, being twenty-five dollars for each family or lodge located on lands for agricultural purposes, (one hundred and fifteen lodges,) to be expended in agricultural implements and improvements, per fifth article treaty of October 20, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, $2,875.

Sans Arcs:

For first of five installments, being twenty-five dollars for each lodge or family located on lands for agricultural purposes, (thirty-eight lodges,) to be expended in agricultural implements and improvements, per fifth article treaty of October 20, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, $950.

Mr. SHERMAN. These are new items about which the Senate ought to be informed. The whole of them are included in the one treaty referred to in the amendment made recently, I believe at the last session of the Senate. The amendment is supported by ample documentary statements, which I presume it is hardly worth while to read unless the Senate desires to hear them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 58, line fourteen hundred and fourteen, to strike out the following proviso to the appropriations for the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Colorado:

Provided, That no part of said money shall be disbursed by Alexander Cummings, the present superintendent of Indian affairs for Colorado Territory.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know that there will be any difference of opinion in the Senate on this question. We thought it rather too important a bill to strike at an individual citizen, even if the House or Senate did not like him. Certainly it is very undignified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 63, after line fifteen hundred and thirty-seven, to insert the following:

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for transporting goods purchased for the Sioux of Dakota Indians, under treaty made at Fort Sully in October, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $4,901 82.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 64, after line fifteen hundred and forty-three, to insert the following:

Flatheads:

For this amount, to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the Flatheads and other confederated tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865, being the fifth installment for beneficial objects, under treaty of July 16, 1855, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 64, after line fifteen hundred and fifty, to insert the following:

Qui-nai-elts and Qui-leh-utes:

For this amount, to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, of the first of four installments on $25,000, stipulated to be paid the Qui-nai-elts and Qui-leh-utes, as per fourth article treaty of July 1, 1855, $300.

To supply a deficiency for funds heretofore appropriated on account of "Winnebago trust lands," and for the "Arapahoes and Cheyennes of Upper Arkansas river," under treaty stipulations, and which were lost by deposit in the Merchants' National Bank, at Washington, $33,037 02.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senate probably are aware of the general history of this amendment. It appears that a disbursing officer of the Indian department, under the general authority of law and the instructions given to him, deposited money in the Merchants' National Bank at Washington, which failed recently, and the money was lost. This amendment is to supply that deficiency. I have letters here showing the amount and the circumstances under which it occurred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The attention of the Senator is called to the phrase "the Winnebago trust lands" in line fifteen hundred and sixty, whether it should not be "trust funds."

Mr. SHERMAN. We followed the language furnished us, "to supply a deficiency, &c., on account of trust lands." The language of the appropriation is furnished by the Department, and I presume it is correct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 65, after line fifteen hundred and sixty-six, to strike out the following clause:

For expense of collecting and locating the Colorado river Indians in Arizona, on a reservation set apart for them by section first, act of March 3, 1865, including the expense of constructing a canal for irrigating said reservation, $50,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope my friend will let that pass over for the time being. The Committee on Indian Affairs think it would be improper, perhaps, to strike it out. We have some evidence on the subject which we intend to submit to the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; the vote need not be taken on that amendment now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over, unless objection be made.

The Secretary concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer an amendment, to insert on page 3, after line fifty-two:

Assiniboinces:
For first installment of annuity, to be expended at the discretion of the President in such articles, goods, and provisions as he may from time to time determine, $10,000 of which may be expended in the purchase of stock animals, agricultural implements, in instructing in agriculture and mechanical pursuits, in employing mechanics, in educating their children, providing necessary and proper medicines, and medical attendance, care for and support of their aged, infirm, and sick, for their helpless orphans, and in any other respect to promote their civilization, comfort, and improvement, and also for pay of head chief, per seventh article of treaty July 18, 1866—not yet ratified—and recommendation of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $30,000.

There are several amendments that I propose to offer upon this subject, and as an explanation of the whole matter perhaps I had better send to the Clerk a communication from the Department of the Interior, which may be read.

The Secretary read the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, January 26, 1867.

SIR: I have the honor to report upon the subject of the treaties made last year with Indian tribes inhabiting the country in northern Dakota and Montana, along the Missouri and Yellowstone rivers, which treaties, after having been transmitted to your Department from this office with a recommendation that they be sent to the President to be laid before the Senate, were informally returned at a recent date for further examination and report. These treaties are made respectively with the Crows at Fort Union, July 16, 1866, with the Assiniboinces at the same place July 18, 1866, and with the Arickarees, Gros Ventres, and Mandans (confederated) July 27, 1866.

I respectfully submit the following suggestions in regard to these treaties, in the order of their dates, referring to the maps herewith for a more clear understanding of the location of and cession made by the several tribes.

1. Crows. The country in which a right of occupancy has been heretofore conceded to the Crows lies south of the Missouri river, west of a line drawn from the head waters of the Powder river down that stream to its mouth, and thence north to the mouth of Milk river, east of a line drawn from the mouth of the Muscle Shell river southwesterly to the great bend of Yellowstone, and having an indefinite extension to the south. Besides this the Crows have a common right with the Blackfeet to an extensive country lying further west.

It is apparent that the great northern routes of travel to and from Montana, both by land and water, are through the country of the Crow Indians, and hence the necessity of a continuance of peaceable relations with them. By the treaty herewith these Indians yield the rights to roads and telegraph lines through their country, agreeing that they shall be unmolested. They promise to keep the peace toward the whites and toward other tribes, and they further cede to the Government the rights to reservations of ten miles square for depots or stations, at points to be selected at its discretion.

The Government agrees to give the Indians in return $25,000 per annum for twenty years after ratification of the treaty, of which $8,000 may be expended for stock animals, implements, education, &c., besides certain salaries to chiefs.

2. Assiniboinces. The country occupied by these Indians comprises, on the south side of the Missouri, the triangle formed by the Missouri and Yellowstone, and a line drawn from the mouth of Powder river to the mouth of Milk river, and on the north side of the Missouri it extends to and into the British Possessions, coming in contact to the eastward with the Sioux country without defined boundaries.

By the treaty with these Indians they make the usual agreements as to peaceable conduct, yield the right to roads through their country with ten-mile reservations, as in the Crow treaty, and cede absolutely the triangular tract south of the Missouri river, besides a small tract on the north side of that river, including Fort Union.

The Government agrees to give them $30,000 for twenty years, of which $10,000 may be used for stock, implements, education, &c., and provisions are to be made for their chiefs.

3. Arickarees, Gros Ventres and Mandans, (confederated.) These friendly and well-behaved Indians live in the neighborhood of Fort Berthold, near the great bend of the Missouri. They do not claim any such title to their land as authorized them to sell any of it to the Government, conceding that they are occupants by ancient consent of both Sioux and Assiniboinces, but, as in the Laramie treaty, the Sioux claimed nothing north of Heart river, on the west side of the Missouri, and the Assiniboinces nothing south of that river and the Yellowstone. The usufruct right of the Arickarees and their confederates might be conceded to the open tract south and west of the Missouri and north of Heart river. They, however, for the most part, live east of the Missouri, drawn into small compass through the hostility of the Sioux, though on friendly terms with the Assiniboinces. They are not only friendly to the whites, but much disposed to agriculture, and raise large quantities of corn, and will profit by any assistance given to them.

They agree to the passage of roads through their country, and make the pledge of good behavior common to the three treaties in question, and the Government agrees to give them $15,000 per year for twenty years.

It is a provision common to the three treaties above mentioned that the stipulations become obligatory upon the Indians from the date of signing the treaties, but not upon the Government until their ratification; and it is also provided that any amendments made by the Senate, not materially changing the treaties, may take effect without the necessity of submitting them for the assent of the Indians.

There is no question that the Indians understand these treaties to be complete, and will expect the payments promised by them, and I have no hesitation in recommending that the necessary appropriations be promptly made; but I am not certain that it will be best to ratify the treaties at present. Perhaps this formal action may be postponed until the existing disturbances to the south and west of these Indians shall cease.

Meantime, if my views of the propriety of making the appropriations in advance of the ratification of the treaties shall meet with your approval, I beg leave further to suggest that they should, in the case of each tribe, be increased considerably beyond the amount proposed in the several treaties.

In the case of the Crows, for whom the treaty proposes $25,000 per annum, and who comprise two bands—the "Mountain Crows," numbering twenty-four hundred, and the "River Crows," nineteen hundred, forty-three hundred in all—I think the annual appropriations should be at least $50,000, so as to give the Indians a supply sufficient to make it worth their while to travel the long journey to the place of payment. Even this would be but a small item per capita.

In the case of the Assiniboinces, numbering twenty-six hundred and forty, I recommend the increase of amount to be paid from $30,000 to $40,000, and for the same reason.

As to the Arickarees, &c., on account of their willingness to enter upon the ways of civilized life, I recommend that the proposed payments be doubled, and made $40,000 instead of $20,000.

Further, I suggest that all of these treaties be so amended as not to limit the payments to twenty years, but leave them in a position to be continued after that time, in the discretion of the President. Probably before that time expires other treaty arrangements, superseding these, will be necessary, but it is deemed advisable that an abrupt limit should not be fixed for these payments.

I do not deem it necessary to dwell upon the reasons which impel me to these recommendations of increased payments. The Government appears to me to have pursued a "penny wise, pound foolish" policy hitherto in its treaties with Indians of the class herein referred to, by making its proposed payments too small, and when to this are added the delays in delivery, to say nothing of frauds practiced upon the Indians, the annuities have been insufficient for their purpose of keeping the Indians satisfied and quiet, and the consequence has been that either by losses from depredations of discontented tribes, or by military expeditions to chastise them, the Government has lost annually many times the amount which, judiciously, promptly, and faithfully used, would have kept the tribes in a friendly mood. I shall, while I hold the position of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, continue to urge the policy of liberality and justice to the Indian tribes, as true economy on the part of the Government.

The report of the treaty commissioners and the several treaties are returned herewith.

I also return the treaties made in June, 1866, at Fort Laramie, by commissioners on the part of the Government, with the Brule and Ogallala Sioux, and with the Cheyennes, with the report of the commissioners thereupon, these papers having been transmitted to your Department by my predecessor October 30 ultimo, but referred to me informally for further examination and report. Later advice from that region, and information received in conversation with late Agent Jarrot, who was present at the time of these treaties, enables me to express confidently the opinion that they should not be ratified in their present form. Mr. Jarrot states that the chiefs of the bands of Ogallalas, who with the Onchapas, are the only Sioux occupying the Powder river country, left with their people before the treaty was signed, and were not parties to it. He also states that the Indians who did sign it do not understand the treaty as allowing more than one road through their country, while the real reading and the understanding of the whites provides for as many as are desired, and trouble has grown out of this misunderstanding already.

Further, it is stated on good authority, that while two bands of the Brule's, the "Corn band," of which Swift Bear is chief, and the "Iron Shells band," of which Dog Hawk is chief, are, especially the former, disposed to settle down to agriculture, the amount provided for such cases, $100 per lodge, is entirely inadequate. There are also two bands of the Ogallalas, those of "Big Mouth" and "Blue Horse," who are anxious to commence farming, and number about one hundred and fifty lodges. Several of the other bands are at war now with the whites.

The proper course would seem to be to make new treaties with the separate bands of these Indians, providing for each according to their number and disposition. But meantime a portion of the Sioux are quiet and friendly, abstaining from hostilities or depredations so far as this office is advised, and relying upon the good faith of the Government to carry the treaty into operation. I therefore recommend that application be made to Congress for an appropriation of $70,000, being the annual amount provided for in the treaty, to be placed at the disposal of the Department for use in behalf of such of these Indians as it may be found judicious to provide for. This course appears to be necessary unless we would drive them to hostility.

In regard to the treaty with the Cheyennes, signed by a part of their chiefs in July, 1866, and by others in October, I cannot for reasons similar to those urged in regard to that made with the Sioux, recommend its ratification, and more particularly because it does not seem to be expressive of the wishes or intentions of the Indians. But in order that the Government may be able to deal liberally and kindly with such of these Indians as prove to be friendly, I recommend an appropriation of $15,000, being the amount provided for in the treaty, to be used at the discretion of the Department, pending more permanent arrangements.

Estimates in proper form will be transmitted for the appropriations herein recommended.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

LEWIS V. BOGY, Commissioner.

Hon. O. H. BROWNING, Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SHERMAN. If I understand the reading of the communication, that provides for temporary relief to the Arapahoes and Cheyenne Indians.

Mr. HENDERSON. This is for the Assiniboinces.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, for certain tribes of Indians, in place of payments to be made to them under treaty stipulations which have not yet been ratified, I have no objection to it, if it is found to be necessary. I will here say that, in my judgment, no one of the Indian treaties that are now pending ought to be ratified; and if we had proper appropriations estimated for by the proper Department, and submitted to us year by year, without reference to Indian treaties, we could no doubt do much better with the money appropriated than we can under a treaty. The first fifty-two pages of this bill contain appropriations made in pursuance of Indian treaties. Some of the treaties are thirty and forty years old. Some of them were made as early as 1822. All the Indians who made them are dead, most of the tribes are dead, and yet we continue to pay the same annuities in the same form and under the same stipulations, while the beneficiaries under the treaty are dead, and their descendants exterminated in many cases.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Who gets the money?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is pretty hard to tell. In some cases the tribes are reduced to one tenth their original number, and yet the same amount is paid to their remnants as was paid thirty or forty years ago. The whole system is vicious. I trust the honorable Senator from Missouri, who is giving his attention to this matter, will devise some way to extirpate this whole system of fifty or sixty or one hundred petty sovereignties within sovereignties, and let the whole of these persons be turned over to the local authorities. It is said that if you turn them over to the white people of the Territories they will kill them off. Perhaps that is so, but they are now in process of decay, and perhaps there is no instance in the history of human life where tribes are disappearing so rapidly as the Indian tribes of the Northwest. No system can be worse than the present one.

I had a great many amusing instances narrated to me during a recent trip through the West of the manner in which Indian treaties were made; but I will not detain the Senate with a statement of them. The whole thing is a ridiculous farce. A few drunken Indians are gathered together, and an Indian agent writes out a treaty, and it is signed by them, signing their mark. It is sent to the Senate of the United States, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs; they examine it without any knowledge of it, without any opportunities of information, on such statements as they gather from persons not present, and the Senate ratifies it, generally when hardly anybody is present. At the last session of Congress we ratified a treaty, probably with scarcely any information in the Senate, that involves the expenditure of over two million dollars, and revived old treaties which, it seems to me, put us under a legal obligation to pay within a year or two about two million dollars to a single tribe of Indians.

Mr. HENDERSON. Two million three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend says $2,300,000. It seems to me that this whole system ought to be broken up. I should be willing to make annual appropriations from time to time for all the Indian tribes of the West; to make them from year to year as their necessities and their condition demand. It would be much wiser to do that than to appropriate in pursuance of Indian treaties made without limitation or restraint or without any of the care that we can exercise over appropriations. The Committee on Finance have no way except simply to report appropriations to carry into effect existing treaties, and there is nothing in the whole of this bill but what is provided for by law or by treaty, or is in pursuance of previous appropriations in California, Arizona, and some of the Territories where we have no treaty relations with the Indians. I believe in the Territories acquired from Mexico we have no treaty stipulations, or scarcely any. The service in California is far less expensive than in the region of country where we have treaties with the Indian tribes. In California the system of which Mr. Latham was the author works very well, I believe. We have collected the Indians in four reservations, where they are cared for with an annual expense of less than one hundred thousand dollars. If I remember correctly, the whole appropriations for the Indian service in California is now less than one hundred thousand dollars, while the number of Indians composing it is very large. The whole amount appropriated by this bill, with the amendments added to it, will be over three million dollars.

Mr. HENDERSON. As has been truly stated by the Senator from Ohio, the purpose of this amendment is to pay to the Assiniboine Indians the amount that would be due to them if the treaty were ratified. The Department asked for a larger sum, but the committee thought it proper not to give a larger amount. I will state that there are a good many treaties before the committee. They are treaties with Indian tribes the most of whom live in the district of country that is now in disturbance, and the committee agreed with the Indian department that it would not be advisable to ratify those treaties. I, like the Senator from Ohio, have objections to the ratification by the Senate of such a large number of these Indian treaties. A different policy must be adopted in regard to them. The idea of making a treaty, as he properly says, with the Indians, oftentimes in utter ignorance on the part of the Indians of what the treaty contains, and then having it ratified by the Senate who, I must say, generally are as utterly ignorant of the provisions of the treaty as the Indians themselves, is very bad policy. I agree with him, therefore, that something ought to be done in order to correct this system. I have not any doubt that it will be done; and, with a view to that end, I think commissioners ought to be appointed, if not permanent commissioners, at least a temporary board for the purpose of devising ways and means of having the Indians put upon certain reservations beyond the lines of travel as far as possible, and collecting them in a space much smaller than that in which they now are. That will have to be done ultimately, and the sooner it is done the better; and the sooner it is done the sooner will the United States get rid of the very heavy burden now falling upon us.

Under the circumstances, inasmuch as this tribe of Indians was, upon the line of travel where these difficulties are now threatened; inasmuch as they signed a treaty a year ago or nearly a year ago and sent it to us for confirmation; and inasmuch as they are somewhat surprised that the moneys due under the treaty have not been furnished; and inasmuch as they themselves say they have complied with every part of the treaty, the committee thought it was best, in order to keep them quiet and not have them join with those two bands of the Sioux who seem now to be engaged in hostilities, to furnish them the small amount that the treaty contemplates. Perhaps if we get into a war with them it will cost us millions of dollars, while the appropriation of a very small sum now will have the effect to keep them segregated, separated from the hostile Indians. We think it is better to do so. They are right in the midst of them, right on the line of travel.

Mr. FESSENDEN. How many are there of them?

Mr. HENDERSON. About forty-three hundred. They are not very strong; but they have some few warriors, and perhaps would give us a great deal of trouble. There is a provision in the amendment that if they have been engaged in acts of hostility, which will of course be inquired into, the money shall not be paid anyhow.

Mr. FOWLER. I should like to know from the Senator having this bill in charge how much money is appropriated in it. That is about all we can know in reference to it. I do not know that it makes much difference, but I should like to know how much is appropriated by the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amount contained in this bill is $2,700,000. I think the amount of the amendment is about seventy thousand dollars.

Mr. HENDERSON. No; not this amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. The whole amendment; this proposition and the one to follow it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have another amendment to offer of a similar character. The letter already read explains it. It is to insert on page 3, after line fifty-two:

Arikarees, Gros Ventres, and Mandans:

For first installment of annuity, to be expended in such goods, provisions, and other articles as the President may from time to time determine, ($5,000 of which may be expended in the purchase of stock animals, agricultural implements, in instructing in agricultural and mechanical pursuits, in employing mechanics, educating their children, providing medicines and medical attendance, care for and support of the aged, sick, and infirm, for the helpless orphans of said Indians, and in any other respect to promote their civilization, comfort, and improvement; and also for pay of head chief, soldier chiefs, second chiefs, and Pierre Garreau for his services to the Arikarees, per article treaty of July 17, 1866, second article not yet ratified, addenda thereto, and recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $40,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. As a matter of phraseology, I want the reference in the amendment to a treaty not yet ratified stricken out. Let the amount remain, but the reference to a treaty not yet ratified should be stricken out.

Mr. HENDERSON. The same reference is in the previous amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. It ought to be stricken out of that too. We can appropriate the amount for this purpose without saying that it is under the treaty.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let that be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment previously agreed to will be so modified, if no objection be interposed. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have another amendment from the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is to insert after the amendment just adopted:

Cheyennes of the Upper Platte river:

For this amount for the Cheyennes near Fort Laramie, to be put at the disposal of the Secretary of the Interior, to be expended by him or under his direction, in such manner as will best tend to sustain peaceable relations with said Indians, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have another amendment to come in after line four hundred and seventy-eight, on page 21:

Crows:

For first installment of annuity to be expended for such useful goods, provisions, and other articles as the President from time to time may determine; $8,000 of which installment may be expended in the purchase of stock, animals, agricultural implements, in the employment of mechanics, in educating their children, in providing necessary medicines and medical attendance, care for the support of the aged, infirm, and sick, and for the helpless orphans of said Indians, and in any other respect to promote their civilization, comfort, and improvement; and also for pay of head chief, per sixth article of the treaty of April 10, 1866, not ratified, on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $25,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let that part which makes a reference to a treaty not yet ratified be stricken out.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will so modify the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then strike out all reference to an installment, and simply say: "for this amount to be expended," &c.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will accept that modification.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then I move to add after the clause just adopted:

For this amount for pay of sixteen half-breeds, to be expended in goods or money at the discretion of the President, $300.

For this amount to be paid Pierre Chien in consideration of the friendship and services rendered by him to the Crow Indians, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have another amendment to come in after line eleven hundred and fifty-one, on page 48:

For this amount for the Brule and Ogallalla bands of Sioux, to be placed at the disposal of the Secretary of the Interior, to be expended by him or under his direction in such manner as will best tend to sustain peaceable relations with said Indians, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move further to amend the bill by striking out the eleventh page, lines two hundred and thirty-two, two hundred and thirty-three, and two hundred and thirty-four, in these words:

For twenty-first of forty-six installments, to be paid the Chippewas of Mississippi per third article of treaty of August 2, 1847, $1,000.

And in lieu of this clause to insert the following:

For the eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth, eighteenth, nineteenth, twentieth, and twenty-first of forty-six installments, to be paid the Chippewas of the Mississippi, as per third article of treaty of August 2, 1847, $11,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. This proposition was submitted to the Committee on Finance, and was rejected by them. Perhaps we had not full information before that committee; but I will state the view we took of it. For some ten or twelve years the Indian department did not estimate at all for this appropriation. That was a very significant fact; because if there were Indians who really needed the appropriation, and who were entitled to it, the Indian Bureau would have unquestionably asked for it; or if not, complaints would have been made and the attention of Congress called to it. But no estimate was made for years; and the fact that no estimate was made is a sufficient indication that none was needed. Now, however, after the expiration of a number of years, this appropriation is revived. The natural inference from the neglect to make the demands was that the Chippewas of the Mississippi were pretty well all killed off. At any rate, if there was any money due, we should certainly have had some claim made for it; and the fact that they lay idle for ten years and did not demand this annual allowance is a sufficient evidence that for some reason or other it was not due. This year, for the first time in a long while, the thing is revived without any explanation, except a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that in the bill as it was passed by the House there was an appropriation of $1,000 for the twenty-first of forty-six installments, and that if the twenty-first installment ought to be appropriated for, all the back ones from the eleventh to the twenty-first ought to be appropriated for. That is all the argument. I will read the letter of the Commissioner to the Secretary of the Interior:

"By the third article of the treaty of August 2, 1847, with the Chippewas of the Mississippi and Lake Superior, the United States agreed to pay to the Chippewas of the Mississippi $1,000 annually for forty-six years. This sum was appropriated regularly until 1852, at which time the sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, and tenth installments were appropriated. Since then no appropriation has been made. In the estimate of appropriations required for the Indian service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, at present before Congress, there is included one for the twenty-first installment under said article. This will leave ten installments due the said Indians and unappropriated. I inclose herewith an estimate for said ten installments, and respectfully request that it be transmitted to the appropriate committee for further action."

I think before this appropriation is made for ten years we ought to know why for ten years the appropriation was not asked for and why it is now revived. I think the explanation we had before the Finance Committee is not sufficient. Perhaps we may have new light in the Senate on the subject. I think this is perhaps one of those cases where the Indians have disappeared in the march of time, under the advance of civilization and the good offices of the white man of Minnesota and that region of country. Probably there were no Indians to pay the $1,000 to, and therefore it was abandoned; and lately some clerk looking over the treaties found that there was an installment under this treaty to be paid, and put it in the estimates. We have no other evidence before us.

Mr. RAMSEY. I think this matter is susceptible of a very easy explanation. There is no doubt that it is nothing more than a case of omission on the part of the Indian office to estimate for this annual appropriation under the treaty of 1847. The Indians are aware of this claim, and they have spoken to me of it several times. I supposed when I was spoken to about it first that there was some omission on the part of the department that would be promptly attended to, and I gave it no further notice. It seems about 1852, at which time I was superintendent of Indian affairs in Minnesota, they were paid this amount of money. Why it has not been paid or estimated for subsequently I do not understand. The Senator from Ohio is mistaken in supposing that these Indians have faded away. These Mississippi bands of Chippewas are about as numerous now as they have ever been. There has been a great mistake on that general subject. All the tribes we have known in the Northwest are about as numerous now as they were thirty or forty years ago—the Winnebagoes and the Chippewas.

Mr. SHERMAN. They are civilized.

Mr. RAMSEY. Partially civilized. The Chippewas of the Mississippi are about as numerous as they were at the time this treaty was negotiated. The head chief spoke to me only last evening about the matter of this item of $1,000 having been omitted for so many years, and suggested the propriety of now making the appropriation for the time that had elapsed.

I trust there will be no difficulty about making the appropriation now. It is clearly due under the treaty, and good faith requires that its stipulations should be fulfilled.

Mr. HENDERSON. All I can say about this matter is that the propriety of the appropriation has been urged upon the committee by the department, and when I turn to the treaty with the Chippewas made in 1847 I find that the third article of the treaty provides for the payment of this amount of money in this language:

"And the United States further agree to pay to the Chippewas of the Mississippi the sum of $1,000 annually for forty-six years."

I cannot find any subsequent treaty that abrogates this article of the treaty of 1847. I was of the impression that perhaps that might have been done in some subsequent treaty, but if there is any treaty with them to that effect I cannot find it. My friend from Ohio suggests a difficulty that at first seemed to be sufficient in my mind in regard to the omissions of estimates for this item for ten years; but when I looked at the papers I did not see what we could do except to appropriate the amount, unless it be true that the tribe is extinct, and my friend from Minnesota says that is not the case. If the Senator from Ohio will look to line two hundred and twenty-two of this bill he will find that we are actually paying these Indians installments under an older treaty, under the treaty of October 4, 1842. Certainly the tribe cannot be extinct, for I believe there are not less than from sixty to one hundred lines of the bill as reported from the Finance Committee devoted to appropriations for the benefit of these very Indians. If they are dead, the Finance Committee have committed a very great blunder in reporting so many appropriations for their benefit.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have to carry out the treaty stipulations as long as there is a single Indian left. We have no other course to take.

Mr. HENDERSON. There are some of these Indians here now. I have seen some of this tribe in this city. I can find nothing abrogating this provision of the treaty of 1847, and therefore I felt under obligations to propose the amendment. The Senator from Minnesota knows all about the case. I have called the attention of the Senate to it, and they can do as they choose. The treaty is before me, and I see no way of avoiding its obligation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think we ought to put this amendment in the bill without further explanation. It amounts to $10,000. I am perfectly willing to pay it if we are bound to pay it; but I should like to have the proper officers explain why they omitted for so long a time to estimate for this item. We found in the Committee on Finance the same facts to which the Senator from Missouri refers: that the money appeared to be due under the treaty stipulation, and also that for ten years it was not estimated nor asked for nor any complaint made, so far as we have any evidence. This was sufficient at least to induce us to believe that for some good reason the annuity lapsed or was not due. I think this appropriation ought not to be made until we have further light on the subject.

Mr. RAMSEY. I am sure there is nothing wrong about this appropriation. It seems to have been a mistake of a clerk, who omitted to make an estimate for this amount of money, this one thousand dollar item with the other items of appropriation for these Indians. The Indians of course did not observe it at first; and the officials in the country, not having the money to pay them, made no particular remark about it. There were thirty or forty thousand dollars due these Indians each year under treaty stipulations, and this omission was not observed at first. The Indians, however, soon observed it, and from time to time spoke of it; and they claim, with evident justice and right, that it is due to them under the treaty and should be paid. The Department are now aware that they have omitted or neglected to make the estimate for this particular sum for all these years, and acknowledging it they call upon Congress now to make the appropriation. Why should we hesitate about it? There is no claim that the appropriation lapsed or that the necessity for it has been swept away by a subsequent treaty. It is enough for the Indians to show that they are entitled to this money under treaty stipulations, and that they have not received it. These facts being established, why not appropriate it? I do not see what more the Senator wants.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have another amendment from the Committee on Indian Affairs to come in in line fourteen hundred and seventy-two, on page 61:

For this amount to carry out the action contemplated by the act of Congress approved May 5, 1864, entitled "An act to vacate and sell the present Indian reservations in Utah Territory, and to settle the Indians of said Territory in the Uintah valley," to be expended in removing and settling the Indians in said valley, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, $15,000.

For this amount to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for incidental expenses of the Indian service in Utah for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, $12,000.

I have in my hand a statement of the superintendent of Indian affairs in Utah, which I have carefully read. It is some five or six pages in length. If the Senate desire to hear all the facts, perhaps it would be as well to have the letter read. If not, if they are willing to take my statement in regard to it, I can simply say that I have carefully examined it, and it is a statement by a very intelligent gentleman evidently, a man who seems devoted to the service, and the charges made seem to me to be very reasonable indeed, much more so than we generally find in cases of this sort; and the statements themselves are reasonable, and in my judgment ought to be heeded. It is a very small appropriation. Evidently the deficit provided for in the amendment ought to be allowed, for there can be no question that the expenditures were made and properly made. In reference to the additional amount, I think the statements are equally clear. If the Senate desire to hear the paper it can be read; it is about as concise a statement of facts as I could give.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am now about to present an amendment that will provoke discussion; but it is one that ought to be considered, and properly considered, by the Senate. I present it in the shape in which it has been submitted by the Department, without saying that either myself or the committee are in favor of the appropriation of the amount proposed. It is in regard to the Navajo Indians that have been held as prisoners of war by the military authorities in New Mexico on the Bosque Redondo reservation. I present it in the shape in which it has been submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs, because we had not time this morning to make the calculations that perhaps would be necessary in reference to it, and we wish the Senate to take it under advisement. Something must be done. These Navajo Indians, from six to eight thousand of them, now estimated at about eight thousand, are held as prisoners of war and are being fed by the military authorities at an expense of from one to two million dollars a year. They propose to turn these Indians over to the Interior Department, and it is for the Senate to determine whether it shall be done. I confess myself, as I am a new member upon this committee, unable to enlighten the Senate much upon this subject; but Senators will remember that these Navajo Indians were captured and have been held there for some two or three years at an immense expense. The cost of the War Department in connection with Indians in 1865 was over twenty million dollars, and in 1864, $9,000,000; and this item has of course been a part of that expense.

The proposition to turn these Indians over to the civil authorities is, as I think, a good one. They certainly can be fed much cheaper in that way than they are now fed: and the proposition is to grant for that purpose about one third of the amount that has been used by the military authorities in feeding them; but, at the same time, I confess that I am unwilling personally to vote for the amount named by the Department. I have consulted the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and he thinks it can be done for this amount, but whether it will be necessary to have a larger amount he does not know. It has cost a larger sum heretofore, but he thinks he can get along with the amount named in the amendment. I think that he ought to be able to get along with a smaller amount; but I present the amendment as it was submitted to the committee, and the Senate will decide the question. I send the amendment to the desk.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to insert after line fifteen hundred and five, on page 62:

For feeding about six thousand Navajo Indians, now prisoners at Fort Sumner, and fed by the military, but agreed to be turned over to the Indian Bureau whenever the necessary appropriation is made, from the 1st of March to the 30th of June, four months, say $120,000.

The same from the 1st of July, 1867, to the 30th of June, 1868, say $500,000.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If I can get the ear of the Senate for a few moments I will state some facts that came within my personal knowledge when, with the honorable Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. FOSTER,] I was engaged in the investigation of Indian affairs in New Mexico. We went to the place in New Mexico where these Indians are held. These Navajoes were captured by Kit Carson, to the number of about seven thousand; and since the commencement of the session to-day I have received a letter from Detroit, Michigan, from Brevet Lieutenant Colonel H. B. Bristol, who when we were in New Mexico was in charge of the Indians upon this reservation. The reservation is about forty miles square. The Pecos river runs through it. The Indians are now on the reservation, and there are about five or six hundred troops there for the purpose of keeping them on the reservation so that they will not run away. You are aware that they have been taken two or three hundred miles out of their own country. They were captured and brought over to the southeast part of New Mexico, bordering almost on the line of Texas, and placed on this Pecos river. Under the direction of General Carleton and the military officers in command an attempt has been made to establish a reservation and try to make these Indians support themselves upon it. In all that country nothing can be raised without irrigation. There is no rain which will make crops or vegetation grow. They have made a dam across the Pecos river and have cut a large canal or acequia, as they call it, and have carried it along under the foot of the bluffs four or five or six miles, so that by means of this acequia they have put under water, as it is called, four or five thousand acres of land, upon which they were cultivating crops when we went there. There were then between three and four thousand acres of land cultivated in corn and wheat and the black beans, which are cultivated very much in that country. It is the most uncertain country in the world for crops. There are swarms of all sorts of creeping things that destroy the crops. They come suddenly. Sometimes in a week or a fortnight a whole crop will be destroyed. Other seasons a man may be fortunate enough to raise a full crop; but the whole business of raising crops anywhere in New Mexico is a very uncertain thing.

While these Indians have been on the reservation the War Department has fed them through the Commissary Bureau; and the expense of feeding these Indians while they have been on the hands of the military, to say nothing about the expense of troops in capturing and watching them, the actual expense of feeding them and looking after them has been from twelve to fifteen hundred thousand dollars, besides what is raised out of the ground. That is the way in which these Indians have been fed and kept. They have been there two or three years. The War Department all the while has been desirous to turn them over to the Indian Bureau because it was subjected to this expense of feeding them. The Indian Bureau has said, if Congress will give us money we will take them on our hands and feed them; if not, they must remain with the War Department and be kept and fed as prisoners of war.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why not let them go at large and take care of themselves?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If you turn the Navajoes at large, the consequences are apparent. The history of the Navajoes and the Mexicans in New Mexico for two hundred years is that they have been constantly at war with each other. The Mexicans would steal the Navajo women and children, and the Navajoes would steal the Mexican herds of sheep and cattle. It has been a predatory warfare between the two. We, in taking New Mexico, have taken upon our hands this continual war between the Mexicans and the Navajoes. We have had, as I stated the other day, three or four campaigns in war between ourselves and the Navajoes, which have cost us millions upon millions of dollars. The military department of New Mexico, under General Carleton, determined to capture the Navajoes and confine them somewhere so as to keep the peace. If you will look into our report and read the testimony of General Carleton and Kit Carson and all the men whom we could find of any considerable prominence of character in New Mexico, you will see that they universally stated that, if the Indians were suffered to remain in their own country, the depredations between them and the Mexicans would continue; it was necessary for us to keep three or four regiments of troops out there. This was their argument; and the view upon which the military department acted in making a capture of the Indians was, as they say, to put an end to war and to save the expense of keeping so many troops there. For myself, if it were a new question, with these Navajoes back in their own country, had they never been captured in that country and brought to this reservation, I should not have advised that the thing be done; I would have said let them remain in their own country and station a military force in such a manner as to keep them in their country and preserve the peace. But here is the practical fact; the military took possession of them and took them out of their own country two or three hundred miles and planted them on this reservation, and there they are. The simple question for the Senate to decide is whether they propose to let the Interior Department feed these Indians. If they do, they can give that Department means to do it; if not, if you leave them in the hands of the War Department, things will go on just as they are.

Mr. SHERMAN. Suppose the military authorities withdraw and let them "root hog or die?"

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Perhaps I can give my honorable friend some information in relation to New Mexico when I call to mind what has transpired there. We have now held New Mexico twenty years. When General Sumner was in command of that military department he proposed that the Government should buy out every New Mexican who had become a citizen of the United States by virtue of our treaty with Mexico, give them money enough to enable them to remove into Kansas or somewhere in the States and settle themselves, and then give up the whole of New Mexico to the Indians. That was his proposition; and as a mere matter of economy it would have been a great saving to this Government, for the administration of the military department in New Mexico and the Indians there have cost us from four to five million dollars a year ever since we acquired the Territory. It has cost us probably $100,000,000 since we acquired the Territory, and the great expense has been in feeding the Indians and in clothing the Indians; and the expense grows out of the fact that you have to keep the troops there to maintain peace, to defend the citizens of New Mexico against the Indians, to prevent continual depredations all over that Territory. The War Department, acting with this responsibility, with the view, as they supposed, to produce peace in the Territory, captured this whole tribe and put them on the reservation.

Now, I say to the Senator from Ohio that my opinion is that if you withdraw your troops the mass of these Navajoes will go back to their own country and they will be spread all over New Mexico more or less; but if you mean to keep them on the reservation where they are now kept, provision must be made for them; you must either leave it to the War Department to feed them as prisoners of war, or furnish the Interior Department with money to enable them to feed the Indians. My impression is the Interior Department will feed them cheaper than the War Department can feed them as prisoners of war.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senate will take this matter into serious consideration and settle it. We have had it up for three years. It is proposed now to appropriate $112 a head for six thousand miserable Indians. The same amount appropriated by the Government to the people of the United States generally would involve an expenditure of $300,000,000—more than our national debt. I am in favor of denying both to the Army and the Interior Department the power to feed these Indians. We have appropriated millions every year to take care of them. I think the military authority ought to be withdrawn from them, and let them, in the language of the late lamented President in regard to another matter, either work for their living or die. It is impossible for this Government to maintain this system of Indian affairs in the Territories. I am informed by a gentleman better acquainted with things in New Mexico than any of us can be, that for twelve years the New Mexicans took care of these Indians with forty soldiers, and that during last year we have fed them on corn which cost twenty-two cents a pound when we used to consider twenty-two cents a bushel a very good price for corn. It is not in the power of the United States to maintain these Indians in that way. There they are fed, and the Senator from Wisconsin says that the Army paid $1,500,000 to feed them. That for six thousand Indians is $250 a head, man, woman, and children; and the Senator from Wisconsin says it ought to be turned over to the Interior Department because they can do it cheaper at $112 a head! My own impression is that if we legislate about it at all we ought to direct the Army to withdraw from their care and custody and let them go where they please. If the New Mexicans cannot take care of them we shall have to send soldiers there to do so; but as long as the Indians know that they are to be maintained there by the United States they will never work. This case reminds me of an Indian whom I once met out in Kansas at Fort Leavenworth, when it was under the charge of General Sumner. He had been brought there for some petty offense committed in the Indian country, and had been punished by confinement in a little jail they had at the fort. The thirty days of his sentence ran out, and still the Indian staid in jail. They told him to go away about his business. "No," said he, "white man brought me here; white man take me back;" and there he remained about the fort for six months, not wanting to leave his comfortable berth in the prison. So with these Indians; they are prisoners of war; they are better cared for than they ever were before; and as long as they are kept as prisoners of war it will cost one or two hundred dollars a head to feed and take care of them. I think we had better withdraw our forces from the Navajoes, tell them they are free, and let them go to work or die.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Unless they are pardoned. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERMAN. It may, perhaps, be a fair case for executive clemency; my friend from Wisconsin could probably procure a pardon for them. [Laughter.] Let them go, and if any aid is required to help them in getting back to their own country I would vote it; but how do three hundred miles of prairie stand in the way of their getting back to their own home? An Indian can travel two hundred miles of a prairie in about six days. A Navajo Indian can go that whole distance in a week, or at the outside in two weeks. Let them go back to where they came from, and I am willing to feed them while they are on the road. Then if they do not behave themselves kill them. This may sound harsh, but it is the only way we can deal with these tribes. I lost all my sympathy for the Indian tribes when I saw personally the condition to which they are reduced. This may be the order of Divine Providence. I do not know. If there were no white men in all the western plains the Indians might possibly procure a precarious subsistence by killing buffalo and game, but the white man is occupying the whole country, and thirty years will not transpire before the most beautiful settlements will be found scattered all along the base of the Rocky mountains in the very places where the Indians have heretofore lived. The Indians must disappear. The duty of the Government is to collect them in reservations, and as soon as possible to adapt them to civilized life; to induce them to work for their living. If you leave the Navajos there they are unfit for labor, unwilling to labor, while supported by the Government. The only way is to withdraw our forces and let them take care of themselves or starve. We cannot, in the present condition of the country, or indeed in any condition of the country, appropriate these enormous sums year by year for the support of Indians. For three or four years past during the rebellion, on the motion of my honorable friend from Wisconsin, we have appropriated millions of dollars to feed Indians in Kansas and on the western plains, always against my advice. Now we have treaties with them by which we revive all the old and burdensome treaty stipulations and are compelled to pay this money over again.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the Navajos could go and peace be preserved in New Mexico, and the military department were satisfied that peace could be maintained without troops and without keeping these Indians confined, it would do for us by an act of legislation to say, let the Navajos go; but the judgment of the military department, the policy which has been pursued there for nearly ten years, has been to do just the thing my honorable friend speaks of, bring these Navajos upon a reservation. The Navajo country, in which they lived and from which they were brought, is as large as the State of Ohio. If my honorable friend will look into the report of the special committee he will see that we took a great deal of testimony, both of military men and of civilians, bearing on this very question. It appears that as between the Navajos and the people of New Mexico the normal condition has been a condition of war and depredation on each other, going back as far as the history of that country is known. The Navajo nation is an older nation on this continent than we are ourselves; they inhabited that country when the Spaniards first learned anything about it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Old enough to die?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. They are not a people well calculated to die readily. I can tell my honorable friend that these Navajos are an enterprising people; the Navajo women make blankets such as are not made by any other manufacturers in the world. They will make a blanket that you can hold up the four corners of it and it will hold a barrel of water and not leak a drop. They have herds and flocks. They raise wool, and make their own clothing. They are a very ingenious people.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then let them support themselves.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. They will support themselves if you allow them to make war on New Mexico whenever they please.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Let them work.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. They will work and support themselves, or steal and support themselves; but hereditary war between them and the Mexicans has existed during the whole history of New Mexico before we obtained it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let them fight it out.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. That was what General Sumner proposed. He proposed that you should buy out all the citizens of the United States in New Mexico, transfer them over into Kansas, and abandon New Mexico to the Indians and let them fight it out. But we cannot do that; we are under treaty obligations by which we are to take care of the citizens of New Mexico. Besides, in the treaty which we made with Mexico and under which we acquired that Territory, we guaranteed to Mexico the peace as against these Indians in her northern States, and we were never released from that obligation until we purchased the Mesilla valley, and then as part consideration for the purchase we got ourselves released from the obligation to prevent the Indians in our Territory of New Mexico from going over into Sonora and Chihuahua and making war on Mexico. It was in view of this condition of affairs that General Sumner made that proposition; but it was a proposition which was not entertained, which could not be carried out. Our treaty obligations to the people of New Mexico bound us to preserve the peace there. We cannot abandon the country and let the Navajos and Apaches and the other Indians there fight it out with the Mexicans. If we do, it is abandoning the Territory; you withdraw your military troops from New Mexico, and I think it a doubtful question whether the Navajos and Apaches together would not drive the New Mexicans out.

My friend from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] says, "The only remedy is to turn it all over to the War Department." One of my objections to putting it under the War Department is that the War Department or the commanders in the field—I will not charge it on the Department—sometimes undertake an expedition or a war that costs this Government $20,000,000, and Congress know nothing about it. Here was an expedition where they captured a whole people, ten thousand of them, took them up bodily, and moved them three or four hundred miles and put them on this reservation.

Mr. SHERMAN. What became of their flocks and herds?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. They took them with them; they have some flocks and herds there now.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Why can they not take them back again?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. You say let them go back to their valleys. The difficulty is to accomplish that we have to reverse the action of the Government for ten years past, and abandon the expenditures that have been made for the establishment of this reservation. If it was an original question I do not know that I should propose in the first place this expedition to capture them and bring them to the reservation; but they are there, and the question is what shall be done with them. They are there on the hands of the Military Department.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. What is the extent of the reservation on which the Navajos now are?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Forty miles square.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. They have women who can work and make blankets; they have flocks and they have herds. Why cannot the men on those forty miles square raise enough to live on? There is just one difficulty in this whole Indian question, and that is an Indian man will not work.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. These Indians do work on the reservation tolerably well; the difficulty is in the nature of the ground.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Put that number of white people on a reservation forty miles square and they will not ask you to feed them; and no other people who will work need ask such a thing. There is the whole trouble with this Indian question; we are keeping up a lot of lazy Indian men who make their women do what work must be done, and who do nothing but lounge around their tents while the women are working, and they expect us to keep them in idleness because they will not work. If they would devote to labor the time that they spend idling around their tents while their women are working, they could live well enough, like our white people do, but they will never do it so long as you continue the present system of feeding them. That is the whole trouble with our system of treating the Indians. They will unquestionably die out. I tell you people who will not work will die out before another people. I had a conversation not long since with a southern gentleman on the question of reconstruction. He said the blacks would die off. I told him that in my judgment that depended on another consideration, if the blacks will work they will live there; if they will not work there, they will die; but if the blacks will work and the whites will not the whites will die; if whites and blacks will both work both will live. You may send preachers among these Indians, you may do what you will with them; but unless you let them know that they must work for their living like white men do they never will earn their own living, and you will always have to support them until they die off. That is all there is of it; you cannot make anything else of it if you labor over it and spend millions upon it for a century to come. These men, we are told, have forty miles square of land; they have flocks, they have herds, they have industrious wives. Why do they not earn their own living? Because they are too lazy to do it. I am not disposed to tax my people, who live by their labor, to support other men who live in idleness.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, I think that General Sherman expressed in his report in November last a correct opinion on this subject when he said that it was impossible that the Government of the United States should continue feeding these Indians in the manner in which we have fed them for the last two or three years since they were taken prisoners of war and removed from their own section. Now, sir, I desire to state some facts connected with this subject which came to my knowledge as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs two or three years ago.

When it was first proposed that these Indians should be located upon the Pecos river, on this reservation, we had in charge of Indian affairs in the Territory of New Mexico a very competent and reliable officer, and he made to the Interior Department elaborate and complete reports upon this whole subject, in which he foretold exactly what has taken place, pointed out all the consequences of the policy adopted, and entered, as it was his duty to do, a vigorous protest against its adoption. These documents were accessible to Congress, because they were filed in the public Department having charge of our Indian affairs. His opinions and his advice were disregarded; the views of the military commander and of those who thought with him prevailed; these Indians were removed to the Bosque Redondo reservation, and they have been kept there from that time to this under the policy which was adopted.

During the last year, assuming that these Indians number six thousand, as stated in the proposed amendment, the Government of the United States has paid for the support of each Indian, including squaws and children, twenty dollars a month. That is the burden which has been charged upon the Treasury, and which is now charged upon it by the existing system.

By the way, I desire to state that this faithful and intelligent officer who made these reports to us, who entered this protest of which I have spoken, was removed from his office in consequence of his objection to this scheme of military management. He was, without notice, turned out of office, and with his reports before us we agreed to the nomination of a successor who would conform to this new, expensive, and outrageous scheme which was established. My voice was against it at the time; but I was overruled. The Delegate from the Territory went up in the ordinary way to the seat of political power, the executive department, and had this stubborn and faithful officer turned out of his place in order that the Treasury might be plundered; and it is a shame to the Senate and to Congress that, with the whole truth before them, he was so removed, and this abuse established in the administration of the Government.

Now, sir, it is proposed that the administration of this system of charity—for it is such—shall be taken out of the hands of the War Department, of the military authorities, and confided to the Interior Department, to the Bureau of Indian Affairs; and we are told that by this change our expense in supporting the Indian children and Indian women and the Indian men in the Territory of New Mexico is to drop down from twenty dollars per month to nine dollars and a third. It is true that this would be a very considerable relief to the Treasury; but upon an examination of the facts it will be seen nothing can be more certain than that if you continue these Indians where they are now located you must continue to feed them and to support them; and the simple question proposed to us by the pending amendment is whether we shall charge them upon the Treasury in the future at the rate of nine and one third dollars per month, if indeed that be found sufficient for the purpose. It has heretofore required twenty dollars per month, and possibly if we appropriate the nine and one third dollars per month now we shall be called upon for the rest of the amount required in some future deficiency bill. Here is a drain of $1,500,000 per annum on the Treasury at present for six thousand wretched fugitive Indians; and the utmost of remedy that is proposed to us is that we shall by the present appropriation reduce the amount to a little less than one half of what it is at present, with the imminent peril impending over us that in some future deficiency bill we shall have to make a further appropriation.

Now, sir, what is the character of the country where these Indians are located? It is not adapted to their habits; it is not adapted to their nature. It is a country requiring great care in the cultivation of the earth in order to produce supplies. It is a place where irrigation is necessary, where public works are necessary, where industry is necessary, in order that human beings shall subsist at all. I confess that I am not at all charmed with this idea of reducing the amount which we are to contribute in this way hereafter. I would like to cut up this policy entirely. If nothing better can be done, let us go back to the system proposed by our Indian agent at the time this removal of the Indians took place. He proposed that they should be permitted to remain in the section of country to which they were accustomed, where they had the means of support, and by a moderate contribution for military purposes and the establishment of a few posts, costing but a small sum of money, protection would be afforded to the settlements of the whites from their depredations. That was the worst that could be expected from adopting the system which he proposed, a contribution, moderate in amount, for the purpose of protecting the border in the usual way.

I am willing to vote a moderate sum of money for the purpose of sending these Indians back and permitting them to locate themselves where they desire to be, and extending such protection to the border as is necessary. More than this I am unwilling to give. But, as a matter of course, when you withdraw the troops that now guard these prisoners of war, as they are amusingly enough called, when you withdraw your military control from them, they will commence going back to their own country. They are men of the mountains; they have been accustomed to mountain life; they have attachments to their own section, and when, under this appropriation, you withdraw military control from them and turn them over to the civil authorities, the result will be that many of them will flee from this reservation and go back to the country which they inhabited before. I will not vote one dollar of money to continue this location of Indians upon the Pecos river. If some proposition comes up in some other form that will look like reform I will vote for it; but I have been a protestant for three years against this abuse, and will not agree to its continuance in any form whatever.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before that is done I desire to move an amendment to this amendment. I desire to substitute for it the following:

For the relief of the Navajo Indians now at or near Fort Sumner, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000: Provided, That no rations or supplies shall be furnished to such Indians by the War Department after the 1st day of July next.

Mr. HENDERSON. As I stated before, the Committee on Indian Affairs made no recommendation really on this subject. It is a perplexing question, and one that will certainly cost the Government a great deal of money. We reported the matter for the Senate to take such action as they might see fit. So far as the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is concerned, I will state that I am personally in favor of it. I think if this idea of holding them as prisoners of war be abandoned and they be permitted to go and work, even upon the reservation that they are now on, they can make a crop during the coming year, and that in addition to the sum appropriated will be amply sufficient to protect them from starvation. I understand they are an ingenious people, and they manufacture blankets and other articles, and they have done some work toward constructing a farm upon their reservation, have built an aqueduct for irrigation, and that in all probability they will be able to make a pretty good crop this year. Their crop last year, it is true, failed to some extent, and some appropriation ought to be made for their benefit.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I insist upon my motion.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let this amendment be adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I supposed it would lead to debate.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I think it is better not to make any amendment unless we adopt that of the committee. As the War Department have these Indians on their hands let them dispose of them. Let it be remembered by my friend from Ohio, who was so very anxious to turn Indian affairs over to the War Department against the earnest remonstrance of the Interior Department, against the earnest remonstrance of the Commissioner and the superintendents of Indian affairs, that it was the War Department which took these Indians from their homes and put them on this reservation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I insist upon my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This discussion is not in order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the doors are closed, I desire to take the sense of the Senate as to whether we are to have an evening session or not. This bill ought to be finished to-night, and I move that at half past four o'clock this afternoon the Senate take a recess till half past seven o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and after some time spent therein the doors were reopened.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 682) for the relief of Captain John J. Young, of the United States Navy; A bill (H. R. No. 820) for the relief of Henry S. Davis; and

A bill (H. R. No. 467) to amend the act entitled "An act further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes," approved July 25, 1866.

The hour of four o'clock and thirty minutes having arrived, the Senate took a recess till seven and a half o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven and a half o'clock p. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMEROY in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 11th instant, calling for correspondence relating to the manner in which the consul at Cadiz has transacted the business of his office, a report from the Secretary of State with accompanying documents; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 31st ultimo, calling for correspondence between the Department of State and any of the foreign ministers of the United States in reference to the policy of the President of the United States toward the States lately in rebellion, a report from the Secretary of State with accompanying documents; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 19th instant, calling for correspondence in reference to the salary of the United States minister at Portugal, a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying documents; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. POLAND. On Tuesday evening, which was set apart for the purpose of considering some bills from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, I had up a little bill to which no Senator or anybody else could have any objection if he could take time to see what it was, and was just about having a vote on its passage when it was very unceremoniously run down by the last scheme of reconstruction. I hope to be allowed to take it up and have a vote upon it now.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What bill is it?

WILLIAM MANN AND JACOB SENNEFF.

Mr. POLAND. The bill for the relief of William Mann and Jacob Senneff.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can only be considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. HENDERSON. I presume the business before the Senate is only to be informally passed over?

Mr. POLAND. That is all.

Mr. HENDERSON. I cannot consent unless that is the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be understood that the regular business is laid aside informally, and that this bill is taken up by unanimous consent.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 590) for the relief of William Mann and Jacob Senneff.

Mr. POLAND. I desire to occupy but a moment in explaining this bill, that no one may have any objection to it. It is not a bill to extend a patent. It is a bill to authorize these patentees to apply to the Commissioner. The law gives every patentee a right to apply for an extension for seven years; but he is required to apply within ninety days before the expiration of his patent. In this case Mr. Mann was in Europe, and arrived home three days too late to get his hearing within the time of his patent. He made application immediately to Congress, and this bill passed the House nearly sixty days before the expiration of the patent. The bill passed the House on the 16th of May, and the patent did not expire until the 11th of July following. The bill came to the Senate, and was reported in the Senate by the committee nearly a month before the expiration of the patent, but was not reached during the last session. It is merely to give him the right which the law gave him to apply to the Commissioner of Patents, and, if he could make out his case before him, to have his seven years' extension.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES TETLOW.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up a House bill for the relief of James Tetlow, which is now upon the table.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President—

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will say to the Senator that this is a constituent of his who has a bill in my charge from the Committee on Naval Affairs that I want to dispose of.

Mr. WILSON. I simply desired to make a report from a committee of conference; but I will not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It will take but a few minutes to consider this bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in the Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1188) for the relief of James Tetlow. It authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to pay James Tetlow, contractor with the Navy Department for building the four steam tug-boats called Fortune, Speedwell, Standish, and Mayflower, respectively, the sum of $86,400 from any money heretofore appropriated for constructing vessels or machinery therefor, and not otherwise already expended.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will state to the Senate that this sum is the sum that covers the mistake in the contract. It is not for losses in the sense of the other cases that have been before the Senate, but a mistake in the contract. All the rest were contracted for at $128,000. The engineer or agent of Mr. Tetlow made a mistake and contracted at eighty-four thousand and some hundred dollars. The mistake is recognized by the Department and the relief is recommended by the Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF DRAFTED MEN.

Mr. WILSON. I submit a report from the committee of conference on the bill now on the table from the House for the relief of certain drafted men. I ask that it be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bill of the House No. 811, for the relief of certain drafted men, having met, after full and free conference do recommend that the Senate recede from its amendments to the said bill.

J. W. NESMITH,

EDGAR COWAN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

SYDENHAM E. ANCONA,

JOHN A. BINGHAM,

JOHN H. KETCHAM,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say that I have not signed the report myself, but all the other members of the committee were against me, and I make the report.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. What was the bill for?

Mr. WILSON. For the relief of some drafted men in the sixteenth congressional district of Pennsylvania. The men were drafted a second time within the year when the law released them for a year.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Who was on the committee on the part of the Senate?

Mr. WILSON. Mr. COWAN and Mr. NESMITH signed the report. I did not myself agree to it.

The report was concurred in.

LAND OFFICES IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 746) for the organization of land districts in the Territories of Arizona, Idaho, Utah, and Montana. This is a bill that will lead to no discussion. A similar bill was passed last year, but was defeated in consequence of other matters being contained in the bill. Those matters are all left out now, and it only establishes land offices. The Committee on Public Lands were unanimous on the subject.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Committee on Public Lands report an amendment, to strike out all of the original bill after the enacting clause and to insert a substitute. The substitute only will be read, unless some Senator calls for the reading of the original bill.

The Secretary read the matter proposed to be inserted, as follows:

That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a surveyor general for Montana, whose annual salary shall be $3,000 and whose power, authority, and duties shall be the same as those provided by law for the surveyor general of Oregon. He shall have proper allowances for clerk hire, office rent, and fuel, not exceeding what is now allowed by law to the surveyor general of Oregon.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the public lands within the Territories of Montana and Arizona to which the Indian title is or shall be extinguished shall each respectively constitute a new land district to be called the Montana district and the Arizona district respectively, and the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register and receiver of public moneys for each of said districts respectively, who shall be required to reside at the places at which said offices shall be located, and they shall have the same powers, perform the same duties, and be entitled to the same compensation as are or may be prescribed by law in relation to land offices of the United States in other Territories.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to locate said offices of surveyor general and registers and receivers of public moneys.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Territory of Arizona is hereby attached to the surveying district of California.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to amend the amendment in section two, line two, by inserting after the word "Arizona" the words "and Utah," and also inserting in line five, after the words "Arizona district," the words "and the Utah district." The effect of my proposition is to give to that Territory a land district as well as other Territories.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. If the Senator desires to give Arizona a land district and a surveyor general I do not wish it extended to Utah until the question is very fully considered.

Mr. STEWART. We do not propose to give Arizona a surveyor general. We attach it to California for surveying purposes. We give a surveyor general to Montana and land districts to Montana and Arizona.

Mr. CONNESS. What is it proposed to give Utah?

Mr. HENDRICKS. These land districts.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope that will not be done at the present time. I think there are abundant reasons why it should be postponed. There are peculiar considerations hinging upon that question.

Mr. STEWART. This proposition will involve discussion, and I hope it will be withdrawn.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I must insist upon it. I did not agree to the proposition as it was reported in committee. My judgment was overruled, and I think it my duty to present this question here. I think one of the most desirable things is to invite immigration to Utah, and to do so we must provide some way by which settlers can obtain title to the lands. As it is now, a man going into that Territory outside the Mormon settlements cannot get title, and under the present policy there never will be a population in Utah such as will exercise the influences we desire.

Mr. CONNESS. I agree fully with the honorable Senator in the opinions he has expressed. There is nothing more certain than the advantage of extending to new communities the opportunity of obtaining titles to lands, nor in settling difficulties to lands in older communities; but, as I observed, there are questions peculiar to that Territory which in my opinion demand that even that great benefit should not be extended at this time. I should be willing for one to do it at an early day, but it is a question that ought to be considered in connection with other questions. If the Senator would withdraw his amendment, there would be no objection to a part of it, of course.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I will suggest to the Senator from Nevada that if this amendment is to be pressed it would be better to lay this bill aside. If the amendment should be made and the bill passed by the Senate in its present condition it would involve a reconsideration on Monday, I think.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana, inasmuch as this bill is important to pass, to extend the facilities of land districts to Montana particularly; and inasmuch as it has been recommended for two or three years by the Commissioner of the General Land Office that it is quite important to extend this to them, and inasmuch as his proposition will probably defeat it at this session, to let this bill go through and take up his proposition at the next session. If the amendment is pressed it will probably defeat the whole measure during this session, and that would be a hardship to the other Territories.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am a friend to the bill; but I think we ought to do justice and right. I do not believe in legislating upon prejudices. I am not afraid of them myself, and I have a contempt for them. I believe it is the true policy of this Government to invite immigration to Utah. As the law now stands, no Gentile, as he is called, can make a home in that Territory. Sir, under the present policy we devote that Territory to Mormonism forever. Brigham Young and his church protect the Mormons in their occupation of the lands; they are thoroughly protected; they have no difficulties in obtaining such a title as they are satisfied with.

Mr. CONNESS. Not a title.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Not a title, but such as satisfies them, I say, to secure them in possession. But if a Gentile goes into the Territory he does not have the assurance that Brigham Young's power gives to the Mormon; he has no support; he has not the right conferred upon him by the Government; and he has nothing to sustain him in any claim that he may make to a piece of land in the whole Territory of Utah. I regard this of more importance than all the rest of the bill. This Mormon question is a troublesome one to us. I suppose there is no Senator who does not desire to see in that Territory a vote sufficient to fashion the institutions according to our judgment of what is right; and to get that vote you must give men an opportunity to get homes there. To say that men shall go there and at the same time refuse them the possibility of getting a home to which they will have a title is simply absurd. My motion is based upon a consideration of this question with a good deal of anxiety. If there is that sort of hostility to it, however, as that it would be likely to defeat the bill I am not prepared for that. I have done my duty.

Mr. WADE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana withdraw his motion?

Mr. HENDRICKS. No, sir; not yet. I will hear the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WADE. I only wish to say now, by way of giving notice, that there is a bill on that whole Mormon subject, prepared by the Committee on Territories, that I have been looking anxiously for a time when I could press it with some hope of its passage. It has been prepared with great deliberation by gentlemen who perfectly understand all these difficulties. The fact is, that now, as I understand it, Brigham Young claims the whole Territory as belonging to the church, and no man probably would be safe in going and locating there unless he had the power of the Government to back him in it. I do not suppose that a man could go there and procure a title from the United States with any kind of safety. I have no objection, however, to extending the land district over there; but I do not believe it would be effectual at all unless a great many other provisions were made beforehand. I intend to bring that bill up just as soon as I can for the purpose of settling the difficulties, so far as we can do it, that prevail there, and have for a long time.

Mr. HOWARD. I hardly think the time has come yet for establishing a land office in Utah; and I think we had better postpone that measure until the next session of Congress at least, and perhaps for the whole year; but at the same time I see the necessity of taking some measures to introduce the land system into Utah as speedily as is practicable. I have been told upon pretty good authority, at least I consider it such, that it would be unsafe now for a public surveyor to enter that Territory for the purpose of making surveys and marking the lines of sections and sub-division of sections. Such is the turbulent and discontented condition of the people there, and their peculiar temper, that I suppose there is real danger of violence to the men whom we should employ in that service. I understand that the president of the so-called Church of Latter-Day Saints directs his followers to obliterate every mark that may be made or that ever has been made by surveyors in that Territory, he claiming the whole country for the saints, and using all his influence to prevent immigration into the Territory. Why, sir, it is a fact that the power of Young has become so great there in connection with his church that the Legislature of the Territory, in violation of the organic law, actually makes grants of lands in various places in the Territory, what they call herding-lots and pasture-lots, and water privileges and ferry privileges, and a great variety of such matters, in complete violation of the organic act of the Territory, which prohibits the Legislature from interfering with the primary disposal of the soil by the United States.

I will not go further, for I dislike to interrupt the honorable Senator from Indiana. I think myself the time has not yet come. I think we had better take up the bill of my honorable friend from Ohio at as early a day as practicable, and endeavor to introduce something like a regular administration of the laws in that Territory before we proceed to establish land offices there.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, every year adds to the difficulties under the existing policy. The hue and cry against Mormonism has been the theme of party harangue and stump speech, and partyism has appealed to it for votes; but a sound and wise policy on the subject has never been adopted by any party. Mr. Buchanan sent an army out there once, and I believe he sent forty thousand yoke of oxen with the army; and what did it amount to? Suppose the men in Utah have more wives than one, and a great number of children, almost as many as Job had in ancient times; what are you to do with them? Are you going to send an army there and shoot them? It cannot be done. The army has failed, you have sent the judiciary there; you have sent the laws of Congress there; and they have amounted to nothing. That Territory is given up to that church; and it is not right, sir.

We are told that the time has not come. Each year adds perhaps five thousand to the Mormon population, and not one to the Gentile population; and yet the time has not come. The population now is one hundred thousand. When there are one hundred and fifty thousand Mormons there, will the time then have come? Mr. President, the time has come to encourage settlements, to encourage the people to go into the desirable localities of Utah. The Army has been tried; the judiciary has been tried. I do not look to either of these as a remedy. I look to the force of public opinion among a people who shall settle there, a population that will control the local legislation. Congressional legislation is as light as thin air; it amounts to nothing against it. We have tried it. We have prohibited polygamy; and there has never been a verdict or a judgment rendered under the law, and cannot be. You cannot execute a law by the courts or otherwise until you have a public opinion coming up from a population in support of it. That is exactly what I want to see in Utah.

But, sir, I have now had an opportunity to express my views on this subject. I am not afraid to say that legislation wise and just ought to be extended to Utah. If I were I would not be fit to be here. But as the Senator having this bill in charge thinks that this amendment would endanger the bill, I do not wish to do that. I have done my duty. I was overruled in the committee on this subject and will now yield to what seems to be the desire of the Senate, and will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to call up the special order, unless Senators are ready to take a vote on this bill now.

Mr. STEWART. There will be no more discussion.

Mr. CONNESS. With the permission of both Senators, I desire to say one word. I shall not occupy any time. When the Senator from Indiana began his last remarks I understood him to express an utter contempt for prejudices in legislation. I do not know to what extent my friend imputed that to myself in what I had said.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Not at all.

Mr. CONNESS. I supposed not; but it appeared that way.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Public lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEWART, the title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to create the office of surveyor general in the Territory of Montana, and establish a land office in the Territories of Montana and Arizona."

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish to ask the Senate to take up House bill No. 280, a bill which I am confident will not occupy five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can only be considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. HENDERSON. I cannot consent. I want to go on with the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill alluded to by the Senator from Iowa cannot be proceeded with. The unfinished business is the Indian appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1039) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th of June, 1868, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. SHERMAN to the amendment proposed by Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I ask for the reading of the amendment and of the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary read them. The amendment was on page 62, after line fifteen hundred and five to insert:

For feeding about six thousand Navajo Indians, now prisoners at Fort Sumner, from the 1st of March to the 30th of June, 1867, and for feeding said Indians during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, $670,000.

The amendment to the amendment was to strike out all after the word "for" in the first line and to insert:

Relief of the Navajo Indians now at or near Fort Sumner, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000: Provided, That no rations or supplies shall be furnished to said Indians by the War Department after the 1st day of July next.

Mr. FOWLER. I should like to know how much now is appropriated to these prisoners of war, as they are called.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment to the amendment will make the appropriation $100,000 instead of $670,000.

Mr. CONNESS. I should like to hear both the amendments reported again. I understand that the Senator from Ohio offers this as a substitute for the one that was pending when we took the recess. I should like to hear them both read.

The Secretary read them.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, I feel quite sure that if the attention of my honorable friend from Ohio had been drawn to this question he never would have proposed such an amendment as the one now before us. Let me call his attention to the true state of the case. I wish to bring to his attention the evidence which has been taken upon this subject on both sides of the question as to whether the Indians should be kept upon this Navajo reservation or whether they should be returned to their own country. The committee who were charged with this subject took a large amount of testimony. They took the testimony of military men; they took the testimony of civilians in New Mexico; and I wish, as a specimen of the testimony given on both sides, both by the military men and by the civilians, to call the attention of the Senate for a few moments to what I will now read. This testimony was taken a year ago last summer. General Carleton was sworn, Major Enos, Captain Cary, Mr. Eaton, and many others.

Mr. CONNESS. Who took this testimony?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It was taken before the committee of Congress.

Mr. CONNESS. What part of the committee?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Foster and myself, of the Senate, and Mr. Ross, of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CONNESS. Where was it taken?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. This was taken in New Mexico.

Mr. CONNESS. What part?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. This of Major Enos at Fort Union; the testimony of General Carleton was taken at Santa Fé; and a large portion of the testimony was taken at the Bosque Redondo.

Mr. CONNESS. Do I understand that General Carleton testified?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes, sir; but I do not propose to read from General Carleton's testimony at length. I will refer to the testimony of Major Enos, of the regular Army. He says:

"I have been in New Mexico since November, 1856: am captain in the regular Army: I was an officer of the line until 1861, but am now in the quartermaster's department; I have been acting in this department almost all the time I have been in the Territory. The principal military operations, indeed all of them except when invaded by the Texans in 1861 and 1862, have been connected with Indian affairs, and mainly with the Navajoes, since I have been in the department."

Now, will the Senate bear this in mind:

"Upon an average, from two to three regiments of troops have been constantly required, since I have been in the Territory, to carry on military operations against the Navajoes or to protect the inhabitants against their depredations."

He states that he has been there for ten years, since 1856, and from two to three regiments of troops have been kept there all the while, mainly either to make war upon the Navajoes, or to protect the Mexicans against the depredations of the Navajoes.

"From earliest history they have been at war with the Mexicans. I have conversed with people eighty years of age, who state that when they were boys they had been at war with the Navajoes; and since our acquisition of the Territory from Mexico that same state of hostilities, in the main, has continued between them and the people of New Mexico. I have never ascertained the annual expense of these regiments. I think in the quartermaster's department the expense of an infantry regiment would be annually from two hundred and fifty to three hundred thousand dollars, and a cavalry regiment five to six hundred thousand dollars per annum. This would not include the purchase of horses nor the payment of troops, but simply the expense of the quartermaster's department to keep the regiment in serviceable condition and transportation. Since I have been in this department there have been twelve to fifteen mounted companies. In the fall of 1853 there was an expedition against the Navajoes, under Colonel Miles; that expedition resulted in a treaty about December, 1853, by which the Indians were not to pass east of a certain line, and they were not to resist the passage of our troops to explore the country. In the summer of 1859 an expedition, under Major Simondson, was sent into their country. This was not hostile; there were no hostilities while they were in the country; as soon as withdrawn, depredations were committed by the Indians in September or October. In the summer of 1860 an expedition was sent against them, under Colonel Canby; portions of four regiments, some fifteen hundred troops, perhaps two thousand, employed directly or indirectly. This war continued into the winter; operations carried on until into March; considerable stock taken; many killed; Indians reduced so that they came in and begged for peace and provisions. Hostilities were suspended and the troops withdrawn by the July following from the Territory; only two companies of New Mexico volunteers were kept in the country, at Faunt le Ray. I do not remember of any depredations in the summer of 1861 by the Navajoes; they commenced again in January or February of 1862, and continued them until another expedition was organized in 1863, under General Carleton, commanding the department, and Kit Carson, commanding the expedition. He entered their country in July, 1863, and continued through the winter of 1863-64, and until several thousand surrendered themselves to the military authorities at Forts Canby and Wingate. The estimates of the Navajoes are from five to ten thousand, and some as high as fifteen thousand. From my best information there are eight or nine thousand, judging from those surrendered and estimates of those who remain in their country. On 31st of December, 1864, there were on the reservation at the Bosque Redondo 8,354; this is based on the census made by General Carleton. From my best information I think not over five hundred remain in their old country. There are but two of the chiefs or head men who have not surrendered or come in yet."

He here states in very clear and concise terms the grounds upon which the military department proposed to take these Indians from their country and put them on a reservation:

"The grounds upon which the military authorities have thought it fit to remove the Navajoes and place them on a reservation upon the Pecos are: 1. There is not in their own country a sufficient body of land situated together to make a sufficient reservation for them and to produce grain for their subsistence. 2. It is less expensive to feed them than to fight them. 3. That by removing them to their present reservation they are brought nearer the grain-producing districts of New Mexico and the States, and can be supported cheaper than on any reservation in their own country. 4. That one of the most favorable routes to Arizona leads through the heart of the Navajo country. 5. Where they now are they are on the extreme frontier settlements of New Mexico, and removed from any thoroughfare or traveled route through the country. 6. By their removal a large grazing country is thrown open to settlement. I think six to eight hundred men would be sufficient to guard them on the reservation—half cavalry and half infantry. In a few years the number could be greatly reduced."

Here is the great reason which he gives:

"With the Navajoes in their own country, two or three regiments of troops could not prevent them from committing depredations. Where they are now located six or eight hundred men are sufficient. I have been personally on the reservation on the Pecos. I think for farming by irrigation there is no better country in New Mexico or Arizona. I think, ten thousand acres or more is capable of irrigation."

On taking other testimony, it was found by the committee that there are about eighteen thousand acres that are capable of being put under cultivation—

"The soil and the water sufficient for irrigable purposes. The Navajoes in their own country cultivate small patches by irrigation, apparently with as much skill and care as the Mexican population generally. They manufacture blankets in looms of their own construction, some very celebrated for the beautiful arrangement of colors and for durability. I have stated the reasons upon which the military administration of the Territory have based their action in relation to the Navajoes."

I will state that the testimony of all the military men we found concurred in these views. The ground on which they insisted that it was economy in the Government to keep these Navajoes upon this reservation was, that if you allowed them to be in their own country it would require from two to three regiments to prevent them from committing depredations upon the Mexicans, whereas if they were put upon this reservation, six or eight hundred troops for the present would keep them there, and after a while even a much less number of troops would be sufficient. I have given you the military side of this question. The military department of New Mexico, against the remonstrances of the Interior Department, against the remonstrances of Dr. Steck, who was the superintendent of Indian affairs there, insisted upon this course of proceeding. Now, then, I will give you in a single word what was stated by Major Griner, who was once superintendent of Indian affairs in New Mexico, and states in very clear and concise language his opposition to this project of bringing the Indians out of their own country and putting them on a reservation.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator say, so that I shall understand him as we go along, whether he was at this reservation in New Mexico?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I was.

Mr. CONNESS. Known as the Bosque Redondo?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I was.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator say whether the title of that reservation is now in the United States or not; whether he is certain on that point?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have never doubted it. I supposed of course it was vacant land of the United States and so assumed and taken there as a portion of our vacant territory. It is a vast desert of country. There is not a human being within thirty miles of it. I am quite sure of that. There is hardly a place where you can water a horse except on the river.

Mr. SHERMAN. What do you want troops there for?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The military men say, as Major Enos says, that it requires troops there to keep these Indians on the reservation. If you withdraw your troops from the reservation the Indians will commence going back to their own country.

Mr. CONNESS. Do I understand the honorable Senator to say that there is nothing produced on that reservation now?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. No, sir, there is not. I will read some testimony on that subject of Lieutenant Bristol directly, as that bears on another point. I am giving the reasons for and against putting them on the reservation. Major Griner, who has lived in the Territory since 1851, and who was at one time secretary of the Territory, at one time agent of Indian affairs, and lately has been an agent, I think, of the Treasury Department, appointed when Mr. Chase was Secretary of the Treasury—

Mr. CONNESS. A very bad record for any man.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. No, sir; Major Griner bears a very high and enviable reputation.

Mr. CONNESS. I say that succession of offices is a very bad record.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. To show you how frank a man he is, he tells the story how he came to be appointed, and I will read it for the information of the Senate. He says:

"I came first to this Territory in 1851, staid until 1854, and then again in 1862, where I have remained since, with the exception of the time of the Texan invasion. I came here first as Indian agent, and was at first assigned to duty at Taos, as agent for the Apaches and Utes, but afterward acted as general superintendent under Governor Calhoun, and traveled over pretty much all the Territory. I was Indian agent from 1851 until 1853, being then appointed secretary. The great difficulty in our Indian policy is in the selection of Indian agents, who are generally appointed for political services. Mr. Wingfield came here as an agent because he was the friend of Mr. Dawson, of Georgia; Mr. Wolley, an old man of seventy years of age, because he was the friend of Mr. Clay; Mr. Weightman, because he wished to be returned as Delegate; and myself, because I could sing a good political song. Neither of us was by habit or education better fitted to be Indian agent than to follow any other business."

And then he goes on to condemn this policy of selecting men for political services. My friend will see that he is a very frank man, and told the plain, honest truth. Now, he is speaking on this subject, and he condemns the policy as unwise of taking the Navajoes out of their country and putting them on this reservation, and here are his reasons, stated in very few words:

"I think it very unwise and injudicious to place them upon that reservation. First. That was really Camanche country, and had never been ceded, and was a cause of complaint by the Camanches, for the Navajoes were their hereditary enemies, and it was abridging their hunting grounds by putting their enemies upon it, the Bosque being to them a choice hunting ground. Second. Taking the Navajoes from their own mountain country and placing them upon the plains at the Bosque is one cause of the mortality said to have existed among them. Third. There is not sufficient extent of country to subsist so large a population as a permanent location. Fourth. Placing the Navajoes and Apaches, two distinct tribes, with different habits and customs, upon the same reservation, the Navajoes being a working and thinking people; the Apaches lacking all those qualifications. Fifth. The immense cost to the Government, which has been increased and must continue to be. The Navajoes are a pueblo Indian, as ruined buildings and acequias show in their country that in former times it has been occupied by pueblos. Their habits, manners, dress, customs, and manufactures are similar to pueblos. They were rich Indians, and if let alone would have been so at this time, in my opinion. I have seen the customs of the Mexican Government, after their crops were in, to make campaigns against the Navajoes to get their stock, women, and children. The Mexicans paid no taxes, and their forays upon the Navajoes were to obtain the means to carry on the Government of the department of New Mexico."

That was under Governor Armigo, who was sent out by Santa Anna before we came in possession of the country. The New Mexicans in fact made forays on the Navajoes to raise the means to pay their taxes to the Mexican Government:

"This was especially the case under Governor Armigo, who had been Governor and administered affairs much like a dictator for the seven years preceding the taking possession by the forces of the United States under General Kearney, in 1846. My opinion is that the Navajoes should be restored to their own country and established in pueblos of say one thousand men, with their families, in each pueblo, under the charge of one good agent to each pueblo, holding him responsible for the good behavior of the people. Following as near as possible the Spanish mode of establishing pueblos upon the model of those now existing among us, I think in a few years they could be made self-sustaining, of no cost to the Government, and a happy and prosperous people."

Now, Senators, I have given you, by reading from the testimony of these two witnesses, the testimony given on the military side of the question, and the testimony which was given by civilians who were opposed to this Bosque Redondo reservation.

Mr. STEWART. I want to get at the exact facts; and, if the Senator will allow me, I wish to ask a question. The amount of money to be appropriated I believe is $670,000?

Mr. HENDERSON. That is it.

Mr. STEWART. And the number of Indians, how many?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. There are eight thousand of them.

Mr. STEWART. How many troops are supposed to be necessary to keep them there?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. There are about six hundred there now.

Mr. CONNESS. I should like to know whether the Senator will affirm that there are eight thousand there, and that that many were there when he was there?

Mr. STEWART. It is proposed to keep them there with six hundred troops. How many millions will that cost?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have not proposed anything about that. I am telling the honorable Senator what the War Department, pursuing a policy that they have pursued for years, have determined upon and have actually done, and giving the precise state of things. The Indians have been captured.

Mr. STEWART. Is the Senator in favor of this appropriation? I am opposed to it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The War Department held them there upon this reservation and are subjecting the Government to an annual expenditure in feeding the Indians of from one and a quarter to one and a half million of dollars every year now; and the question is, what shall we do?

Mr. STEWART. Break it up.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. How shall we break it up?

Mr. STEWART. Stop giving any money.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The War Department gives notice to the Department of the Interior that they do not desire any longer to feed these Indians. We want the Indian department to feed the Indians. The Interior Department respond once to the War Department that they will feed the Indians if Congress will furnish the money; and the Interior Department believe they will be able to feed the Indians for six or seven hundred thousand dollars, whatever the amount of this appropriation is.

Mr. STEWART. What is the object of feeding them? Have they not been in the habit of living in that country from time immemorial? Why vote this amount of money, and tax the people to feed these Indians?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. My friend has come in since I commenced reading the testimony of these military gentlemen.

Mr. STEWART. You had better read it over.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I cannot read it over as every new Senator comes into his seat; it is impossible.

Mr. STEWART. I have been in my seat all the time.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The Senator will remember that I have given the statement of the military men that if you allow them to be in their own country, not placed upon reservations, it will take from two to three regiments of troops to prevent depredations between the Mexicans and the Navajos.

Mr. STEWART. I am very well aware that it takes that, and then when the regiments are ready to whip them the agents come in and patch up a peace. I am perfectly aware of this system; but I cannot see that you will make it any better by spending this amount of money to feed them there.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The simple question is, whether we shall keep the Indians upon the reservation, or allow them to return to their own country. If we keep them on this reservation it will cost us the expense of from five to six hundred troops to watch them and guard them and keep them there; and it will cost you a large sum of money, $600,000—if that is the amount of the appropriation—besides what they will raise, to feed them. If you allow them to go into their own country and disband this reservation you have lost all the money you have expended in capturing and putting them on the reservation; and the universal testimony of military men is that it will require two regiments of troops to keep them from depredations. I received to-day a letter from Brevet Lieutenant Colonel Bristol, of the United States Army, dated February 21, from Detroit, Michigan, in which he says:

"I am pleased to inform you that there are about eight thousand present on the reservation."

There were eight thousand three hundred and odd Indians on the reservation.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator state why that letter is written by that officer?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. My honorable friend can read the letter. It came to me to-day from Detroit, Michigan. The only statement in the letter to which I referred was in relation to the number of Indians now present. He also states that the crops this year have not been as good as they anticipated. You will find Major Bristol's testimony at length in this volume. He was at that time on the Bosque Redondo. He goes into the particulars. He says:

"Am captain in the fifth United States infantry, and stationed at this post; I have been here since the 22d of May, 1863; I have been part of the time commanding officer of the post, and acting military superintendent of the Navajo Indians. When I came here there was but one Navajo Indian here. He was taken from a Mexican who offered him for sale for ten dollars; so that all of them have been brought here since I came here. They came at different times. Total number brought here, 8,474; of these there were men, 2,325; of women, 2,710; of children, 3,164; infants at the breast, 375. At the last count, on the 30th of April last, there were present 7,169. The difference in numbers is accounted for by deaths not reported, and absence of those who were hunting. Some others reside on the reservation, some twenty to twenty-five miles from the post, and were not present at the count, herding their stock. Some of them are owners of considerable herds of horses and sheep, and a few mules and goats. The number of deaths among the Navajos from all causes, so far as it has come to our knowledge, is two hundred and sixteen since the 1st of February, 1864."

This is the testimony he gave in 1865. The crops were then plenty, between three and four thousand acres. We saw these crops; we went all over these grounds, Mr. FOSTER, Mr. ROSS, and myself. We saw wheat, corn, &c., about three thousand acres and upward which had been sown, planted, and cultivated by these Indians; we saw these acequias; and so far as the Bosque Redondo is concerned, of all the places we saw in New Mexico south of the Taos mountain, this Bosque Redondo was by far the largest place that could by any possibility be cultivated or put under water that we saw in the Territory.

Major Bristol goes on to say what has been done, because he was acting military superintendent:

"There has been made, mainly by the Indians, nearly thirty miles of acequias—"

These acequias are the canals which they dig for the purposes of irrigation—

"and we contemplate opening other large acequias and feeders to bring another large tract under cultivation. For this purpose some surveys are necessary, as it would have to be opened fifteen to eighteen miles long, to put the water upon a higher plateau of ground by hugging the base of the hill. The Indians can do the labor with some superintendence, and with that tract under cultivation I am confident, from my experience here, they can raise more than enough for themselves and to feed the Government animals supplied at this post with bread-stuffs. For peaches, apricots, and grapes the soil is excellent; the river banks are covered with wild grapes. Upon the balance of the reservation there are many springs, besides the river; there are six springs. The pasturage is good, supporting cattle, horses, mules, and sheep in large numbers. Hay could be produced to feed during the winter storms. If Congress should appropriate a sum of money sufficient to give a few sheep to each family, I am confident they would keep them and not kill them. From the wool the women would make their clothing, and from the milk feed the children to a considerable extent. The money could be better expended here for that purpose than to attempt to drive them from the States. There ought to be an appropriation for hats and shoes, and some domestics, cotton cloth and calico and a few dyes; and there should also be some farming implements, a blacksmith's and carpenter's shop; there ought to be a grist-mill. When the Indians came here, as a general thing, they were very much impoverished and in tatters. I never saw anything like it. Now, they are much better clothed, because the pelts of the sheep slaughtered by the Government were given to the poorer classes of the Indians, and their women have made the wool into blankets, and they are now much better clothed. The hides also have been used by them in their lodges, the green beef-hides have been used by them to make soles for their moccasins. Those who came bringing their flocks and herds with them have increased in the number of their sheep and goats. There is a strong sense of individual property among Navajos, and sheep are prized by them as the highest species of property. They regard each other's rights of property, and punish with great severity any one who infringes upon it. In one case a Navajo was found stealing a horse; they held a council and put him to death. As an evidence of how they prize sheep, I would state that sixty-one Navajos raised and gathered two hundred and fifty-nine thousand pounds of corn fodder which they sold to the Government at fifteen dollars per ton, for which they received sheep at the rate of about four dollars per head, and these persons receiving these sheep have little flocks now, which they prize very highly; very few of them have been killed; they are herded with great care, and the wool preserved and manufactured into clothing. I have caused to be sowed upon the Navajo farm, of wheat, fifteen thousand pounds; of beans, sixteen hundred and seventy-seven pounds; shall probably put in of beans seven thousand pounds more; of corn I have planted eleven thousand three hundred and eighty-seven pounds."

It was in the early summer time comparatively that we were there. The crops at that time promised well. The wheat was ripe enough almost to begin to turn for the harvest, but after we left the Bosque Redondo, from the information which we received, it was attacked by some sort of worm or insect there which almost absolutely destroyed the whole crop of that season, and the Indians were compelled to be supplied with food from the commissary department of the Army, and that is the way in which they were supported, and that is the reason why it costs so much.

Mr. HOWARD. I beg to inquire of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin whether these people occupying these splendid lands that are described in the book from which he has been reading are the people whom he proposes to support by the money of the United States?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The simple question is, whether we will feed the Indians or fight them. Which is the most economical?

Mr. HOWARD. But I understand the honorable Senator that the Indians are occupying a very splendid tract of country, very fruitful, very fertile, very productive of various descriptions of grain; where the peach is raised, the apricot, &c., corn and wheat and sheep and cattle and horses and hogs, as I suppose. How does it happen that they are so poor as to be objects of charity?

Mr. CONESS. I can answer the Senator, I think.

Mr. HOWARD. I am asking the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the Senator will allow me, I will finish very soon what I have to say. I will read from the testimony the answers of the chiefs of the Navajos themselves, as we examined them. Cadette, the chief of the Apaches, was examined in the presence of the committee and gave his statement. Mr. ROSS questioned him:

"Question by Mr. ROSS. Do you know of any other country where you could get along any better than here?"

"Thinks he could live better in his old country than in this. The water is better, and better grass."

"Question. Is it the unanimous wish of all the chiefs to go back to their old country?"

"They would rather go back to their old country. Should they be sent back, they could work there, near Fort Stanton."

That is another place in the Territory of New Mexico. I state these facts in order to show to the Senate that these chiefs do not willingly stay on this reservation. They would be glad to go back to their old country and roam at large. The Navajo country from which the Navajos were taken was about as large as the State of Ohio. It is not a very small reservation. The most of it is an immense barren desert, covered with a little of this short grass, immense table lands, mesas as they are called, some grand and glorious mountains, with a few valleys. That is the general description of that country. The military gentlemen say from the whole experience of the country since they have been there—and such is the history of that country before we acquired it—men of eighty years of age stating to them that the Navajos and the Mexicans have always been at war, and that it is necessary to keep two or three regiments of troops there to keep them peaceful, to prevent their depredations, it being cheaper to feed them than to fight them, they have taken these Indians and put them upon a reservation, so that fewer troops can guard them. That is the military view of the question. We examined the chiefs themselves.

"Epifanio Vigil, interpreter, sworn, (explained to the chiefs the object of the committee;)"

"Herrero and Armigo are the two principal chiefs of the Navajo nation. Herrero has been chief for a good many years. Armigo is here, but unwell. Herrero has not numbered his people; does not know how many are present on the reservation; does not know how many are in their old country, but there are three bands, under chiefs Manuelito, Herrero, and Yutachiquito. One chief says Yutachiquito has sixty-four men. Herrero is a cousin of the head chief present."

Questions were put by the committee to all the chiefs, explained to them by the interpreter, and their answers taken.

"Question. Are the Navajo people on the reservation working pretty well?"

"Yes, they are, and want to work."

"Question. Do the young men like to work and want to work?"

"Yes; the young men work well; love to work; even the women."

"Question. Are your women and children all pretty well now?"

"All are not well; some of them are sick; all agree to what Herrero says."

"Question. If your people had plenty of wool could they make all the clothes?"

"Yes; if we had the wool we could make all the clothes for the tribe. All of them know how to cultivate by irrigation; thinks there is plenty of land; but somehow the crops do not come out well. Last year the worms destroyed their crops. There is plenty of land, and when the ditches are all cut out there will be land enough; there is plenty of water; there is plenty of pasture for all their stock; some have but twenty-five, thirty, or forty, but more have none; none have a hundred. They try and keep their sheep for their milk, and only kill them when necessary, when the rations are short or smell bad; they depend on the milk of the sheep to live and to give to the little children; they are honest and do not kill each other's sheep; they own their animals themselves, and not in common; they would like each man to have his own piece of land and work it for himself and his family; they have not grain, stock, and other things enough; when they have enough they would like to have their children go to school; they would not like to have their children go to school until they had learned all kinds of trades, so they could make a living. Some officers at Fort Canby told them when they got here the Government would give them herds of horses, sheep, and cattle, and other things they needed, but they have not received them; they had to lose a good deal of their property on account of the war, and the Utahs stole the rest from them; have been at war with the Utahs nine years, and about the same number of years with the Mexicans. Before the war with the Utahs and Mexicans had everything we wanted; but now have lost everything. Herrero was quite young when the war commenced with the Mexicans. In the war everything was stolen on both sides—women and children, flocks. When children were taken we kept them, sold them, or gave them back. The Mexicans got the most children; we have only two, and they don't want to go back; have not been in the habit of selling our own children; don't know of an instance. They don't expect to be rich again; but if they had plenty of stock and wagons to haul their wool they would prosper again. Some of the soldiers do not treat us well."

"Question. Would you all like to go back to your old country or remain here?"

"They would rather prefer to be in their own country, although they have most everything they want here; they are all of this opinion, and would like to have you send them back; and if you have any presents to give them they will distribute them among them."

I read these facts to show the testimony given on this question. The truth is that in the Territory of New Mexico, among all the people there, it has been one of the greatest contests that ever occurred in a Territory. It was Bosque and anti-Bosque. The question was whether the Indians should be kept on the Bosque or not, and the people took sides on that question. I have given you the testimony and the opinions of military men, and given you the testimony and opinions of civilians. Now, I will tell you the opinion to which the committee arrived. The committee came to the conclusion that if the question had belonged to us to decide in the beginning, we would never have advised a military expedition into their country to take them out for the purpose of putting them on this Bosque Redondo reservation. But when we arrived to that opinion we were just as clearly also of the opinion that after the War Department had actually entered upon this policy and pursued it for six or eight or nine years, this policy of capturing these Indians to compel them to go into the reservation, and after the Indians had been actually captured and put upon the reservation, and the Government had been at all this expense in doing it, and had got the Indians settled upon it, it would now be unwise in us to send them back again into their own country. That is the result at which we arrived; and I think it is the proper and the sensible result to which all must come.

Now, the effect of the amendment of my friend from Ohio will be simply this: if you say that after the 1st of July next nothing more shall be given to feed these Indians by the War Department, and you appropriate but $100,000 to feed eight thousand Indians, it will be impossible to subsist them.

Mr. SHERMAN. What has become of the horses and sheep and cattle and what they have raised?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. How is it, I ask my honorable friend, that there should have been so much money expended by the War Department in supporting these Indians all the while. What they have expended has been in addition to all that the Indians have raised. I ask my honorable friend, would he advise the killing and eating of all these sheep which grow the wool that clothes the population, or should the flocks be kept and preserved?

Mr. SHERMAN. In reply to the question of the honorable Senator, I will simply say that the statement he has already made shows that this proposition is the most ridiculous that was ever made in the American Senate. Here, we are told, are about six thousand Navajo Indians on a reservation forty miles square, with eighteen thousand acres of arable land, plenty of water, ditches for irrigation, who merely require enough to support themselves, in a climate so mild and gentle that there is no danger of freezing, where there is everything that can make life comfortable, according to the description the Senator gives, a perfect Arcadia in a wilderness; and it is expected that we shall tax the overtaxed people of the United States to the amount of $1,000,000 a year to feed these Indians, that we shall keep six hundred troops there to guard them so as to prevent them from stealing and from running away from this beautiful Arcadia to the wilderness they formerly occupied. The whole scheme is so simply ridiculous that it strikes me the Senate certainly will see its way out of the difficulty without much debate. During the whole time the Senator has been reading the testimony it seems to me he has constantly been making an argument against the appropriation.

Mr. CONNESS. And if I understand him correctly, over two thousand of them are children at the breast.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Oh, no.

Mr. CONNESS. That is the way the Senator read it as I understood him.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are thirteen hundred males above the age of twenty one, and the rest are women and children; and it seems the women are very industrious; they make blankets, and do a great many other things; and the children cannot live so highly, and yet the Government of the United States now for several years has paid at the rate of $250 per head, or $1,250 for the support of a family of Indians among the Navajos, although it is said they have a beautiful reservation with plenty of sheep and cattle. I am only sorry that I proposed to appropriate $100,000. If I were to draw the amendment over again I would make it $50,000.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Gentlemen smile at this thing; but perhaps they will smile out of the other corner of the mouth when they come to foot the bills, if the Indians are allowed to leave their reservation and return to their own country, as is proposed. They will be scattered all over New Mexico; depredations will come on again, and you will be called upon to pay two or three regiments of troops to invade their country again and capture them again. It required three expeditions of our military force before we could capture them. General Sumner failed in his attempt to capture them; General Canby failed in his attempt; and it was Kit Carson who succeeded at last, when he surrounded them and destroyed in the autumn the crops upon which they should live in the winter, so that he compelled them in the winter to come out and surrender.

I have no more responsibility about this matter than other Senators. The Senate have taken from me to a certain extent the special responsibility of Indian affairs, and put it on my honorable friend from Missouri. He will find it a thankless task before he gets through. So far as I am concerned personally I am very much obliged to the Senate for relieving me from the responsibility of these Indian affairs, the most troublesome, thankless thing there is connected with all our public affairs. To give one's attention to Indian matters, and study the questions connected with them, requires time, and it is an office that is hardly appreciated. I confess there are a good many things about it that I do not like. Gentlemen get prejudiced against Indian legislation, and give it the go-by, and by some little amendment undertake to overturn a settled system. The War Department has for eight or ten years been attending to these Indians, at a cost I suppose of fifteen or twenty million dollars, and now you will overthrow it all in a moment. That is not what we proposed to do. It would be better in my judgment not to pass anything on the subject, but just drop the whole proposition, and leave them where they are, in the hands of the War Department, and let that Department feed them just as cheaply as they can. The War Department has decided that it is cheaper to feed them than to fight them, and have captured these ten thousand Indians and put them on this reservation. I have no doubt officers of the War Department have endeavored to get along as economically as they could.

Mr. HOWARD. Have the Navajos made war on the United States?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. They have made war on these people whom the United States are bound to defend. I say to my honorable friend that for two hundred years these Navajos have been living in that country, ever since the Spaniards came there, depredating on the Mexicans, and the Mexicans depredating on the Navajos, stealing each other's women and children and flocks and herds, and killing each other. We took that Territory just in that state of things, and we have bound ourselves by treaty to keep the peace in that Territory and defend the Mexicans.

Mr. CONNESS. I can hardly trust myself to say anything on this subject. I am so thoroughly and entirely convinced that there is a system so stupendous in its nature, in its fraud, being carried on against the Government in New Mexico, and I am so full of information on the subject from a hundred reliable sources, that I can scarce trust myself to utter a word on the subject. The campaign was made against the Navajos, under the direction of General Carleton, under the immediate command of Kit Carson, a campaign almost utterly needless, and in its results beneficial only to the men who are disbursing the public moneys in New Mexico to the amount of millions of dollars—ascheme, in my judgment, from the beginning to collect eight thousand Indians upon a place that we are told at one time is a desert, has nothing in it, and at another time blossoms as the rose; but in addition to whatever they can produce there they are fed to the tune of $1,500,000 per annum, as is stated by the honorable Senator! Just so long as military officers are permitted to command and to be interested in contracts, to control the commissariat, just so long it will be their interest to feed a large number of Indians. Why, Mr. President, in California, for a period of over ten years, the number of Indians that money was appropriated by Congress to support was counted not doubly, but trebly, and twice that. Money was appropriated to feed Indians that never saw the light. We are now feeding in my State over six thousand Indians, taking care of them, clothing them, for they do not make their own blankets upon the reservations in that State, and how much are you appropriating annually for that purpose? The Senator can see by looking at the bill that for all the reservations in California not more than $75,000 is appropriated, and with this sum we are supporting over six thousand Indians upon reservations; and I have in my possession letters from the retiring superintendent who counts the bushels by hundreds and thousands, in excess of what the Indians needed, that are being put into the market to be sold. But, sir, that is under honest superintendents; that is under management such as is applied by every man to business affairs.

But how is it in New Mexico? We hear of the Bosque Redondo, the Pecos river, the traveling committee taken possession of by the military commander, feasted, handled, filled with facts, with nothing in them! Mr. President, General Carleton went down there with about three thousand troops from California. He had his commission from the Governor of California. His three thousand troops were as splendid men as ever stepped;

they were not enlisted from the unemployed people of the country. They were commanded by subaltern officers who were no ordinary men, but who left their profitable business, some of them avocations yielding five to ten and twenty thousand dollars annually, to take a captain's commission, with the expectation of meeting the foe of their country in the field. They were marched down to New Mexico and kept there for three or four years, and they have nearly all testified against the gross corruption, the perversion of the public interests, and the almost universal plunder that has been the rule in that Territory. Their word is as good as the word of any man on earth. I have a letter in my hand, received to-night by this day's mail, from a lady, and you would blush if I should read a paragraph from it touching this commander. I handed to two or three Senators a few days since—the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] read it—a letter from a responsible man; but I cannot read extracts from letters here. I have stated before this that I have made honest effort to stop these swindlings, but have failed, utterly failed. If, however, I shall live till the next Congress shall meet for business, and the War Department shall not do its duty by that time, I shall call for a special committee of this body, and if necessary investigate and put before the country the facts as to the utter mismanagement and corruption of public administration in that Territory. This demand for $670,000, which is less, the Senator says, than $1,500,000, is made to continue this system, and we are told this is a saving. I suppose the rations drawn by "the babes at the breast," of whom the Senator read, the Government has been charged for. I have heard of such things before. We are told in one breath by the Senator that these Indians have fields and lands and stock of all kinds, fifteen, twenty, and some a hundred head in number, and yet $1,500,000 per annum is paid to feed them from the commissariat of the United States.

Mr. President, if I were the Commander-in-Chief of the United States somebody would be shot, and that would cure it. I would apply the remedy, which, if applied at the beginning of the great war we have passed through, when fellows went to the field to steal and not to fight, would have been merciful as well as just. Had they been taken out and shot, it would have purified the whole country, the Army first and the country next. The administration in New Mexico wants a little touch of that. There is military in that, and when administered in accordance with justice there is justice in it, too, and mercy as well.

I do not know which is best, that the authorities there shall be allowed to continue in charge of these Indians, or they committed to the charge and custody of the Indians. The descriptions given of the Navajoes prove them to be the superiors of the men we have put over them. Their intelligence is spoken of, and no doubt with truth; their kindness of heart; their half-civilized or more than half-civilized system of society. It is testified, and the Senator has read the testimony to us, that the better way of taking care of these Indians is in pueblos. What is a pueblo? A town, a village. It is testified that they are fitted to live in towns and villages, and engage in manufactures; and they produce the finest blankets of the kind made in the world, and yet they are subjected to beastly control, and the nation is plundered in addition.

More than that, sir, the unbridled passions of those who command them are not confined to the Indians; but they run rampant elsewhere, and if anybody objects in that Territory he is ordered under arrest. The tyranny is complete; there is no remedy. If an honest and able man can be chosen—and the country is full of such—and sent down there, independent of all these creatures in it, I would trust his report, and if necessary I would feed to the extent he recommended; but I tell you that our sources of information at present are totally unreliable; and it is not simply a mistake to continue what we have been doing, but it is a crime. I have no doubt of the intent of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin to do what is right and what is generous and what is humane. These, I know, are all his impulses; but he is utterly in error about this whole thing I undertake to say. I am not willing to vote even as much as the honorable Senator from Ohio proposes. He only made a guess at it, as he will concede. He proposes a large amount of money, and he does not know just exactly how much to suggest. To continue to vote these appropriations longer, to continue to allow the military authorities there to feed these Indians ad libitum, and thus consume the public stores ad libitum while somebody gets the money and puts it in his pocket, is a wrong so great and a fraud so stupendous that it should be stopped at once.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me that we have very indefinite information upon which to base an appropriation of $100,000 in this case; and the object for which it is to be appropriated is, I think, too vague to justify our action. It is evident to my mind, from the history of this matter, that these Indians have been taken away from a country where they could support themselves and which was suited to their condition in life. It is true they had there some warfare with the Mexicans; the Mexicans made war upon them; and they, in turn, upon the Mexicans; but it does not appear that they have been very hostile to the people of the United States. It is also very clearly presented to us that these people are perfectly capable of taking care of themselves in their own country, where they ought to be. We have taken them away from their homes, and put them in a country almost barren and incapable of supporting them. It seems to me a proper course would be to appropriate a sum of money sufficient to remove them back to the place from whence they came. I do not know precisely how much it will take; but that is the only sensible idea to my mind that has been advanced on the subject—the one that has been advanced by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW]—to return them to the place whence they came and where they were capable of supporting themselves. I think it is perfectly cruel and inhuman to keep eight thousand people on a small section of country, totally incapable of supporting them, unfit for their habits of life, where they are dying with disease constantly. We ought to release them from their imprisonment and let them go back to their own country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. HENDERSON.]

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio if he is entirely confident that the amendment is in exactly the right shape now. It may be supposed by the military to be their duty to keep these Indians upon this reservation and not to furnish them with any food or subsistence. I should think, if it is intended to take away from them the supplies which the Government now furnishes, it ought to be distinctly understood that they are to be allowed to return to their own country. I understand that this amendment provides that a certain amount shall be appropriated for these Indians, and after a certain date no subsistence shall be supplied to them; but will not the military, as these Indians have been captured and have been put upon this reservation, feel bound to keep there and deny to them any subsistence? The consequence may be that the Indians may be starved to death upon the reservation. I suggest whether it would not be advisable to amend the amendment so as to imply at any rate that the military should allow these Indians to go back to their own country, or should transfer them to their own country.

Mr. SHERMAN. That whole matter is left to the proper department. There is nothing in this amendment to interfere with that. The amendment is to appropriate $100,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to relieve these people and provide that after the 1st of July they shall not be fed by the quartermaster's department. That is all there is of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know that is all there is of it; but does it not leave these Indians in the hands of the military as prisoners, and deny to the military the right to feed them or take care of them, notwithstanding they are prisoners?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator thinks it important, he may add a proviso saying that the Indians shall not be held as prisoners of war by the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the suggestion simply.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I should like to hear it read as it now stands.

The Secretary read the amendment, as follows:

For the relief of the Navajo Indians now at or near Fort Sumner, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000: Provided, That no rations or supplies shall be furnished to said Indians by the War Department after the 1st day of July next.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I think that is very dangerous legislation. The War Department have these eight thousand prisoners on their hands. They are substantially prisoners.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not eight thousand.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. This gentleman says there were eight thousand.

Mr. CONNESS. That gentleman is what might be called a swift witness.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Major Bristol I refer to. I must say that from all I have ever seen or known of Major Bristol myself he is a gentleman of character and standing. He must be well known to the Senators from Michigan, both of them, for Detroit is his place of residence. He is an officer of the regular Army, whose reputation I have never heard questioned. There are reports also taken as a part of the testimony of the number of the Indians from time to time on the reservation.

Mr. CONNESS. I hold in my hand the report of Colonel A. D. Norton, superintendent of Indian affairs in New Mexico, for 1866, with a memorandum made upon it, sent by him since this discussion began, stating that only six thousand nine hundred Navajoes were on the reservation at the last accounts. That is not eight thousand.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to read from the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated October 31, 1865, a statement of the general question with regard to these Indians. He said then:

"In regard to the Navajoes, now established at the Bosque Redondo reservation, the accumulated testimony is so conflicting, derived from sources equally entitled to credit, and from persons who should have, and, so far as appears, have had but one object in view, the best interest of the Government and of the Indians, that I am reluctant at present to express a decided opinion in regard to the permanent policy to be adopted. The difference is wide between the views of the late superintendent, Dr. Steck, who urged, and was supported by excellent authority in urging, that the Bosque Redondo reservation was barely sufficient for the Apaches, for whom it was set apart—that the Navajoes and Apaches could not live together upon it; that the Navajoes could best support themselves upon a reservation in their own country where they had always been an agricultural and pastoral people, raising large crops and making their own garments from the produce of their own flocks, and that the enormous expense of feeding them at the Bosque Redondo, counting by millions almost, was an unnecessary expenditure—and those of General Carleton, the military commandant of the district, who insisted that for the sake of permanent peace the Navajoes must be taken entirely away from their own country, and that when once settled upon a reservation they would provide for their own support."

General Carleton took the responsibility of testing the question by removing the Navajoes to the reservation; and this being done, they have been supported there by the War Department, with the aid of an appropriation of a comparatively small amount by Congress, placed at the disposal of the Interior Department."

This was the experiment of General Carleton, the military commander of the district, without any authority for his proceedings other than that derived from his power as commander of the military district which included New Mexico; and it was done against the opinion of the proper officer of the Government who was in charge of the Indians, and whose opinion, as here stated, was supported by the strongest reasons. This report shows that the Indian agent at that time pointed out the very consequences which have since resulted from the adoption of this experiment. We have stood silently by and permitted this military commander to try his experiment for a period of two years, till he has saddled us with an expense of a million and a half per annum merely for the support of these Indians, and besides an additional enormous amount for the support and maintenance of the troops under his command, probably in all two and a half or three millions a year! This is the experiment which, with full information when it began, we have permitted to go on for a period of two years; and yet it seems there are some men in this country who think the Treasury has not been bled sufficiently, that enough of public money has not been poured out in New Mexico and gone into the hands of favorites and of contractors. We are yet engaged in grave debate to determine whether this military experiment is to be continued or not.

General Sherman says in his report, made last November, that it is impossible to go on with this system; that if it is to be pursued application must be made to Congress, and a special and large appropriation for this particular object must be made; that as lieutenant general of our armies, and to some extent responsible for what is taking place, he is not in favor of diverting the funds of the War Department to this object in such an enormous stream of expenditure.

The amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] continues the control of the War Department until the 1st of next July. I should like to terminate it immediately; but it is better to fix that limit than to fix no limit at all and permit this system of abuse to go on without any check whatever from Congress. If Congress shall permit it to go on, it will become just as guilty as if it had ordered this experiment to be undertaken originally and had deliberately and willfully maintained and encouraged it upon full knowledge of all the facts.

Now, sir, do what any sensible man would advise you to do; do what was proposed by good authority in the beginning of this experiment; allow these men of the mountains and forest to go back to the place of their former residence, and supply such protection as is necessary to the frontier. Certainly it will not cost an enormous amount of money to protect the frontier. In former times before we acquired New Mexico the amount of military force used for the defense of the inhabitants was quite small; and that we who claim that our modes of administration are superior to those which we superseded in that country should fall into such a system of abuse as this and continue it for years is to me most surprising. Our outlays upon this object are not necessary, nor even useful. On the contrary, they are wasteful, improvident, corrupt, and scandalous. Let us end them, and restore the control of sound sense and the practice of economy to our administration of affairs in a distant but interesting Territory.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I offer this amendment, to come in as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of any sub-Indian agent, whose salary or compensation exceeds $1,000 per annum, the same shall only be filled by some person, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, except if such vacancy shall occur in the recess of the Senate, the same may be temporarily filled by some person to be commissioned by the President, and he shall hold his office until the end of the next session.

The amendment was agreed to.

39TH CONG. 2D SESS.—No. 114.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment reported by the Committee on Finance which was passed over, on which no vote has yet been had. It was to strike out on page 65 the clause appropriating $50,000 for expenses of collecting and locating the Colorado river Indians in Arizona.

Mr. HENDERSON. I prefer that the question should not be taken on that amendment at this moment. I desire to present some facts to the Senate in reference to it. I doubt the propriety of striking out that clause in the bill. I hope at any rate it will not be stricken out at present; but when the bill comes into the Senate it can be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over for the present unless objection be made.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to amend the bill in line fourteen hundred and one, on page 58, by striking out "thirty-five" and inserting "seventy," so as to make the appropriation for general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Arizona Territory, presents of goods, agricultural implements, &c., $70,000.

There are thirty-five thousand Indians in Arizona, and the appropriation that I propose will be two dollars a head. I would not ask to increase the appropriation in the House bill but for certain facts that are stated in the report of the superintendent, whose letter is perfectly clear on the subject, showing, in my judgment, the necessity of the appropriation. It is in consequence of military orders that have been made confining a large body of Indians there to a certain reservation. They are prohibited from going beyond a fixed line, and the superintendent demonstrates beyond any doubt, in my judgment, that if this policy is to be pursued (and he has no power or authority whatever to change it; it is being carried out under the orders of General Mason, who is in command there) it will require an appropriation of this amount, and perhaps a larger amount, but I am not prepared to go to the extent that he seems to desire. I really think, however, that this appropriation is not too large for the large body of Indians in Arizona. I presume it has become necessary to confine a good many of these Indians in narrower limits than they have heretofore been held in; and in that view of the case I think the appropriation ought to be made. The letter is a lengthy one, and I do not propose to trouble the Senate with it unless some member shall desire to hear it. I have examined the case carefully, and am satisfied with the necessity of the appropriation on the facts presented.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have another amendment, to come in after line fourteen hundred and eighty-one, on page 61:

For reappropriation of the sum carried to the surplus fund for warrant No. 172, dated June 30, 1866, under the head "for surveying and allotting to the proper persons the reserved tracts per ninth and tenth articles, with Sacs and Foxes and other tribes of Indians, July 15, 1860," $1,209.97.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. On page 62, after line fourteen hundred and ninety-three, I move to insert:

For additional pay of four physicians, four blacksmiths and assistants, four carpenters, four teachers, and four farmers on the four reservations in California for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, $7,200.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to purchase a saw and grist-mill for the Round Valley reservation, $5,000.

The Senator from California, whose attention I have called to this matter, will find on page 62 of the bill, this item:

For pay of one physician, one blacksmith, one assistant blacksmith, one farmer, one carpenter upon each of the four reservations of California, at the rate of fifty dollars per month, $12,000.

There are twenty-four persons required, four physicians, four blacksmiths, four assistant blacksmiths, four farmers, four carpenters, and four teachers upon these reservations, and the amount appropriated in the bill for them is $12,000. The superintendent of Indian affairs there says that it is utterly impossible to procure anything like competent men at these prices, between forty and fifty dollars a month, and he requires a largely greater sum than I propose. I propose $7,200 additional, making $19,200 for these twenty-four men during the year. He says that carpenters cannot be employed there at the rate of forty or fifty dollars a month, nor can teachers, nor can physicians who possess any qualifications at all as physicians. It struck me that the demand was a very reasonable one, and that it ought to be allowed. There are various other appropriations asked for which I do not choose to grant. This one I thought was proper. It seems to me a very small sum, and I doubt whether competent men can be procured for the pay. The Senator from California, however, will be better able to determine that matter than myself.

In regard to the mill, it struck me also that the reasons in his report, which can be read if any Senator desires to hear it, show that that appropriation ought to be made.

Mr. CONNESS. There are only two items in that connection that are new. The one relates to the mill proposed, and the other to the teachers. Up to the present time all the other officers have had existence since the passage of the bill in 1864 to reorganize Indian affairs in California. Prior to that time we had two superintendencies in the State. At that time we made one, and made a considerable reduction in expenses connected with that branch of the public service. The amount fixed as compensation for the physicians and the mechanics, including the blacksmith and carpenter on the reservations, was too small, and the difficulty that has resulted from it has been seriously felt in the management. There never has up to this time been any teachers employed, and there have been no schools, and are none now on the reservations there. The necessity for schools has been very great, and I am very glad to find that the committee have allowed a small appropriation to institute schools on these reservations. I can only say to the Senate that the Indian affairs in that State now are managed in the most creditable manner; that the private business of no man in the country is managed with more exactness than the affairs of the Government upon these four Indian reservations. I feel a good deal of pride in connection with it, because it has been to a very large extent the object of my solicitude and care since I came here. I hold, and have expressed the opinion upon other occasions, that the management of Indian affairs must necessarily depend upon the character and capacity and integrity—character includes it all—of the persons immediately employed, even the lesser or lower agents on the reservations; and with that view great care has been taken in the selection of these officers. The result has met the expectation of those who desired the best possible administration of affairs in the Indian department; and it must be gratifying to us all to know that in one State at least Indian affairs have undergone a great change for the better. I am glad this appropriation is asked for, and I agree with the Senator from Missouri in granting the amount he proposes, and not the whole, in making a beginning in that way.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am very glad to have the concurrence of the Senator from California. We have had but little time to determine these matters, and I did not know but that in all probability I should make mistakes in many cases. While I am upon the floor I think it my duty to say, that from the examination I have been able to give to Indian affairs, my impression is that they are better conducted in the State of California than in any other part of the United States. I am thoroughly satisfied that the system has been reduced almost to perfection, if not quite so, in that State, and I regret exceedingly that it is not to be found in other sections of the country. Taking the number of Indians that are in the State, we certainly conduct Indian affairs with less expense than in almost any other section of the Territories or States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. On page 61, after line fourteen hundred and eighty-one, I move to insert:

For the compensation of eight extra clerks in the office of Indian affairs, under the acts of August 5, 1854, March 3, 1855, and March 3, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, $11,200.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to that. This is not the place for it. This bill appropriates only for the Indian service, not for any bureau in Washington.

Mr. HENDERSON. I believe the Senator is right, and I withdraw the amendment. I offer this amendment to come in at the same place:

For this amount, being the balance due on the award of the Secretary of the Interior to the delegates of the southern Cherokees, for costs and expenses incurred by them in negotiating the recent treaty with the United States and the Cherokee Indians, to be reimbursed by the Government of the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of the Cherokee lands, $18,825.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have an explanation of that.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will state that it is to reimburse the Cherokees who came here at the invitation of the Government to negotiate the treaty of 1865. Under the treaty we procured eight hundred thousand acres of Cherokee reserve lands, which will of course have to be sold at not less than one dollar an acre. This appropriation is to be refunded out of the proceeds of those sales. The only difficulty about it is that we may possibly forget to deduct the amount, and on the receipt of the money from the sales of lands, it may be paid over to the Cherokees without remembering this appropriation. I presume, however, the Indian department will charge it to the Cherokees, and remember it.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Committee on Finance looked at all the papers presented on this subject, and thought there was no legal obligation on the Government to pay this money. It is a mere payment of it now, for of course it will never be repaid to the Treasury. Such a thing, I think, was never known. The lands referred to will be sold and probably sold on credit.

Mr. HENDERSON. They must be sold for cash under the treaty.

Mr. SHERMAN. I see no obligation on the part of the United States to pay this amount. There is no treaty stipulation of the kind. I have such perfect confidence in the judgment of the Senator from Missouri that if he will say that he has examined it, and after examination thinks there is any legal obligation on the United States to pay this money, I shall be willing to vote it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I cannot so state; but it was my impression that it was in the treaty. The Senator from Wisconsin perhaps will remember better in regard to that. I am certain of this, that we sent for the head men of the Cherokees, and had them brought to Washington, and the treaty was made here. Whether it be a legal obligation on the Government or not, it is certainly a moral obligation. If we did not intend to pay them for coming here we should have treated with them at a different place. It was rather an order to appear here. It was in consequence of difficulties between the Cherokees and the United States Government on account of the rebellion that they were ordered to appear here, as other tribes were after the war, and were ordered to enter into treaty stipulations with the Government. I suppose, of course, their annuities might have been confiscated; but the Indians, in order to avoid difficulties of this sort, made their appearance here, and treaties were negotiated. I think the appropriation is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I offer this amendment to come in on page 61 after line fourteen hundred and eighty-one:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be required to pay the necessary expenses of the commission appointed by the President to visit the Indian country near Fort Phil. Kearney for the purpose of ascertaining the facts relative to the Indian massacre near that place on the 21st of December, 1866, including pay of commissioners, traveling expenses, presents, and rations for the Indians when necessary, and pay of guides and interpreters, $20,000.

Some time in January, shortly after the massacre at Fort Phil. Kearney, I offered a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War to give us all the information in their respective offices or Departments on this subject. We received their answers and they are before us. It seems that on the 18th of February the President appointed certain gentlemen, General Sully, General Sanford, General Buford, Colonel Parker, Judge Kinney, and Mr. S. P. Bogby to proceed to the neighborhood of Fort Phil. Kearney, as far as Fort Laramie anyhow, to ascertain all the facts and make report to him. From the reading of the orders I gathered that this was thought to be necessary in consequence of the action of the Senate or House of Representatives. I do not so understand the action of either House as suggesting, much less ordering, any such thing. Four of these commissioners are military officers, but their traveling expenses are considerable. Whether we are under any obligation to pay such expenses is another question. The proposition has been sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs, but I do not report the amendment as the action of the committee. It has been insisted on that, inasmuch as this commission have been sent forward to examine into this matter, they will be necessarily put to expense; and the information they will collect will be very desirable. I hold in my hands the orders of the President of the United States to these commissioners.

Mr. SHERMAN. Have they gone?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not know whether they have gone or not. The proposition has come into my hands pretty late; I deem it my duty to place it before the Senate; but if there be any objection to it at this late hour of the night I shall not insist upon it.

Mr. BUCKALEW. As the Senator explains it, four of these commissioners are Army officers, and of course their pay is already provided for.

Mr. HENDERSON. Not their expenses.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I presume an appropriation of one half the amount mentioned would be quite adequate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object entirely to this appropriation. It seems to me it is very wrong to make such an appropriation. We know all about the murder of Lieutenant Colonel Fetterman and the soldiers under him, some sixty odd privates and a number of officers, making altogether about ninety men murdered. It was done within six miles of Fort Phil. Kearney. They went out on an irregular expedition and rode into an ambush and were killed, and no witness was left to tell the tale. Now, to pay $20,000 out of the Treasury to ascertain the particulars of the affair it seems to me is a waste of public money. These gentlemen would go on a pleasure trip over the plains.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Under what law was the commission organized?

Mr. SHERMAN. No law whatever; no authority of either House.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I had seen it stated that Colonel Carrington was to be court-martialed.

Mr. SHERMAN. That would bring out all the facts.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly it would.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no occasion in the world for this commission. I hope, therefore, the amendment will be defeated, unless it is withdrawn.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If this were for sending out a commission to seek those Indians who have never as yet made treaties with the Government, those bands of Sioux which occupy that portion of the country through which we have undertaken to open a road without their consent, I would be very glad to have such an appropriation made. What has given rise to this difficulty at Fort Phil. Kearney is simply this: the Government of the United States, by a law of Congress, has directed a military road to be opened right through the very heart of the Indian country, where they live and where they get their supplies, and that road being opened and the emigrants going through the heart of this country we are making war on the Indians. That war has been going on for some time with those bands of Sioux. They have not treated for peace to cede that portion of the country, and now we are at war with them. It will cost hundreds of thousands of dollars and millions of dollars unless we come to some arrangement with these Indians. All the money that is expended for the purpose of negotiating peace with the Indians, for the purpose of making presents to the Indians, for the purpose of inducing the Indians to leave the country without war—every dollar that we pay in that way is repaid to the Government a hundred, yes, a thousandfold.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose you would pay them so much a head for killing our soldiers!

Mr. DOOLITTLE. No; I do not propose to pay them for killing our soldiers. I say that when we, the Congress of the United States, direct the opening of a traveled road, an emigrant road right through the heart of an Indian country, with which Indians we have not made any treaty arrangement to obtain from them the right to pass through that country, we make war on them; we are the aggressors; we begin the war, because our going into the heart of their country deprives them of the means of living; we cut off their supplies; we drive away their game; we drive the Indians from their homes. It is war by us on them just as this late military order of General Sherman that not an Indian between the Platte and the Arkansas rivers must be found—not one, although so far as treaty stipulations are concerned we have expressly provided in our treaties with the Indians that they may hunt there until we find homes for them on which we can place them and withdraw them from that country. Such orders are in substance a declaration of war. We must look at these things as they are, and upon the Indian tribes that are in that country, and recognize the fact that we, being at war with these Indians, they, in the war which they prosecute against us, led our men into ambush and killed them. It was an act of war on their part. This war, as a matter of course, will go on unless we come to some terms of peace; and here permit me to say that it would be economy on our part to do anything to feed these Indians and to induce them to leave that country rather than go to war with them.

These are the facts. The rush of our people into the Indian country and the taking possession of their homes without their consent bring on nearly all of our Indian difficulties. The only objection I have to this amendment is that it does not propose to authorize these commissioners to treat with these Indians for peace in that country. If we must have their country, let us treat with them as to the terms on which they will surrender it and give it up to us. That is the fair and honorable and manly way in which to deal with these tribes. But if we insist on these military orders and sending out our troops to drive the Indians from the plains, from such vast countries as those between the Platte and the Arkansas, to drive them off from the valleys along the base of the mountain ranges near Fort Phil. Kearney and Fort Reno up into the Territory of Montana, we shall have a universal Indian war that will rage from the British Possessions on the north to Mexico on the south, and it will cost the Government at least $50,000,000.

Now, Mr. President, I think that so far as this appropriation is concerned, if the amendment were amended so as to authorize these gentlemen to treat with these Indians for the peaceful occupation of that country and for peace, it would be a good thing.

Mr. CONNESS. I think perhaps it is a good thing that the Indians cannot read our frantic speeches. If they could possibly get access to them I have no doubt they would make war from the British line to the southern border. They would give the Indian an immense impression, first of his rights and next of his power.

Now, Mr. President, in my opinion our great mistake in dealing with the Indians has been in instituting this whole system of treaties, in recognizing their jurisdiction. In what part of the United States was that policy never followed? On the Pacific slope. It was not because there are not Indians there, but no right to the soil was ever recognized in the Indians of the Pacific slope; and the consequence is that less trouble has been had with them there than with Indians in any other part of the Union. The Government of the United States elsewhere has recognized their right to the soil, and then we have treaties with them. We bring flocks of chiefs here dressed in togery, painted and feathered up, and committees lead them around and treaties are made with them. These treaties are made here in this body and considered when half a dozen Senators are present, and these great chiefs, with unpronounceable names—"Hole-in-the-day" and something else—are manufactured into immense creatures.

Mr. President, the fact is that we have done too much of this business. I would give more for one of General Sherman's orders in dealing with the Indians than I would for all the treaties that the honorable Senator has ever made; and all the treaties the honorable Senator has made in the last ten years would fill a great many books. It is time to substitute orders for treaties; and the idea of sending out a commission of this kind, composed of two civilians and four military officers, is ridiculous. I should like to know whether it was intended that they should be dressed in some kind of togery. The Indians, when they saw General Grant the other day, I am told were not impressed with his greatness; because, while they were feathered and painted up, the General was a very simple looking man. I think we have acted ridiculously on this subject long enough.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I do not know that I understood the Senator from Wisconsin correctly. Did I understand him to say that whenever we opened a military road or a road of any kind through the Indian country where we had not acquired the title we made war on the Indians?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If we open a road through their country without their consent.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Have we acquired the title to the line of the Pacific railroad?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Most of the way has been acquired by treaty.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Since the building of the road, I expect.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. One of the provisions of the railroad bill is that we shall extinguish the Indian title as we go on with the building of the road.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. We have not done it, I apprehend. I agree with the Senator from California; I cannot admit that our right to cross the continent depends on a tribe of Indians. Are we to be driven from crossing all this immense plain because of the imaginary rights of a roving band of Indians, where there is not one Indian to a hundred thousand acres of land? Are we to be kept from crossing it by a railroad, by a military road, or otherwise, unless they choose to give us leave? I do not believe any such thing.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I concede we have power to drive them off.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. No; we have the right to go through. It is our land if the Pacific coast belongs to the United States of America.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. We have the right to buy the lands of the Indians, and not to allow them to sell them to England or any other country; but we do not own the land until we extinguish the Indian title.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. We have the right to go over it. We have the right to go to Montana; we have the right to go to Idaho; we have the right to go to California and to Nevada; and if in going there we cross land that we have not bought from the Indians we do not make war upon them in my judgment. If we pass over the roads thus made peacefully and quietly, doing them no harm, they have no right to complain; and when we establish the principle that they have a right to complain, that in passing over this land belonging to us we are making war upon them, we are giving them a degree of importance that I think they are not entitled to, and we are diminishing our own importance in connection with them.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I understand that this commission has not yet gone, and no expenses have been incurred. I am opposed to the appropriation. The Army can investigate this matter in the proper trial of the man who is guilty.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to present this amendment, to come in after line three hundred and eighty, on page 17:

For payment to the Choctaw nation and tribe of Indians on account of their claim under the eleventh and twelfth articles of the treaty with said nation, made on the 22d of June, 1855, the sum of $250,000: Provided, That in the future adjustment of the claim of the Choctaws under the treaty aforesaid the said sum shall be charged against the Indians.

This amendment involves the claims due the Choctaws. It is a very important matter. There is a letter from the Secretary of the Interior on the subject that I propose to have read, so that the Senate may be informed about it. The Senate will see from the reading of the letter that there is anyhow a legal case made out against the Government for upward of $2,000,000. I do not wish to startle the Senate by any proposition of this sort; especially do I not wish to do so at this late hour of the night, and Saturday night at that. I am instructed by the committee to offer the amendment or I would not present it. If it were left to my judgment I should not present it at this late hour of the night, especially when there is a desire to get through with the bill. I have been compelled to occupy a good deal of the time of the Senate, and I do not desire to be troublesome; but the Committee on Indian Affairs, a majority of whom are absent, have instructed me to report an amendment appropriating $250,000 on account of these claims, in the language that has been read. I send the communication of the Secretary of the Interior to the table to be read to the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to say a word before the communication is read. If we are to go into the old controversy about the Choctaw claims, which amount to $2,000,000, I do not wish to do it without a full quorum and a long discussion. This is a very complicated and troublesome claim, carrying out a recent treaty ratified at the last session.

Mr. HENDERSON. The treaty of 1855.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the date of the old treaty, but there is a treaty which we ratified at the last session on the same subject.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator will find that if the claim exists at all it is under the treaty of 1855. My view of the question was that, inasmuch as the Choctaws had very largely entered into the rebellion against the Government, or rather into the war against the Government—for they are regarded as an independent nation—they had lost all rights to their annuities, and lost all right to any claim they might have against the Government. The Government might very well have declared after the war that they had lost their rights; but the treaty of 1865 restored to them the right that might have been supposed to be lost. It has certainly restored them now to all the right they had under the treaty of 1855. There had never been any declaration by the Government that their rights were forfeited, that any right whatever was forfeited. There was no law of Congress on that subject.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator has stated the case pretty much as I did. This old claim arises now under the treaty ratified at the last session of Congress. The Choctaws entered into the rebellion, and last year this treaty was made and ratified, no doubt after ample consideration by the Committee on Indian Affairs, but without much consideration by the Senate. This claim was presented at this session to the Committee on Appropriations in the House of Representatives, was examined by them, and they refused to insert it in the bill. The same papers were presented to the Committee on Finance, and they, finding the magnitude of the claim, finding that the language of the recent treaty might probably involve us and renew all the old claims of the Choctaws, restore them to their old relations, revive all of the old claims, although one half the Choctaw tribe has been destroyed by war, felt disposed to examine into it, but had not time. I think now that this subject ought not to be at any time put in an appropriation bill. If an appropriation of money is asked for these Indians to carry into effect the treaty, it should be by a separate bill, which we may consider and debate and discuss. It ought not to be attached as an addendum to an appropriation bill. That was the view the Finance Committee took of it unanimously. I hope the Senate will concur in that view and reject the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. I hope that the amendment will not be considered at this time. I am certainly opposed to it. I recollect when this treaty was pending I came very near bringing down the indignation of the Senate upon me for calling for the yeas and nays and trying to give consideration to it. The whole Senate was going to get mad with me if I insisted on having the thing investigated. I told them that I wanted to rake the whole thing up; that the result of the treaty would be that we should be liable for a large amount of money. I came very near being driven by force of public opinion out of the Senate Chamber for insisting for the yeas and nays upon the treaty. Senators said the day was hot and that it was an outrage to keep them here in executive session with the doors closed to consider it.

Mr. CONNESS. You are out of order; you are telling what took place in executive session. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART. I protested against it, but the Senate ratified the treaty.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If there is an obligation upon the Government, we might just as well meet it. I understand this claim has its origin in the sale of the Choctaw lands to the Government at twelve and a half cents an acre—lands which the Government has since sold at $1 25 an acre; and the treaty made at the last session recognized the claim as having its origin in the treaty of 1855. If that be the state of the case, I do not think it is a debatable question. If we are going to observe our treaties, it need not be made a disputed thing. I think the appropriation ought to be now a reasonable proportion of the amount of the debt. I do not think $250,000 is too much; probably it ought to be a larger sum.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Make it a million.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It does not make any difference with me whether it is one million or two millions, if we have their lands and agreed to pay them for them. I do not believe in this doctrine of the Government taking Indian lands and not paying for them. It has been that sort of hesitation that has involved this Government in a good many troubles with the Indians. Congress ought to live up to a bargain, fair and square, with the Indians. I did not have anything to do with this treaty; did not know much about it.

Mr. WILSON. Did we not make a good bargain?

Mr. HENDRICKS. When we bought the land at twelve and a half cents per acre I suppose it was regarded as a good bargain. If we sold it at $1 25 per acre we made a good deal of money. Under the treaty of last year we agreed to forgive the Indians about the rebellion. I do not know whether the individuals of the tribe going into the war could forfeit a right that the tribe had. As a tribe I do not understand that they went into the war. A portion of them went South and a portion North.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the Senator from Indiana will allow me to interrupt him, I will read the action which Congress did take, forfeiting to a certain extent the right of the Choctaws by statute; and precisely to what extent Congress went appears in the language of the statute:

"That all appropriations heretofore or hereafter made to carry into effect treaty stipulations, or otherwise, in behalf of any tribe or tribes of Indians, all or any portion of whom shall be in a state of actual hostility to the Government of the United States," "may and shall be suspended and postponed wholly or in part, at and during the discretion and pleasure of the President: Provided further, That the President is authorized to suspend such part of the amount heretofore appropriated and not expended and hereinbefore appropriated for the benefit of the tribes named in the preceding proviso."

And for the relief of refugees, &c. The interest and the annuities were by Congress confiscated, but the principal sums were not. That is the fact about it. The provision of the treaty in reviving the relations between us and the Choctaws was leaving out the interest and the annuities, which Congress had confiscated. We simply restored them to the rights which they had before.

Mr. HENDRICKS. As part of my remarks, I ask for the reading of the letter from the head of the Department.

The Secretary read the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
WASHINGTON, D. C., February 5, 1867.

SIR: I have the honor to invite the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to a claim of the Choctaw nation of Indians against the United States, growing out of treaty stipulations, and to the necessity of an appropriation to meet it.

By the eleventh article of the treaty concluded at the city of Washington on the 22d of June, 1855, between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians (Statutes-at-Large, volume nine, page 613) it was stipulated and agreed as follows:

"The Government of the United States, not being prepared to assent to the claim set up under the treaty of September 27, 1830, and so earnestly contended for by the Choctaws as a rule of settlement, but justly appreciating the sacrifices, faithful services, and general good conduct of the Choctaw people, and being desirous that their rights and claims against the United States shall receive a just, fair, and liberal consideration, it is therefore stipulated that the following questions be submitted for adjudication to the Senate of the United States:

"1. Whether the Choctaws are entitled to, or shall be allowed, the proceeds of the sale of the lands ceded by them to the United States by the treaty of September 27, 1830, deducting therefrom the cost of their survey and sale, and all just and proper expenditures and payments under the provisions of said treaty; and if so, what price per acre shall be allowed to the Choctaws for the lands remaining unsold, in order that a final settlement with them may be promptly effected. Or,

"2. Whether the Choctaws shall be allowed a gross sum in further and full satisfaction of all their claims, national and individual, against the United States, and if so, how much."

Pursuant to this treaty stipulation the Senate, on the 9th of March, 1859, made their award in the form of a resolution in the following words, namely: (Senate Journal, second session Thirty-Fifth Congress, 1858-59, page 493.)

"Whereas the eleventh article of the treaty of June 22, 1855, with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians provides that the following questions be submitted for decision to the Senate of the United States:

"1. Whether the Choctaws are entitled to or shall be allowed the proceeds of the sales of the lands ceded by them to the United States by the treaty of September 27, 1830, deducting therefrom the costs of their survey and sale and all just and proper expenditures and payments under the provisions of said treaty; and if so, what price per acre shall be allowed to the Choctaws for the lands remaining unsold in order that a final settlement with them may be promptly effected. Or,

"2. Whether the Choctaws shall be allowed a gross sum, in further and full satisfaction of all their claims, national and individual, against the United States, and if so, how much."

Resolved, That the Choctaws be allowed the proceeds of the sale of such lands as have been sold by the United States on the 1st day of January last, deducting therefrom the costs of their survey and sale and all proper expenditures and payments under said treaty; excluding the reservations allowed and secured, and estimating the residue issued in lieu of reservations at the rate of $1 25 per acre; and further, that they be also allowed twelve and a half cents per acre for the residue of said lands.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior cause an account to be stated with the Choctaws, showing what amount is due them according to the above prescribed principles of settlement, and report the same to Congress." (See Reports Senate, No. 374 second session Thirty-fifth Congress, 1858-59.)

In obedience to the direction contained in this resolution the Secretary of the Interior caused an account to be stated, and found that, according to the principles of settlement prescribed by said resolution, there was due to the Choctaw nation the sum of $2,381,247 30.

This account was transmitted to Congress on the 8th of May, 1860. In the Senate it was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, who revised the account and reduced the amount thus reported to be due the Choctaws to $2,332,560 85. (Senate Documents, 233, first session Thirty-Sixth Congress, Senate Reports, volume two.)

Congress, by act of 2d March, 1861, (Statutes-at-Large, volume twelve, page 238,) made an appropriation of $500,000 on account of this claim, in the following form:

"The payment to the Choctaw nation or tribe of Indians, on account of their claim, under the eleventh and twelfth articles of the treaty with said nation or tribe, made the 22d of June, 1855, the sum of $500,000; $250,000 of which sum shall be paid in money, and for the residue the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be issued to the proper authorities of the nation or tribe, on their requisition, bonds of the United States authorized by law at the present session of Congress: Provided, That in the future adjustment of the claim of the Choctaws, under the treaty aforesaid, the said sum shall be charged against the said Indians."

Soon after this appropriation was made the sum of $250,000 was paid the Indians, in money, as directed, and the $250,000 provided to be paid in bonds, having been drawn from the Treasury and used according to the direction contained in the sixth section of the act of March 3, 1865, (Statutes-at-Large, volume thirteen, page 563,) there is still due the Indians, under the award made by the Senate the sum of $1,332,560 85.

By treaty concluded with the Choctaws and Chickasaws on the 23d of April, 1866, it was stipulated and agreed as follows, namely, (Act first session Thirty-Ninth Congress, pages 94 and 95):

"ARTICLE X. The United States reaffirms all obligations arising out of treaty stipulations or acts of legislation with regard to the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, entered into prior to the late rebellion and in force at that time, not inconsistent herewith, and further agrees to renew the payment of all annuities and other moneys accruing under such treaty stipulations and acts of legislation from and after the close of the fiscal year ending on the 30th of June, in the year 1866.

"ARTICLE XLV. All the rights, privileges, and immunities heretofore possessed by said nations or individuals thereof, or to which they were entitled under the treaties and legislation heretofore made and had in connection with them, shall be, and are hereby declared to be, in full force, so far as they are consistent with the provisions of this treaty."

These Indians are represented as being in a very destitute and necessitous condition, and are urgent in their request for an appropriation of the balance of the amount awarded to them, but which remains unpaid.

It is believed that it could not be made available to them at a more opportune occasion than the present, as it would afford relief from their present sufferings and wants and furnish them the means of repairing to a great extent the losses to which they have been subjected during the past few years. The balance claimed by the Choctaw nation is clearly due them, and for the payment of which the faith of the Government is solemnly pledged.

I therefore recommend that the necessary appropriation be made to enable this Department to pay the amount as soon as practicable, being satisfied that it will be of more value to them now than at any future period.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
O. H. BROWNING, Secretary.

Hon. THADDEUS STEVENS, Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I was mistaken in the statement I made. I said the claim was for land sold to the Government at twelve and a half cents an acre.

Mr. HENDERSON. A large quantity was.

Mr. HENDRICKS. A portion of the lands were sold by the Government, and the proceeds went to the credit of the Indians. The residue of the lands were taken by the Government at twelve and a half cents an acre. This is simply a debt which the Government of the United States owe this tribe for lands sold. The treaty fixed it that the Senate should decide the amount due to the Indians; and the Senate, being the umpire for the Indians and for the Government, did decide that the amount due was $2,332,000. The action of the Senate being under the treaty, that decision of the Senate became a part of the treaty. Now, the treaty of last April restores or rather revives, if there was any loss, all the rights under the treaty of 1855.

It seems to me it is not an open question. I think the appropriation ought to be larger than $250,000. Perhaps it is not policy to pay it all now; but some of it ought to be paid.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not want to argue this old claim. The Senate will find that it is a subject of great magnitude and much more difficult than the Senator from Indiana supposes. This is an old claim, not one of the ordinary annuities to Indians or interest on their trust funds. It is a claim that was always contested by the United States. It was said to be finally adjusted by a quasi arbitration made by the Senate; but it was never recognized by Congress, and has never been sanctioned by law. The House of Representatives has never recognized the validity of the award made by the Senate. It is a long and complicated story, and certainly it is not wise to go into it now.

If we commence with this appropriation of $250,000 now it will be only an entering wedge. What I desire is that the Senator from Missouri and the Committee on Indian Affairs should take up the subject at length, and give us a full report as to the origin, history, and amount of this claim, and then whatever is justly due to the Indians I will vote to pay; but certainly it is not proper to attach this item to an appropriation bill now. It is not provided for by law. It is true, the recent treaty, ratified at the last session, does revive all the old Choctaw claims; but this claim was never fixed by law in such a way as to be a legal claim on the Government, or at least an undisputed claim on the Government, proper to be paid on an appropriation bill. We have inserted in this bill all the ordinary annuities for the Indians, all those items which are undisputed, which are founded on treaties, where the amount is specified and fixed. This is a matter that has never been provided for and never been recognized by Congress. As a matter of course I cannot consent to allow it to be put on the appropriation bill now. There is no harm in letting it go over. It is an old claim; if due to the Indians, it has been due over eleven years it seems. As they have waited so long for it, I think they may wait one year longer until the matter can be thoroughly investigated. I have no doubt that the Senator from Missouri, who is industrious and careful as we all know, will examine it and make a proper report if time be given, and I shall be perfectly contented with his report at the next session. He himself confesses that he has not yet examined it. The subject was only brought before the Committee on Appropriations recently. The letter to that committee, which has just been read, is dated February 5, 1867. The case was not brought here early in the session, and no committee of either House has had full opportunity to examine the subject with care and attention. I certainly would not for one consent at this period of the session to put any such item on this bill.

Mr. STEWART. If this is not definitely and distinctly determined in the treaty stipulations beyond all question, we are not bound to pay it, because in that treaty we went beyond all reason in reviving claims to these hostile Indians. We were more than generous in that treaty of last year. They went to war with the United States, cost us a large amount of money, forfeited all these claims, and what we did not in unequivocal terms revive and restore to them in that treaty for peace it would be an outrage now to pay. They have no claim upon us, equitable or otherwise. They have been rebels, and they have cost us a great deal of money in that way. As soon as they laid down their arms we renewed their subsidies and revived their claims, treating them in as generous a way as we should have done if they had been true to the Government during the war. Here is a stale claim that has been contested by Congress for years.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Contested when?
Mr. STEWART. Always contested; it has never been allowed. It was the distinct understanding that the treaty of last year was only to renew the obligations that were created by express treaty stipulations, and they were enumerated in that treaty. It was not expected that it would renew all the stale claims these Indians might have had. Treaties with the Indians generally are the greatest humbug in the world, and especially the secret mode of doing it. These treaties ought to be ratified in open Senate and in full Senate. They should be investigated fully. If we have incurred by means of one of these treaties an obligation of this character, it is time Congress should investigate it. But the mode of ratifying these treaties should be changed; they should be acted upon in full Senate and in open Senate. Indeed, we should alter our whole method of dealing with the Indians. They are not nations to be treated with.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will ask the Senator if there is any question that this treaty was at the last session ratified?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly it was ratified.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then what question is there about the ratification in secret or open session?

Mr. STEWART. I say I am opposed to going further than that treaty does to allowing anything more. I thought that treaty was wrong; but if it does not in express terms include this claim, if this appropriation is not necessary to carry out the express terms of that treaty, I say there is no treaty obligation behind that to which this Government ought to be held for an hour. These Indians forfeited all their treaty rights by going to war with the Government of the United States.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs if he can tell me how this letter, this communication from the Interior Department, originated; what gave rise to it; at whose demand it was written? I see it is addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. STEVENS, of the House of Representatives; but who instigated the letter; at whose instance was it presented to Congress?

Mr. HENDERSON. I cannot state. A copy of the letter was sent to the chairman of the Committee on Finance, [Mr. FESSENDEN.] His copy was first put into my hands by the Senator from Ohio, as all the papers connected with this bill were. It is the usual course to send first to that committee letters of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs asking for additional appropriations. A copy of the letter to the Senator from Maine was placed in my hands after that committee had rejected the proposition. I believe that a copy of the letters addressed by the Department to the chairman of the Committee on Finance is generally given to the Committee on Indian Affairs after the action of the former committee. Duplicates of these letters were addressed to me. I cannot answer the other branch of the Senator's question as to how the communications originated. I only know that they came into my possession as other communications addressed to the chairman of committees do.

Mr. CONNESS. I only asked the honorable chairman because I was aware that certain attorneys were deeply interested in this claim, and I did not know by what means the head of a Department had been instigated to address Congress in its behalf, and I did not know but that that information might have been in the possession of the Senator.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I suppose the explanation of this communication is very easily made. I understand that there is a delegation of these Indians in the city, and the question comes before Congress undoubtedly at their solicitation. They are anxious to obtain this appropriation, and at their instance undoubtedly this communication has been sent by the Secretary of the Interior to the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations. I do not remember having observed this treaty at the last session. I think it is very likely that it was an improvident one. It seems to have been arranged in such a manner that the Government would be tied up from going into an investigation of this case in any manner whatever. The provisions of the treaty are most express and positive that this amount of money shall be paid to the Indians. It is also express and positive in its provisions, waiving all exceptions growing out of the conduct of the Indians in the war or before the war, and waiving all equities in behalf of the Government. Obviously it was drawn to conclude and to close our mouths forever against the payment of this demand. I do not remember its being considered in the Senate or its consideration in committee. The only ground on which I would be willing to vote the money at this time is the ground which has been stated by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator from Pennsylvania is always so just in his remarks that I am induced to ask him one question. He suggests that probably this treaty was improvident. I want to know if he thinks it was improvident for the Government to pay to these Indians for the land the agreed price?

Mr. BUCKALEW. What I meant was that this treaty in making an appropriation to these Indians seems to have been negotiated simply to cut off objection. There was no present action demanded at that time, no immediate appropriation proposed, and this treaty seems to have been drafted simply to conclude us against discussing any branch of the general question. However, sir, I consider myself bound by what is done pursuant to law. The only practical question is whether we shall appropriate this money at the present time or defer an appropriation. The only ground I have heard suggested in debate for making the appropriation of money now is that a delegation of the Indians are in the city who have come here at considerable expense and whose expenses have to be borne in some manner, and ought to be borne out of this fund if it is paid, and the further suggestion that they are in necessitous circumstances and require an appropriation of money. If a moderate amount could be voted with reference to these considerations alone, and we should defer the general question of the payment of this money to a future session, it would be according to my views. And in making an appropriation at this time I would desire to appropriate it to the Indians for their necessities, reserving any question which may arise as to outside claims upon this fund to go into other hands than those of the Indians themselves. If, therefore, the chairman of the committee will prepare a proposition to be presented before the third reading of this bill—it is obvious we cannot adopt this amendment now, we have not got a Senate to act upon it; as it is, it is a contested question—if he will frame some proposition by which we shall meet the pressing necessities of these Indians at the present time and cover the necessary outlay in connection with the coming to Washington of their delegation, I shall cheerfully vote for it, and if at the next session this subject is to be again considered then let us enter upon the general debate. There seems to be some reason for some appropriation. I do not know what is in the bill in reference to this tribe; I am speaking only of the matter as it is presented before us at this time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I knew very well that after the award referred to was made the subject was considered open by Congress, and the Senator from Wisconsin has furnished me with the last action of Congress on the subject. It seems that Congress did, just before the war, on the 2d of March, 1861, appropriate $500,000, declaring that "in the future adjustment of the claims of the Choctaws, under the treaty aforesaid, the said sum shall be charged against the said Indians;" so that two years after the award Congress appropriated $500,000, which was believed to be all that was deemed to be due them, and if there should be any excess it was to be left for future adjustment. No adjustment has ever been made from that time to this; so that we have no new light on the subject. The only treaty made since that time is simply a treaty which revives their claims. This claim has always been controverted; the last debate on the subject is very full, and it grew out of the adoption of this very proposition. I was then a member of the House of Representatives, and remember it distinctly. This is no fixed, adjudicated, liquidated claim against the Government at this time growing out of the sale of the Choctaw lands, no claim that is proper for an appropriation.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator from Pennsylvania speaks about the opportunity to debate at the next session and to have a full consideration on this question. I have made that effort for persons who owed debts on promissory notes in court when they were not able to pay, who wanted about six months before judgment should be rendered with a view to an additional stay of six months. I do not consider that a proper course for the Government of the United States to pursue. Here is a treaty obligation I think as plain as a promissory note. The Senate in 1859 fixed the amount the Government owed, and fixed it pursuant to the terms of the treaty, thereby making that sum thus fixed a part of the treaty. It is unimportant what language Congress used in 1861 in making the appropriation of a part of this indebtedness.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senate by its resolution simply said that in adjusting the account the Secretary of the Interior should do so and so. He claims that he has done so in adjusting the account; but the fact is that it has been disputed and controverted, and the last debate on the subject shows that all the facts are controverted; first, as to the principles involved, next as to the amount of the claim, and next as to the various items which make up the claim.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There are two facts that are not disputed; the treaty of 1855 and the resolution of 1859. The treaty of 1855 says we owe these Indians for certain lands at a certain rate, and for the residue of the lands at twelve and a half cents per acre, and we will pay it, and the Senate of the United States shall decide how much is due; and the Senate in 1859, by a carefully prepared resolution, said the sum was $2,332,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; the Senate simply declared that the account should be stated by the Secretary of the Interior; and that account made up in one way shows $1,300,000, and in another way $2,300,000; so that the whole matter was left open.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator is mistaken about that. If I understand the Secretary's letter, the account was made out at $2,900,000, and the Senate reduced it to $2,332,000. These are facts that are not open for dispute. These are facts settled. And I think we ought to appropriate to these people what is due them, whatever may have been their fault in the war. I understand some of them went into the northern Army and some into the southern. But without reference to that, since that time we have made a treaty with them, and we have agreed to stand by the obligations that grew out of the treaty of 1855. I am not able to see the ground of debate about it. It seems to me we owe the money.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I simply want to add one word to explain what I meant by the use of the term "improvident" in characterizing the treaty. A part of this tribe, I understand, became rebels, public enemies in the war. I understand also that the number of the tribe has largely decreased. The equities which formerly existed in behalf of the tribe, in my opinion—not having, however, investigated the subject, I will not speak positively—were not as strong when this last treaty was formed as at a previous period. It would have been perhaps a fair and proper arrangement in that readjustment to have put down the amount, to have fixed it at a moderate sum, instead of taking the whole extent of the demand made, thrusting it into a treaty, saying that the Government should not have any defense against its payment afterward; and that, too, without any proposition of immediate appropriation and action. It seems to have been a treaty negotiated simply to prevent us from going back and considering this subject, to make those persons who were in rebellion against us again loyal citizens, by the treaty entitled to all their former rights, not taking into account the changed circumstances of the tribe itself. However, sir, I acknowledge that we cannot go behind the agreement.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The honorable Senator from Pennsylvania will allow me to say that this treaty was negotiated here in Washington, and was negotiated under the immediate superintendence of the Secretary of the Interior, then Hon. Mr. Harlan. For some weeks, perhaps two months or more, they were engaged in the negotiation of this treaty; and if gentlemen will look into it, they will find a great many things contained in it. The Choctaws were compelled to surrender a large portion of their lands. Nominally they received the price of $300,000 for them; but that $300,000, by the terms of the treaty, went for the benefit of the colored men who were emancipated and set free by this tribe of Indians, and who, under certain circumstances, were to be admitted and adopted citizens of the tribe, and each take part of the lands of the tribe. All these compensations went into the treaty; and in view of them all, and in view of an act of Congress which had provided that the annuities accruing from year to year should be confiscated while the war continued at the pleasure of the President for the purpose of feeding the loyal refugees who were driven out of that country—all these things were considered, and this provision was inserted in the treaty to take effect from and after June, 1866, when the annuities should go on again. This reconstruction in that Indian Territory under the superintendence of Hon. Mr. Harlan, is, I think, a very good pattern of what might be done in the reconstruction of the Union. The thing was settled, and those Indians are living side by side together, or at all events they have agreed to do so.

There is another provision in the treaty by which the Choctaw nation binds itself to pay the actual damages which were suffered by the loyal Choctaws who were driven out; and a commission under the terms of the treaty was appointed, who have gone on and appraised the damages which the loyal Choctaws suffered, and by the terms of the treaty the nation is bound to pay out of its moneys those damages.

The treaty is a very long one of fifty articles, and there are a great many things in it. I do not think the treaty ought to be condemned on a one-sided view of a single section, because the honorable Secretary of the Interior took great pains in his negotiation of it, and I think has made on the whole a good treaty.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is a question connected with the Miami Indians of Indiana that has been placed in my hands too late to submit to the committee; but I deem it my duty to present it to the Senate. The difficulty seems to be this: under the treaty with the Miamis some years ago it was provided that the annuities should be paid to certain parties whose names were filed in the Interior Department; a few years thereafter that list of names was added to by one hundred and two additional names, and the annuities directed to be distributed among the whole number, including those additional one hundred and two. The former Indians whose names were filed in the Interior Department now object, and say that these names were appended without authority and that they are not Miami Indians; that some of them are Potawatomes, and some are whites. I have not been able, as I have stated, to submit the amendment which I am about to offer to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I present it on my own responsibility. I have not been able to examine the question; I only state what is stated to me. I move to amend the bill by inserting after line six hundred and seventy-four, on page 29, this proviso:

Provided, That said interest shall hereafter be paid to the persons embraced in the corrected list agreed upon by Senate amendment to article four, treaty 5th June, 1854, and the increase of the families of such persons as therein stipulated.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I hope the Senator will not press that amendment. We have not investigated it. We know that it is a question of disputed right between individuals.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is true.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I think it manifestly improper that we should be called upon to vote upon it without examination.

Mr. LANE. This has been a controverted point, as I understand, for several years.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to a point of order. The Senator who offers the amendment says himself that it is not reported from a committee. It is therefore not in order on this bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. It does not make any appropriation. It simply directs the manner in which an appropriation shall be expended.

Mr. LANE. It is a simple direction of the manner in which an appropriation already in the bill shall be distributed, and it is therefore in order. The Senate will indulge me a moment while I state the history of the case. The Miami Indians divided in 1846; a part went West, and the others remained in Indiana. In June, 1854, a treaty with the tribe divided their annuities. The treaty will be found in the tenth volume of the Statutes-at-Large, page 198. The Senate amendment to the fourth article of the treaty provided that the annuities should be paid, so far as the Miami Indians were concerned, to persons whose names were in the corrected list agreed upon by the treaty. The manner of distribution was provided for by the treaty itself. A section, however, was added to the Indian appropriation bill of June 20, 1858, directing the Secretary of the Interior to add to the list of Miami Indians such persons of Indiana Miami blood as had heretofore been excluded from the annuities of the tribe. This provision was put in the appropriation bill in direct contravention of the provisions of the treaty. Under this section the Commissioner of Indian Affairs added one hundred and five names to the list of Indiana Miamis without their consent and in violation of the treaty stipulation, thus reducing their annuities a little more than one fourth. The Indiana Miamis now ask an addition to the clause in the pending Indian appropriation bill providing for the payment of interest to them, that will require the interest to be paid agreeably to the provisions of article four of the treaty of June 5, 1854, according to the Senate amendment to that article.

I think there is no kind of doubt that the one hundred and five additional names were added upon an appropriation bill in contravention of the treaty. Doubtless the attention of the Senate was not called to it at the time. Only those embraced in the treaty stipulations should be entitled to the interest, and this amendment is simply to conform to the treaty. This is the whole case, as I understand it.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Then we are asked in this manner to overrule an existing act of Congress on a simple ex parte statement from parties interested that it is a violation of a treaty. Certainly such action as this is not proper where private rights are involved.

Mr. LANE. I have referred the Senate to the section of the treaty, to the amendment of the Senate, to the very page where it is to be found, showing conclusively that the clause inserted in the appropriation bill in 1858 was against the provisions of the treaty.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I know that one side of a case sounds very well until the other is heard. I shall be perfectly willing for one to take up this case and examine it whenever it is brought up in such a manner that it can be examined in committee or in Senate; but it is utterly impossible, and it is very hazardous now to enter upon an examination of this question with any expectation of doing justice between private parties.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. SHERMAN. There was one amendment reported by the Committee on Finance which, at the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, was not acted upon in Committee of the Whole. I ask that it now be disposed of. It is a motion to strike out a certain clause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment referred to is to strike out the following clause on page 65:

For expense of collecting and locating the Colorado River Indians in Arizona on a reservation set apart for them by section first, act of March 3, 1865, including the expense of constructing a canal for irrigating said reservation, $50,000.

Mr. CONNESS. The amendment of the committee I understand strikes out that clause. Those in favor of striking out will vote in the affirmative.

Mr. HENDERSON. I beg leave to refer the Senator from California to the previous legislation on this subject. Either that legislation ought to be repealed or else a provision of this sort ought to be made. I am not prepared to say, because I do not know, what amount will be required; but some amount ought to be given for this purpose. In the Indian appropriation bill passed in 1865 it was provided:

"For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Arizona, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000."

"All that part of the public domain in the Territory of Arizona lying west of a direct line from Half-Way Bend to Corner Rock, on the Colorado river, containing about seventy-five thousand acres of land, shall be set apart for an Indian reservation for the Indians of said river and its tributaries."

This was the legislation of 1865. If there was any meaning in it, it was that the seventy-five thousand acres mentioned should be set apart for a reservation, and the Indians called River Indians removed to it.

Mr. CONNESS. They have not been removed yet.

Mr. HENDERSON. The design of this appropriation was to effect the removal. The Senator knows better than myself, perhaps; I do not profess to know what it will cost to remove the Indians there. But as I understand from the Department they desire to remove them, but have no means to do it. No appropriation was made at the last session for that purpose. I have here a report from the superintendent of Indian affairs there to the effect that these Indians ought to be removed. How that is I cannot say. He writes like a man of sense and like an honest man. I take it for granted he knows what he is writing about. That is the reason I thought it impolitic to strike out this appropriation entirely. Perhaps, however, $25,000 would be sufficient to make the removal. It requires now that Indians roaming at large shall be confined to a particular spot, and they must cease their hunting; and indeed the orders of the military there are, as I understand from the Department, to that effect. They will have hereafter to be confined within narrower limits; and if it is intended to carry out the legislation of last year some money will have to be appropriated. I am not prepared to say that $50,000 will be required; and if the Senator thinks a less amount will do I shall consent to a reduction.

Mr. CONNESS. I cannot guess the amount that will be necessary to collect these Indians and locate them upon a reservation on the Colorado river. The Colorado is our southern boundary, and I know something about it; but I cannot answer that question, and therefore I would not recommend any particular sum. The necessary amount on an estimate as nearly as could be made must come from persons on the ground, more intimate with the facts than I am. I can only say—it is perhaps within my knowledge sufficiently to speak upon it—that the management of Indian affairs in Arizona has been among the worst, the very worst. The appropriations made and invested in goods have been beyond a doubt made use of for personal purposes. The goods shipped at immense expense have been either wasted or sold and turned to private account. We have just now confirmed a new superintendent. The late superintendent in Arizona was murdered some time ago; and we have appointed a gentleman who I think is a brother-in-law of General Grant. He will make a good superintendent. It will take some time for him to become acquainted with Indian affairs in that Territory. He has been a citizen of California, Mr. Dent, and I have no doubt he will be a good superintendent; but it will take him some time to become sufficiently acquainted with Indian affairs in Arizona; so that there will be time enough to make this appropriation at another Congress; and I would prefer very much, and I think it would be the part of wisdom, to wait till we get his report.

Mr. HENDERSON. I know nothing about it except the legislation we have had.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1220) to provide ways and means for the payment of compound-interest notes, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1062) relative to the port of Camden, New Jersey, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to take up House bill No. 1220, that it may be left as the unfinished business to come up on Monday.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is a special order for Monday.

Mr. CONNESS. What is the special order?

Mr. CHANDLER. Business of the Committee on Commerce. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, February 25, 1867.

Hon. JAMES M. NYE, of Nevada, appeared in his seat to-day.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. CONNESS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of Saturday was dispensed with.

CREDENTIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the credentials of Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL, elected a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Vermont for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1867; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

Mr. STEWART presented the credentials of Hon. JAMES W. NYE, elected a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Nevada for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1867; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MORRILL presented the petition of Robert Murray, of the city of New York, praying that an American register may be issued to the German-built Haytien brig Margaret; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RAMSEY presented a memorial of citizens of St. Paul, Minnesota, remonstrating against the passage of any act depreciating the national currency; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SUMNER presented the petition of Thomas B. Wales & Co., of Boston, praying that an American register may be restored to the ship Agra; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented a memorial of the executive board of the National Theological Institute, praying for an appropriation of $25,000, to be applied by the Institute to purposes of education in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a memorial of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Union of Washington, District of Columbia, in relation to the management of the Government Printing Office, to make a verbal report.

This memorial charges upon the management of the office a discrimination against soldiers and sailors in the employment of hands for the office. The memorial was presented evidently in good faith; and the committee of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Union have acted, the Committee on Printing do not doubt, from creditable motives. Representations having been made to them that the interests of those committed to their charge were suffering, they brought the same to the attention of the Senate, disclaiming any personal hostility, their charges being against the government of the office. The Committee on Printing have had several meetings on the subject, and have examined a great many witnesses and read a great many affidavits, and have come to the conclusion that the allegations upon which the memorial was based are not sustained.

No complaints have been sustained against the present Superintendent of Public Printing that did not apply equally to his predecessor, and they must apply to any man who succeeds him in that office. The rule of the office has been always to give preference to soldiers and sailors, to those who have been in the service, in giving out employment and in discharging workmen or in furloughing them, to give the preference to those who are the best workmen. Some workmen are qualified for any kind of work, whether plain work or rule and figure work, while some are only qualified for plain work. It is manifestly for the public interests that those who are qualified for all descriptions of work should be retained in preference to those who are only qualified to perform a certain kind of work.

The Superintendent reports the number of persons who have been in the land or naval service at nearly one third of the entire force of the office. I do not believe that any branch of the public service shows so large a proportion of workmen of those who have been engaged in the war. It is creditable to the craft, showing the large number of printers who have gone into the service, and also creditable to the Superintendents of the Printing Office.

The work in the Government Printing Office is very desirable. The wages are higher and the labor lighter than in the average of the establishments throughout the country, and there is naturally a good deal of jealousy when men are discharged or furloughed. The work there varies a great deal. At times the Superintendent is obliged to employ all the hands he can get, and then the work falls off, and he is obliged to discharge a great many. The only rule which he ought to follow, the only rule he can follow, and the only rule which the present and the late Superintendent have followed, so far as the committee have been able to judge, is to discharge those who are least important to the public service.

I feel it my duty to make these remarks with regard to the Superintendent, because I suppose, under the law we have passed, there will very likely be a change in the superintendence of the Printing Office. I was very sorry indeed when the President of the United States removed Mr. Defrees and appointed a Democrat in his place; but he had a constitutional right to do what he did, and I am not here to question his motives. We had also a constitutional right to pass the law which we did, changing the office, and making the officer directly responsible to Congress; but as a Senator I stand here to do justice, and I am not willing that Mr. Wendell should go out of office with any such stain on his character as this memorial, if the allegations were sustained, would put upon it. I believe his faults are not at all in that direction; and I believe he has been as liberal toward soldiers and sailors as any person connected with the Government. In fact, if others would imitate the liberality which he has manifested toward them, not only as an officer, but as a citizen, it would be much to the advantage of this most meritorious class of our citizens. And as I have named him, and as I suppose he will go out of office pretty soon, I think it is but fair to say that he is one of the most efficient executive officers that I ever came in contact with.

Mr. ROSS. I concur in the report of the chairman of the committee in the substantial facts which he relates. I am satisfied, however, from the current of testimony taken before the committee that that discrimination which the law of Congress contemplated has not in all cases been made. I do not impute any unworthy or improper motives in that respect to Mr. Wendell, as it is established by the testimony that the evil complained of existed previous to as well as under his superintendency of that office. That relieves the case from all personal considerations. Under the law which we have passed, and with the arrangements and changes which will follow, all grounds for future criticisms on this point will undoubtedly cease.

The report was agreed to.

PRINTING OF COAST SURVEY REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in obedience to law, a report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast Survey, showing the progress of the work during the year ending November 1, 1866, and a manuscript map of progress brought up to that date, have directed me to report a resolution for the printing of the report; and as it is the usual resolution that is passed every year, I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed two thousand extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey for 1866, of which one thousand copies shall be for the use of the Senate and one thousand copies shall be for distribution by the Superintendent of the Coast Survey.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print the resolutions of a meeting of New Hampshire soldiers, held at Manchester, in that State, on the 6th day of February, 1867, have directed me to ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration. It comes under that class that we have uniformly declined to print.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 175) to admit and pay the claim of Tuller & Fisher, of Missouri, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 185) to render applicable to seamen in the United States Navy and to marines the provisions relating to pensions in the act making appropriations for civil expenses for the year ending June 30, 1867, approved July 28, 1866, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 628) relative to courts-martial in the Army; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. KIRKWOOD, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 596) granting lands to the States of Wisconsin and Michigan to aid in the construction of the Wisconsin and Lake Superior railroad and its branch, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 916) for the relief of James M. Bishop, who claims $236, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 966) for the relief of Ernest F. Klienschmidt, of Cincinnati, Ohio, reported it without amendment.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 682) for the relief of Captain John J. Young, of the United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. No. 820) for the relief of Henry S. Davis; and

A bill (S. No. 417) to amend an act entitled "An act further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes," approved July 25, 1866.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GRIMES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 626) to authorize the creation of a board of survey of the Navy; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GRIMES. I am impressed with the idea that there may be some importance in this bill. I do not expect to call it up for consideration at this session, and do not care about its being referred. I am content that it shall lie on the table and be printed; and in order that there may be an expression of opinion in regard to the proposition contained in it on the part of the profession whom it principally affects, I move that two hundred extra copies of the bill be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid upon the table and printed if there be no objection; and the motion to print two hundred extra copies will go to the Committee on Printing, under the rule.

Mr. SHERMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 627) to consolidate the national debt, and to provide for its payment; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not propose to urge the passage of that bill at the present session of Congress, for I know the pressure of current business will prevent its consideration. I deem it my duty, however, to present the bill in order that it may be printed and laid on our tables, and with the notice that I shall call it up at the next session, or early in the regular session probably, for action. It proposes to deal with the question of funding the public debt, and to adjust the taxation by the United States of Government securities. I move that it lie upon the table, and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 629) for the relief of Martha Hyatt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SENATOR PATTERSON.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have had in my possession for the last four or five days a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Tennessee, asking me to resign my seat in the Senate of the United States. I deem it respectful to the people of my native State, as well as to the Senate and to myself, to present this resolution. I do not wish to enter into any discussion to-day upon the resolution which I now present; but on another occasion, and at a proper time, I hope to be able to vindicate myself against the serious charges contained in this resolution. It is also due to myself to say that with the lights now before me I will not obey the instructions of the Legislature of the State of Tennessee. I send the preamble and resolution to the Secretary's desk and ask that they may be read, printed, and for the present laid upon the table.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Whereas Hon. DAVID T. PATTERSON, Senator in the United States Senate from the State of Tennessee, was elected by this General Assembly as a member of the National Republican Union party, in full confidence that he was a true and sincere member of that party—the party which preserved the national unity, and would in good faith support its principles and measures; and whereas greatly to the surprise and regret of this General Assembly and the loyal people of Tennessee he has identified himself with the so-called Democratic party, the party which for four years endeavored to destroy the national unity, and is giving it his support:

Resolved, By reason thereof, Senator PATTERSON has ceased to have the confidence of this General Assembly and the loyal people of Tennessee, and is hereby respectfully requested to resign the seat which he now holds in the Senate of the United States from the State of Tennessee.

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Tennessee be directed to inclose to Senator PATTERSON a copy of this resolution, and also to inclose a copy to the President of the Senate of the United States.

Adopted February 7, 1867.

J. S. MULLOY,

Speaker pro tempore of the House of Representatives.

JOSHUA B. FRIERSON,

Speaker of the Senate.

The resolution was ordered to lie upon the table, and be printed.

GOVERNMENT OF MONTANA.

Mr. WADE. I move to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 501.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 501) amendatory of an act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Montana, approved May 26, 1864.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Territories report an amendment as a substitute for the entire bill.

Mr. WADE. There is no occasion to read the original bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute only will be read, unless some Senator asks for the reading of the original bill.

The Secretary read the matter proposed to be inserted, as follows:

That the Legislative Assemblies of the several Territories of the United States shall not, after the passage of this act, grant private charters or special privileges, but they may, by general incorporation acts, permit persons to associate themselves together as bodies corporate for mining, manufacturing, and other industrial pursuits.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the probate courts of the Territory of Montana in their respective counties, in addition to their probate jurisdiction, are hereby authorized to hear and determine civil causes wherein the damage or debt claimed does not exceed $500, and such criminal cases arising under the laws of the Territory as do not require the intervention of a grand jury: Provided, That they shall not have jurisdiction of any matter in controversy when the title or right to the peaceable possession of land may be in dispute, or chancery or divorce causes: And provided further, That in all cases an appeal may be taken from any order, judgment, or decree of said probate court to the district court.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Governor, chief justice, and associate justices of said Territory shall each receive an annual salary of $4,000.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the judges of the supreme court of said Territory, or a majority of them, shall, when assembled at the seat of government of said Territory, define the judicial districts of said Territory, and assign the judges who may be appointed for said Territory to the several districts, and shall also fix and appoint the times and places for holding the courts in the several counties or subdivisions in each of said judicial districts, and alter the times and places of holding the courts as to them shall seem proper and convenient.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of reviving the legislative functions of the Territory of Montana, which have been adjudged therein to have lapsed, the Governor of said Territory be, and he is hereby, authorized, on or before the 1st day of July, 1867, to divide said Territory into legislative districts for the election of members of the Council and House of Representatives, and to apportion among said districts the number of members of the Legislative Assembly provided for in the organic act of said Territory, and the election of said members of the Legislative Assembly shall be held at such time and shall be conducted in the manner prescribed by the Legislative Assembly of said Territory at the session thereof begun and holden at the city of Bannack, in 1864 and 1865, and the qualifications of voters shall be the same as that prescribed by said organic act, saving and excepting the distinction therein made on account of race or color, and the Legislative Assembly, so elected, shall convene at the time prescribed by said Legislative Assembly at the session last aforesaid. The apportionment provided for in this section shall be based upon such an enumeration of the qualified electors of the several legislative districts as shall appear from the election returns in the office of the secretary of said Territory, and from such other sources of information as will enable the Governor, without taking a new census, to make an apportionment which shall fairly represent the people of the several districts in both Houses of the Legislative Assembly.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That all acts passed at the two sessions of the so-called Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana, held in 1866, are hereby disapproved and declared null and void: Provided, however, That in all claims of vested rights thereunder, the party claiming the same shall not, by reason of anything in this section contained, be precluded from making and testing said claim in the courts of said Territory: And provided further, That no legislation or pretended legislation in said Territory since the adjournment of the first Legislative Assembly shall be deemed valid until the election of the Legislative Assembly herein provided for shall take place.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of act inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee in lieu of the original bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to know what is the present salary of the officers of this Territory that are now to be raised to $4,000.

Mr. WADE. Three thousand dollars, I think. Four thousand dollars is as little, I suppose, as they can possibly get along with. It is much less than they think is necessary to enable them to perform their duties.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What is this bill?

Mr. WADE. A bill amendatory of the organic act of Montana. That Territory is in a state of anarchy. I suppose that this amount is not more than is right for the judges there. However, I submit it to the Senate. I have no doubt that if any salaries ought to be increased, the salaries of the judges in this Territory ought to be, for they have to wander over an immense wilderness to hold their courts, and I am informed by their Delegate and by all the persons there who have consulted me that their expenses are very high, even higher than they are here. It is a gold region; this Territory of Montana is an immense Territory; and I think the salary we have named in this bill is no more than reasonable; but if the Senate think otherwise I have nothing more to say.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My information and observation has been that these territorial judges generally, after a little space, either return to this section of the country wealthy, or become wealthy without returning. I do not mean by corruption or impropriety, but by availing themselves of the advantages, which as private citizens they have a right to avail themselves of, in taking up available and valuable land locations and various things of that kind. It does not appear to me that this is the time to vote without further investigation to increase the salaries in this Territory to $4,000 a year, and I move to strike out that part of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves to amend the amendment by striking out the third section, in the following words:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Governor, chief justice, and associate justices of said Territory shall each receive an annual salary of $4,000.

Mr. WADE. We have increased the salaries of the judges of the district courts of the United States, whose duties are not half as onerous as the duties of these judges, and I doubt whether their expenses of living are anything like as great as a general thing. We have raised their salaries above what is proposed by this bill. The committee have not put this salary by any means at what the evidence before us would warrant us in doing; but we have put it at what we supposed to be the least they would be able, under the circumstances, to get along with. I certainly am as much opposed as the Senator from Vermont can be at this time to increasing salaries any more than seems to be absolutely necessary; but in these remote Territories all the means of living are very expensive, as I am told.

As for the other consideration that the Senator mentions, I do not think we ought to take that into account, that a judge shall enter into speculative business, mining concerns, &c., as a reason why he should not receive a salary that ought to relieve him from that kind of business. I do not think really it is the business of a judge to enter into those speculations. In my judgment he ought to receive such a salary as will enable him to attend to the duties of his office. The judges in this Territory will find enough to do in settling the controversies that arise through the vast region that they have to traverse over. I say this in justice to the gentlemen who are appointed judges there, and who I think can hardly get along with less than the sum we propose. I hope they will not enter into speculations or in that kind of money-making schemes that the gentleman supposes they will. I certainly will not legislate upon the supposition that they will turn their attention to these speculating concerns. I hope they will not.

Mr. CONNESS. In my opinion, the worst institution we can give to any State or community is a poorly paid judiciary. To pay them so that the balance that they may require for their support or financial advancement shall be drawn from speculations, is very poor economy. I believe there is one somewhat marked instance of the class of conduct on the part of judges intimated by the honorable Senator from Vermont that has taken place, and that was in Nevada while Nevada was a Territory. Judges sent there poorly paid, having to determine questions of great consequence, to decide questions involving millions of money, it is said were not slow to interest themselves and profit themselves. The result in that Territory was that the people rose up en masse and compelled the resignation of the judges; not, however, until after the community had been entirely demoralized by the spectacle that had been presented and its consequences.

Now, sir, the salary proposed is not only not a high one, but it is a very moderate one for the support of magistrates in the Territory of Montana. There is no doubt of that. How it can be held that judges may maintain their independence, their integrity, and attend to their business, and travel over an extensive circuit for a less sum than is proposed, I cannot imagine. I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont will not be adopted. I think if the Senator understood personally the duties of these officers and the importance of their being maintained independently by the Government, he would not urge that their compensation should be less than is proposed in this bill.

Mr. STEWART. I hope this amendment will not be made, for from personal knowledge I am certain that $4,000 a year is the least possible sum that any man can live in Montana and support himself upon. Even a single man, without a family, cannot live for less than that. I know that of my personal knowledge. To have a judge depending on the people, either forced to enter into speculations or to live by borrowing of his friends, is to destroy his usefulness. I fully concur with the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from California, that this amendment ought not to be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am sorry to see so many Senators disposed to go on increasing salaries, one salary after another, until the amount of expenditure of the Government is to be increased by millions at this present time. I have not had the honor to be present, on account of illness in my family, at any of the times in the Senate when these questions of salaries have been up.

Now, to return to this Territory of Montana, it has not been long organized; it has but few inhabitants; it cannot have a very extensive judiciary system; and I suppose that the functions of these officers are merely such as the law intrusts to them. I should be glad to be informed by anybody who thinks that these salaries ought to be increased, how much of absolute time is required by these judges for the performance of their duties in every year? Is it one month or three or five or six months, and what do they do the rest of the time? Do they not, as a matter of fact, engage in business operations of one kind or another—they have been there long enough for us to know—or do they really devote themselves, the same as the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States or of the District of Columbia, or of the supreme courts of the States do, to the exclusive occupation of studying and administering the law?

My information is, and I do not speak of this Territory as being peculiar in that respect—it may be that my information is incorrect—but my information is, that these judges are generally young men who are ambitious to get into a new Territory, with a view to the gain which it will bring to them; I do not mean corrupt gain, but the opportunity of growing up with the Territory, of becoming famous, and becoming wealthy; and I believe that when they have performed the duties, as far as they do perform them, of their office, they always have felt and they always will feel, if you make their salary $10,000 a year, perfectly at liberty to buy land and locate mines, and do whatever other thing they think will be to their advantage. Now, then, it does seem to me that there must be a point where we must pause in this career of public expenditure. That is all I have to say.

Mr. WADE. No such argument was made the other day when we were increasing the salaries of our district judges. I might then have made an argument as plausible as this by showing that the judges about the cities could enter into gold speculations if they saw fit to do so, and perhaps more profitably than anybody could speculate in Montana or anywhere else. The fact is, there is no more motive to go into speculations in that country than there is here, and men are no more likely to go into them. I hope the Senate will yield to no such argument as that. If I have placed the salary too high, let the Senate knock it down; but certainly I do not yield to the argument that judges must be only half paid because they can go into speculations and make up the balance in that way. That is a new argument, and I hope it will not find a foothold in the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not particularly advised as to the judicial business transacted by the judges in Montana; but I am as to that business in Idaho. I know that lately one judge in Idaho held a term of the district court for sixty successive days. The judges in the Territories perform circuit court duties. Their districts are very extensive, two hundred or three hundred miles in extent. It is exceedingly expensive traveling; it costs several dollars per day there to keep a horse; feed for horses is particularly high, and all the expenses are very high. Then in addition to their circuit duties these judges are compelled to meet together and hold court in banc. They hold the supreme court of the Territory. In the mining regions there is a vast amount of litigation growing out of conflicting claims as to mines; and the duties that are discharged by the judges in those Territories are as arduous and as responsible as those discharged by the judges in any other portion of the country.

The very object, as it seems to me, of giving these judges a reasonable salary is to prevent their engaging in any schemes of speculation. If they are not able to live by means of the salaries which they are paid, they are compelled to resort to other means for a livelihood; but if they have an adequate salary, their own sense of self-respect and their dislike to be mixed up in matters of business that come before them for adjudication will induce them to depend altogether upon their salaries for support.

Now, sir, I am well advised that in the Territory of Idaho—and in that respect Idaho and Montana are alike—the judges do not receive enough to defray their expenses; and it is manifest that that state of things should not be allowed. I remember very well when I was a judge in Oregon Territory I received a salary of $2,500 a year. That was many years ago; and that no more than paid my expenses, traveling around through the country, attending to different courts, and paying the other necessary expenses that devolved upon me. The salary that this bill proposes is no more than reasonable. There are many more arguments why the salaries of these men should be increased than that the salaries of the judges in this immediate neighborhood should be increased. I do not think there is any force in the argument that these are young men. Some of them are young men; but so far as I know, they are men of families; they have their families with them; and they are compelled to support their families as well as to pay their own expenses. As was suggested by the Senator from California, there is nothing that is so essential to the welfare of any community, and a pure and correct administration of justice, as to have the judges receive salaries that will enable them to be independent and enable them to attend exclusively to their official duties.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say one word further. Since this debate began I have learned that this same subject has been under the consideration of the Judiciary Committee of this body, and there is a bill on our tables reported by them—

Mr. WADE. Before the Senator proceeds, I wish to correct an error that I made a few moments ago. I stated that these judges now received $3,000. I was mistaken. They receive in Montana $2,500 now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what they receive both in Idaho and Montana.

Mr. WADE. I thought for the moment it was $3,000; but it is not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is a bill on our tables reported by the Judiciary Committee on this subject equalizing the salaries in these Territories and bringing up the $1,800 salaries to $2,500, which is the upward limit of all. Now, then, in the face of this, we find the Committee on Territories, not having in charge the interests of the judiciary of the country as have this other committee, have put it up for this particular Territory to $4,000 a year. Here is a very decided discrepancy between the views of these two committees. One is charged specially with the consideration of all questions of this kind, of the pay, duties, and emoluments of judges; the other is charged with the general interests of the Territories. Now, they take this particular Territory, and instead of doing what the Committee on the Judiciary have done on the subject of the salary of judges, they raise these with that of the Governor to $4,000 a year. It appears to me, without occupying more of the time of the Senate, that there is no justification for that. We can find, if the committee would only take the trouble to find and inform us so that we may act intelligently, from the accounts of the marshal of this Territory, just how much time these judges do occupy necessarily in the performance of their duties; and we should thus be somewhat better able to know, as my friend from Oregon seems to imagine, that it takes sixty, ninety, one hundred, or whatever the number of days may be, to transact the business.

Mr. CONNESS. There cannot be anything more clear than the impropriety of the rule which the Senator suggests proposed by the Judiciary Committee. With all respect for that committee and its deliberations, when they propose to bring up the salaries of the judges in Washington Territory, in Arizona, and other Territories of the class they are of to the salary paid to the judges in Idaho and Montana, they clearly fail to comprehend the situation. The idea of setting up a gauge and running it through all the Territories of the United States in regard to this matter of salary for the judges, without any reference to the cost of living, the number of inhabitants, and the interests to be determined, need not be commented upon at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to strike out the third section of the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Upon that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 12, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, Grimes, Hendricks, Kirkwood, Patterson, Sherman, Trumbull, and Willey—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Cattell, Conness, Cowan, Creswell, Davis, Dixon, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Harris, Howe, Lane, Morgan, Norton, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ross, Saulsbury, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wade, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—26.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Cragin, Doollittle, Guthrie, Henderson, Howard, Johnson, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Ramsey, Riddle, and Sprague—14.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend the third section of the amendment by inserting after the word "Territory" in the second line the words "and the Territory of Idaho;" so that it will read:

That the Governor, chief justice, and associate justices of said Territory and the Territory of Idaho shall each receive an annual salary of $4,000.

I will simply say in reference to this amendment that the Territories of Montana and Idaho are very much alike in all respects, and they stand upon a different footing from the other Territories, because the population of these Territories is much larger than that of the other Territories, and there is much more business to be transacted by these officers. There are many reasons why these two Territories should be embraced within the provisions of this bill that do not apply to the other Territories. I hope that this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WADE. I also hope that it will be adopted. I know of no difference really between these two Territories. I agree with the Senator from Oregon, that they stand upon a different footing in this particular from the other Territories, in that there is more business there, the population is filling up rapidly, and the litigation is very great all over those Territories.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to strike out the word "Governor" in the third section, so as to limit this increase to the judges. In the debate that has already taken place we have only been favored with the explanation of why these judges should have their salaries raised, because their duties were judicial and they must be put beyond the reach of temptation. Now, the salary of $4,000 for a Governor is altogether larger than that of the majority of the Governors of the United States, I think I am safe in saying, and it appears there is no reason yet suggested why we should increase the salaries of these Governors from $2,500 or $3,000, as it is now, up to $4,000. I therefore make this motion.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to amend the fourth section by adding to it the words:

But not less than two terms shall be held at each place of holding court in each year.

I was not in favor of this mode of districting the Territories for judicial purposes; but as it was agreed to by the Senate after some debate in regard to another Territory, I suppose we may consider it as the policy now.

Mr. WADE. I see no objection to that amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I would not be willing to vote to give the judges power over it without some restriction upon them.

Mr. GRIMES. Is the place of holding courts designated by the law of the Territory or of the United States?

Mr. HENDRICKS. This section says that the judges shall fix the place and time of holding the courts, and I am not willing for myself to leave to them to fix the times for the terms without some restriction upon them. I think there ought to be two courts held at each place each year.

Mr. GRIMES. The information I want to obtain is this: can the judges cluster a dozen counties together and say that they will hold the court at one place in those several counties, or are they compelled under the laws as they now stand to hold a court in each organized county in the Territory?

Mr. HENDRICKS. That depends upon the text, not upon my amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. I know that, but I want to know how your amendment will affect that.

Mr. HENDRICKS. We had better have the whole section read.

Mr. WADE. This section leaves it to the judges to fix the districts in the same way that we provided the other day in regard to another Territory. That principle formerly obtained through the Territories. We had the question up a short time ago and we placed the same provision on another territorial bill. This is precisely the same provision that we adopted then. I think the amendment is proper. I see no objection to it myself.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have another amendment to suggest. It is to add at the end of the fifth section the following:

But the Legislature may at any time make a reapportionment of the Territory.

I suppose the chairman of the committee will be satisfied with that amendment.

Mr. WADE. That I suppose they could do without this amendment; but I am willing to add it to the section.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It might be construed that the act of the Governor would be conclusive under this statute. I will modify my amendment so as to read:

But the Legislature may at any time make a reapportionment of the districts of the Territory.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move to amend the amendment by adding the following additional section:

And be it further enacted, That from and after the 1st day of April next the salary of each of the judges of the several supreme courts in each of the organized Territories, except Montana and Idaho, shall be $2,500.

The subject of the salaries of these territorial judges has been before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate at this session, and a bill was reported several days ago making the salaries of the judges of all the territorial courts alike, equalizing them at $2,500. The salary of the territorial judges in each of the Territories for a very considerable number of years has been $1,800. Many years ago the salary of the territorial judges was fixed at that sum. In the Territories that have been more recently organized—Montana and Idaho—the salaries were made $2,500. Our attention was drawn more particularly to those who still remained at $1,800, and we reported a bill to equalize the salaries of the territorial judges, make them all $2,500, although upon subsequent examination I was satisfied that Montana and Idaho should be raised above that. The object of this amendment is to raise those salaries that are now $1,800 up to $2,500. We have already voted to put the judges of Montana and Idaho at $4,000. This amendment is to place the judges of the other Territories at $2,500. I need not go into an argument to show that a higher salary is necessary now than was required when these were fixed at $1,800, ten or twelve years ago. I trust the amendment will be adopted. I may say further, that it is with the sanction of the Judiciary Committee that I offer the amendment to this bill.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADE. In section six, line four, after the words "null and void," I move to insert "except such acts as the Legislative Assembly herein authorized to be elected shall by special act in each case reenact."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. With the permission of the Senate, I will change the language of the last amendment that I suggested. It does not need so many words. Instead of the words I proposed I suggest these:

The Legislature may at any time change the districts.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What districts?

Mr. HENDRICKS. As fixed by the Governor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do you mean the judicial districts?

Mr. HENDRICKS. No. It is the same amendment that I offered to the fifth section, only in better words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That change of phraseology will be made by common consent.

The amendment of the committee, as amended, was adopted.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that, with the consent of the Senate, the phraseology of his amendment ought to be changed a little, because it may be misconstrued. I think it is possible that it may be construed to apply to the judicial districts when he intends that it shall apply only to the legislative districts. I should like to insert the word "legislative" before the word "districts."

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is all right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator consents I would prefer to have that change made.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have no objection. It is not necessary, because the amendment relates to the legislative section of the bill.

Mr. WADE. It will make it plain; that is all.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have no objection to it. That is my purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The word "legislative" will be inserted before "districts," no objection being interposed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. W. G. Moore, his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following bills and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. No. 347) to change certain collection districts in North Carolina;

A bill (S. No. 421) to authorize the construction of a submerged tubular bridge across the Mississippi river at the city of St. Louis;

A bill (S. No. 497) granting a pension to Mrs. Adeline M. Gould;

A bill (S. No. 498) granting a pension to Mrs. Josephine Slocum;

A bill (S. No. 512) for the relief of Kennedy O'Brien;

A bill (S. No. 514) for the relief of Charles Appleton;

A bill (S. No. 515) granting a pension to Mrs. Ernestine Becker;

A bill (S. No. 535) for the benefit of Mrs. Jerusha Page;

A bill (S. No. 554) granting a pension to John Carter;

A bill (S. No. 556) for the relief of Caroline McGee, of Greene county, Tennessee, widow of Lemuel McGee, deceased;

A bill (S. No. 558) for the relief of Mary A. Smith, of Johnson county, Tennessee, widow of Alexander D. Smith, deceased;

A bill (S. No. 580) granting a pension to Charles N. Weiss;

A bill (S. No. 581) granting a pension to Olivia W. Cannon;

A bill (S. No. 605) to amend the twenty-first section of an act entitled "An act further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes," approved July 18, 1866;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 149) to extend aid and facilities to citizens of the United States engaged in the survey of a route for a ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 159) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the owner of the yacht Mayflower to change the name of the same to that of Silvie, and to issue an American register to the steam yacht Glance; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 171) for the relief of Martha McCook.

PAY OF OFFICERS OF REVENUE-CUTTERS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for the regular order of business, to-day being set apart for the consideration of the business of the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that by special order to-day, at one o'clock, was set apart for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Commerce, and those bills are now properly before the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 900.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 900) to fix the compensation of the officers of the revenue-cutter service, and for other purposes.

The Committee on Commerce reported the bill, with an amendment to strike out the second section, in the following words:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 31st day of December, 1866, each officer of the revenue-cutter service, while on duty, shall be entitled to one Navy ration per day.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to hear the amounts that are to be allowed to the several officers read.

The Secretary read the first section of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the 31st day of December, 1866, the compensation of the officers of the revenue-cutter service shall be at the following rates, namely:

Duty pay—Captains, $2,500 per annum; first lieutenants and chief engineers, $1,800 per annum; second lieutenants and first assistant engineers, $1,500 per annum; third lieutenants and second assistant engineers, $1,200 per annum. Pay on leave of absence or while waiting orders—Captains, $1,800 per annum; first lieutenants and chief engineers, $1,500 per annum; second lieutenants and first assistant engineers, $1,200 per annum; third lieutenants and second assistant engineers, $900 per annum.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I now ask the Secretary to read the last section of the bill in regard to the appropriation.

The Secretary read the third section, as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the provisions of this act during the last half of the current fiscal year, and during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, the sum of $133,400 is hereby appropriated for the expenses of the revenue-cutter service, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It covers the last half of this fiscal year and the whole of the next?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will suggest to the Committee on Commerce whether they had not better drop the amendment that they propose. It strikes me that the pay which is granted is none too high, even with the additional ration. I do not know what the reason of the Committee on Commerce was for proposing that amendment. I do not know what the amount of it would be.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will state that the Committee on Commerce were opposed to a ration in any service of the Government. I do not believe myself that the pay is too much, neither did the committee; but they preferred that the amount of pay should be stated rather than be given in the form of rations. If it is the opinion of the Senate that the ration should be retained I am perfectly content. It was simply an objection to that form of compensation on the part of the committee. Still, both the Army and the Navy have rations.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know why it may not just as well be extended to the revenue-cutter service.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall not resist a motion from the Senator from Maine that that amendment be not acceded to if he makes the motion.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The question is on adopting the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment striking out the second section of the bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is that the only amendment?

Mr. CHANDLER. That is the only one.

Mr. RAMSEY. Do I understand the Senator from Maine to be in favor of the ration?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I thought on hearing the pay read over that even with the ration it would not be any too much.

Mr. RAMSEY. I am of the same view. I shall vote with the Senator on that question.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

QUARANTINE VESSELS AT NEW YORK.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 275.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 275) to extend the time for the use of certain vessels for quarantine purposes at the port of New York. It proposes to continue for two years the authority conferred by joint resolution of March 24, 1866, upon the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, to place, in their discretion gratuitously, at the disposal of the commissioners of quarantine, or the proper authorities of any of the ports of the United States, to be used by them temporarily for quarantine purposes, such vessels or hulks belonging to the United States as are not required for other uses.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 859) to declare valid and conclusive certain proclamations of the President, and acts done in pursuance thereof or of his orders, in suppression of the late rebellion against the United States; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1173) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes.

CONTRACTORS FOR IRON-CLADS.

Mr. HENDRICKS. With the permission of the Senator from Michigan and the Senate, I desire at this point to call up a bill which is upon the table for the purpose of having a committee of conference upon it.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate (S. No. 220) for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels-of-war and steam machinery.

On motion of Mr. HENDRICKS, it was

Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the said bill, and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. HENDRICKS, Mr. ANTHONY, and Mr. WILLEY.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. FESSENDEN. With the consent of the Senator from Michigan, I should like to have the bills just received from the House of Representatives taken up, read, and referred.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 859) to declare valid and conclusive certain proclamations of the President, and acts done in pursuance thereof or of his orders, in the suppression of the late rebellion, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; and the bill (H. R. No. 1173) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

FINES AND PENALTIES UNDER CUSTOMS LAWS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 577.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 577) to regulate the disposition of the proceeds of fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred under the laws relating to the customs. It provides that from the proceeds of fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred under the provisions of the laws relating to the customs there shall be deducted such charges and expenses as are by law in each case authorized to be deducted; and in addition, in case of the forfeiture of imported merchandise on which duties have not been paid, or in case of a release thereof upon payment of its appraised value, or of any fine or composition in money, there shall also be deducted an amount equivalent to the duties in coin upon such merchandise, (including the additional duties, if any,) which shall be credited in the accounts of the collector as duties received, and the residue of the proceeds is to be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and distributed, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, in the manner following, to wit: one half to the United States; one fourth to the person giving the information which has led to the seizure, or to the recovery of the fine or penalty, and if there be no informer other than the collector, naval officer, or surveyor, then to the United States; and the remaining one fourth to be equally divided between the collector, naval officer, and surveyor, or such of them as are appointed for the district in which the seizure has been made, or the fine or penalty incurred, or, if there be only a collector, then to such collector. But where any fine, penalty, or forfeiture, incurred by virtue of the laws relating to customs, shall be recovered in consequence of any information given by an officer of a revenue-cutter, the proceeds are, after the legal deductions have been made, to be disposed of as follows: one fourth to the United States; one fourth to the officers of the customs, as hereinbefore provided; and the remainder to the officers of such revenue-cutter, to be divided among them in proportion to their pay.

Whenever it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the judge of the district court for any district in the United States, by complaint and affidavit, that any fraud on the revenue has been committed by any person or persons interested or in any way engaged in the importation or entry of merchandise at any port within such district, the judge is forthwith to issue his warrant, directed to the marshal of the district, requiring him by himself or deputy to enter any place or premises where any invoices, books, or papers are deposited relating to the merchandise in respect to which such fraud is alleged to have been committed, and to take possession of such books or papers and produce them before the judge; and any invoices, books, or papers so seized are to be subject to the order of the judge, who shall allow the examination of them by the collector of customs of the port into which the alleged fraudulent importation shall have been made, or by any officer duly authorized by the collector. Such invoices, books, or papers may be retained by the judge as long as in his opinion their retention may be necessary; but no warrant for such seizure is to be issued unless the complainant shall set forth distinctly and specifically the fraud alleged, its nature, and the importations in respect to which it was committed, and the papers to be seized. And the warrant issued on such complaint, with report of service and proceedings thereon, is to be returned as other warrants to the court of the district within which such judge presides.

Whenever the collector or other chief officer of the customs of any port shall be notified in writing by the owner or consignee of any vessel or vehicle, arriving from any foreign port or place, of a lien for freight on any merchandise imported in such vessel or vehicle, and remaining in his custody, such collector or other officer is authorized to refuse the delivery of such merchandise from any public or bonded warehouse, or other place in which it shall be deposited, until proof to his satisfaction shall be produced that the freight due thereon has been paid or secured; but the rights of the United States are not to be prejudiced thereby; nor are the United States or its officers to be in any manner liable for losses consequent upon such refusal to deliver; and if merchandise so subject to a lien, regarding which notice has been filed, shall be forfeited to the United States and sold, the freight due thereon shall be paid from the proceeds of such sale in the same manner as other charges and expenses now authorized by law to be paid therefrom.

The fourth section repeals the ninety-first section of the act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage, approved March 2, 1799; the seventh section of an act to prevent and punish frauds upon the revenue, to provide for the more certain and speedy collection of claims in favor of the United States, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1883; the seventeenth section of the act further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes, approved July 18, 1866, and all other laws or parts of laws inconsistent with or supplied by the provisions of this act. The Secretary of the Treasury is to prescribe all needful regulations to carry out and enforce the provisions of the act.

The Committee on Commerce reported the bill with an amendment, in section one, line twenty-nine, after the word "deductions," to insert "including the deductions herein authorized."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill in section one, line twenty-one, by striking out the words "United States" and inserting the words "officer making the seizure;" so as to read:

One fourth to the person giving the information which has led to the seizure, or to the recovery of the fine or penalty, and if there be no informer other than the collector, naval officer, or surveyor, then to the officer making the seizure.

The object of this amendment is to provide a stimulus to the subordinates in the customs department to look out for smuggling and to make seizures whenever they can, instead of holding out to them the temptation of being bribed. As the law is now administered, a subordinate who only gets a small salary may be ever so vigilant, he may sit up nights to watch and seize smuggled goods, and yet he receives no part of the forfeiture. An informer, in the sense in which it is understood in the department, is some outside, unofficial person who communicates information which causes the seizure. The object of this amendment is, in the case where there is no such outside informer, to reward the zeal and fidelity of the seizing officer himself by giving him the share of the proceeds that the informer would take if there were one. From my observation and experience in the custom-house at New York this summer in making investigations, I was satisfied that it would greatly improve the public service to make this provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CRESWELL, the title of the bill was amended by adding the words "and for other purposes."

GOLD CHRONOMETER TO CAPTAIN WEBSTER.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 252.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 252) to permit Captain John A. Webster, jr., of the steamer Mahoning, to receive from the Government of Great Britain a gold chronometer. It allows John A. Webster, jr., of the revenue-cutter service, captain of the steamer Mahoning, to receive from the Government of Great Britain a gold chronometer which that Government is desirous to award to him, in token of its appreciation of valuable services rendered by him to several British vessels in distress on our coast.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. MORRILL. With the permission of the Senator from Michigan, I desire to make a report. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 625) to amend an act entitled "An act concerning the fire department of Washington city," approved February 18, 1867, to report it without amendment and recommend its passage; and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. CHANDLER. Oh, no; do not ask me to yield for that.

Mr. MORRILL. It simply corrects an error in a bill which passed two or three days ago, and it is absolutely necessary to pass it now and let it go the House in season to correct that error. I take it, it will occupy but a moment.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to repeal so much of the act concerning the fire department of Washington city, approved February 18, 1867, as provides for the use and occupation of the Union engine-house for the city of Washington.

Mr. MORRILL. These engine-houses are the property of the Government. During the war they were in the possession of the Government; but ordinarily they are used by the city authorities. The bill to which this is amendatory was to transfer these engine-houses back to the city. Inadvertently, however, I embraced one engine-house which is still in use by the Government and was not intended to be included in the bill; and this is simply to correct that error.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1154.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1154) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was in line sixty-two of section one, after the appropriation of $150,000 "for the improvement of St. Clair flats in Michigan" to insert:

To be expended in accordance with the plans and specifications of Colonel T. J. Cram, in his report of December 10, 1866.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line one hundred and twenty-five of section one:

For improving the harbor of Burlington, Vermont, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following clause in lines one hundred and fifty-nine and one hundred and sixty of section one:

For improving navigation on the Mississippi river at Des Moines, or lower rapids, $1,000,000.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Before the vote is taken I hope the committee will state the reasons which have governed them in making this recommendation. It is one that takes me greatly by surprise, as it will the region of the country where I live. I should be glad to have such reasons assigned as will be satisfactory to our people if the proposed amendment is to be made.

Mr. CHANDLER. The estimate on which this item was embraced in the bill was made by a cavalry officer, a very gallant gentleman, who graduated, I think, in 1860, and of course, therefore, can have had no very great amount of engineering experience. He recommended an entire change in the plan hitherto pursued. Heretofore the impression has been that the Des Moines rapids could be blasted in the river, and dams thrown up so as to form a suitable current; but General Wilson in his report recommends an entire change, and proposes the construction of a canal, and he says:

"The estimated amount that can be profitably expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, is $1,000,000, including the $200,000 already appropriated. The estimated amount that can be profitably expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, is $1,000,000. Carefully prepared estimates of cost and general plans of the proposed canal, with a map of the rapids, are submitted herewith."

It was perfectly clear to the committee that $1,000,000 could not be profitably expended in any work between this time and the 1st of July, 1867. There seems to be an error there, for they could hardly get to work before that time; and the bill does not say "for the construction of a canal at these rapids," but it says "for improving navigation on the Mississippi river at Des Moines or lower rapids, $1,000,000." The committee were of the impression that before so great a change should be made as the construction of a canal there should be a further investigation. There was evidently an error in the estimate of $1,000,000 for the residue of this year, for that could not be expended this year. Then he says that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, $1,000,000 will be needed, and he estimates the whole cost of the work at some four or five million dollars. It is a pretty heavy work. All the engineers who had surveyed the work prior to General Wilson had recommended another plan. He proposes to change the whole plan of the work; and the committee thought, and were unanimous in that opinion, that before so great a change should be made further surveys and further investigation should be made. They therefore recommended the striking out of this clause. According to the report of General Wilson, there are now $200,000 of a former appropriation unexpended, and that would seem to be all that would be required for the present fiscal year if they proceeded on the old plan; and if a new plan is to be adopted, of course new surveys can be ordered by older and more experienced engineers before the next session of Congress. The committee were unanimously of opinion that this very large appropriation had better not be made at this time.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Feeling an interest as I do in the improvement of these rapids, I thought it proper to make some examination of the reports made by General Wilson and the recommendations made by General Humphreys. I am glad to find that there is no more serious objection to this appropriation than the fact that the engineer by whom the survey was made is said to be a young man. I do not know his precise age. I do not know whether the committee have examined that point or not. He certainly was old enough and had reputation enough to be assigned to this duty by his proper superiors, and I am glad to find that the report made by him is indorsed by them. The chairman of the committee read a statement, which he said was made by General Wilson, that $1,000,000 could be expended profitably on this work during the present year, and $1,000,000 during the next year. That is not only said by General Wilson, but it is said by General Humphreys, chief of the corps of Engineers. How skillful General Wilson may be I do not know. I only know that he was assigned to this duty, and that he has reported to us facts as well as opinions. I do not presume the committee dispute the facts as reported. He has given us, I apprehend, all the facts that are necessary to enable us to form a judgment on this question, if our judgment is to control it. He reports in substance that for seven and a half miles and over of the rapids there is a continuous descent, the river has a rocky bottom of a continuous, nearly smooth descent, upon which the water at a low period has an average depth of a little over two feet. To obviate the difficulties of navigation there we must make a channel two hundred feet wide and seven and a half miles long. If the lower rapids are to be improved by blasting, the passage will be seven and a half miles long and so deep as to give four feet of water at all times. If we ever improve the river in that way we shall have to do that thing; and General Wilson tells us that if we do that thing, if we do blast out a channel seven and a half miles long, two hundred feet wide, and so deep as to give us at the lowest period four feet of water, the channel thus made can be used in daylight when the weather is clear and the winds are not blowing, and cannot be used at night when the weather is windy or foggy. That stands to reason. We can understand that as well as an engineer can.

We have heard a great deal here lately about bridging the Mississippi river, and we are told that the difficulty arises from the fact that putting piers in the river with a draw makes a narrower channel, through which boats have to run, and they are liable to be blown to one side or the other according to the direction of the wind, and sometimes to be blown on the piers and destroyed. These piers are from two hundred to three hundred feet long. Here we are to make a channel seven and a half miles long at a point in the river nearly double the width of the channel above and below these rapids. We are then, according to one plan, to build a canal around the rapids; or, according to the other, to blast a channel of that length, in which a boat will be exposed at all times to the operation of the wind, with but two hundred feet width in which to maneuver, and liable to be blown at all times when the wind is high either to one side or the other. It will be impossible, as the engineer tells us, for boats in foggy weather to pass through a channel of this width and this length, crowded as it must to some extent necessarily be; and he tells us in substance, what I think all the people living in that neighborhood know already, that an improvement of this kind, although it might to some extent benefit the navigation, would not be an improvement such as we ought to make. His estimate of the cost of the improvement in this way is only about six hundred thousand dollars less than the cost of making a canal. It will cost just about six hundred thousand dollars more to build a canal than to blast out this incomplete, unsafe, and insufficient channel of communication over these rapids.

Upon the upper rapids he recommends the other plan of blasting out the rocks in the river, and gives his reasons for so doing. The upper rapids are not as long as the lower rapids; they are not composed, as the lower rapids are, of a continuous, unbroken descent for six or seven miles; but they consist of a series of ledges across the channel of the river, with long, deep "pools" between them, these pools being from one to two miles in length between the different bars, and affording a vessel sufficient space in which to maneuver after passing through one ledge before it makes the opening that has to be made in the next ledge. He gives the reason why he recommends a different mode of improvement of the two different points, and the reason is clear and palpable to every man, whether an engineer or not. At the upper rapids, as I have stated, boats have a chance to go from one break to another break, with room between the two to maneuver, and opportunity to prepare themselves for the passage through these breaks in the ledges easily and safely; but it is not so and cannot be so at the lower rapids.

The chairman of the Committee on Commerce tells us that the engineer has evidently made a mistake in asking for $1,000,000 to be expended this year. He says he cannot expend a million between this and the last of June. That is probably true; but if we appropriate a million for the present fiscal year, it reaches over during the working season of this year, and we have not only till the last of June, but till the work is closed by the frosts of next winter to expend that money. Not only does General Wilson tell us that we can expend this million profitably, but his superior, General Humphreys, does the same thing. If the Senator will look at page 8 of the report he will find that what he read was signed by General Humphreys, and not by General Wilson.

Upon the other hand, Mr. President, if we do not make this appropriation at this session of Congress where are we placed? We can of course do nothing toward building a canal this summer. When Congress meets in its regular session in December next this bill will, as all other appropriation bills do, come in at the close of that session, at the close of the summer of 1868; so that during the entire summer of 1867 and the summer of 1868 we have no appropriation, and of course can do no work, and the appropriation will be passed so late in the summer of 1868 that we can do nothing that summer, and cannot commence work till the summer of 1869. It throws us over completely for a period of two whole years. Why should this be so? No man can doubt that if we build a canal around Des Moines rapids we have a perfect and complete improvement of the river. There is no question but that that mode of improvement will do all that can be done for the improvement of the river. It will give us a perfectly safe passage above and below the rapids. Not only that, but the engineer tells us that it will be a benefit to the navigation of the river even at times when the water is so high upon the rapids that boats can pass over, because those coming up the river can pass through the slack water of the canal and not have to stem the rapid current on the rapids.

Now, sir, what reason is there why this work should be done soon? I will tell you. The report of the engineer embodies in it a statement made by the agent of the principal transportation company on that part of the river, the agent of the Northern Line Packet Company, I think it is called, in which is contained this interesting information, interesting to the people living upon that river:

"During the year 1866 the boats owned by the company made their trips as per list, namely: steamboat Minnesota, 21 trips; steamboat Muscatine, 20 trips; steamboat Sucker State, 21 trips; steamboat Hawkeye State, 14 trips; steamboat Davenport, 22 trips; steamboat Burlington, 19 trips; steamboat Pembina, 20 trips; steamboat Canada, 18 trips; steamboat Savannah, 8 trips; steamboat Reserve, 17 trips; steamboat Petrel, 16 trips; steamboat Little Giant, 9 trips; steamboat Bill Henderson, 3 trips; steamboat America, 3 trips—making in all 211 trips, costing, on an average, $211,000 for the season of 1866."

That is, it cost the company running these boats $211,000 for lighterage and expenses in carrying goods over these rapids for this single season; it cost this company $211,000 more than it would have paid if these rapids had been improved. In other words, it cost the men who sent their goods over these rapids for the articles sent by that single line $211,000 in that one year more than they would have paid if this work had been done. How much it cost other companies transporting goods up and down the Mississippi over these rapids I cannot tell; but we in the West, who sent our goods by the boats of this single company, were mulcted $211,000 in the year 1866 because this improvement was not made. What we have lost by the loss of boats on these rapids I cannot tell; I have not the information here. I have heard it estimated, however, that the loss and the increased cost amount to $500,000 in a single year; and yet we are asked to allow this condition of things to go on two years more before we can even move in the direction of making any improvement; why? Because Senators tell us the engineer sent out there was not as old a man as he ought to have been. I am very sorry that we must lose from two hundred and fifty to five hundred thousand dollars a year because the Secretary of War did not see fit to send out a man to do this engineering who was older than the man he did send. There is this, however, to be said about his engineering: that the plan submitted by him is indorsed by his chief. Not only is he indorsed as competent to do the work, but his work after having been done is indorsed by his chief.

I understood that it might be argued from the printed report before us that the conclusions of the engineer were not indorsed. Reading the report carefully I could not see any ground for that opinion, but I was told that it would be urged, and to obviate the possibility of that being urged I called upon the Engineer-in-Chief and have from him this letter:

"Sir, I concur in the views and conclusions of General Wilson as to the best mode of improving the Des Moines rapids, that is, by building a canal with locks. My report upon the subject gives the reasons for rejecting the other project. On the contrary, the canal was rejected for Rock Island rapids and the old plan recommended for adoption, and for that reason the recommendation of the Department was very specific."

Now, however young General Wilson may be—I do not know how young he is—he was selected by the proper officer to go there and do this work. He has done it; he has given us the facts as ascertained by him, and upon those facts he has given us his views and conclusions, and no man, I apprehend, can doubt that his views and conclusions are clearly and unequivocally indorsed by the chief of the Engineer Bureau. Why should we wait? If you improve by means of blasting the rocks in the channel, then you expend within $600,000 of what it will cost to build the canal. It costs nearly two and three quarter million dollars, according to the estimate, to blast a channel through the rapids, and when done you have no certainty that you have a good thing; but if you build the canal you have an absolute certainty; it is a matter about which there cannot be and is not any dispute that a canal will remove all the difficulties.

If we say we cannot adopt this plan and go on now, we shall do nothing this year, and we cannot get an appropriation until the close of the session next year, and nothing will be done next year, and thus we shall lose two entire years, and we have the knowledge that in that time our western people will lose in moneys paid for lighterage over these rapids at least half a million dollars. That would go a great way toward this improvement.

I trust, then, that this amendment will not be concurred in. I trust that while we are spending money so profusely as we are spending it here for purposes that will not return one dollar to us as a nation, while we are spending a quarter of a million to send gentlemen over to Paris to the grand Exhibition there, when we are entering upon a project for a magnificent park near this city that will cost us before it is done ten million dollars, we are to be called upon to vote to buy two blocks of buildings adjoining this Capitol at an expense of half a million dollars, to be followed by half a million more for the improvement of the grounds—while we are doing all these things that do not return one dollar to us, I hope we shall not be niggardly in making appropriations of money that will save us at least a quarter of a million every year and tend to develop that portion of the country from which so much of the prosperity of the nation comes, the West.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Committee on Commerce adopted a rule in regard to these appropriations, which was to advise no appropriation that was not specifically recommended and estimated for by the engineer department. On the 28th of January, 1867, the Secretary of War sent to the House of Representatives his estimate upon which this bill was based. In that report of the 28th of January we found "Des Moines rapids, removing obstructions —." He did not recommend the appropriation of one single dollar for this work. Neither does the report of the engineer recommend a single dollar; but General Wilson says, "the estimated amount that can be profitably expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, is $1,000,000, including the $200,000 already appropriated." General Humphreys does not recommend a dollar. The report of the Secretary of War dated January 28, 1867, as I have stated, does not recommend a single dollar, as Senators will see by looking at House Executive Document No. 56 of the present session.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Allow me to say to the Senator that General Humphreys explained to me that at the time this document was made up of which the Senator speaks, the reports from General Wilson were not in the hands of the bureau upon which to make the estimates, and that is the reason why they were not put in.

Mr. CHANDLER. The committee were unanimously of the opinion that we had better have a further examination before making so large an appropriation. We have no objection to expending this much money if it is really needed for the improvement, and if the best plan has been recommended; but the committee thought unanimously that our information at the present time was not sufficient to justify such a conclusion, and therefore we reported in favor of striking out this item; but it is in the hands of the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. Is it in order to move to amend the clause before the vote is taken on striking it out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. GRIMES. Then I move to amend the clause by adding to it this proviso:

Provided, however, That any canal that may be constructed around the said Des Moines or lower rapids of the Mississippi river shall be and forever remain free to the navigation and commerce of said river, and no tolls shall ever be collected thereon.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to that.

The amendment of Mr. GRIMES was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on striking out the clause as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Committee on Commerce did not propose this amendment without great consideration, and their desire was to do justice to the people along that river as far as they could do it, and at the same time to do justice to the people of the rest of the country in respect to protecting the Treasury. As has been stated by the distinguished chairman of the committee, the regular estimates and recommendations of the War Department for these improvements contain no recommendation and no estimate for this, although the surveys and examinations have been under way for a considerable length of time. It has also been correctly stated by the chairman of the committee that this young officer who has made these surveys and recommendations, and on whose authority alone almost it is that this enormous appropriation is asked, only recently entered the service, graduating at West Point in 1860, a young lieutenant, and he could have had no opportunity for acquiring engineering knowledge of this description during the war, because his whole time was devoted, and gallantly devoted, to prosecuting other and more important interests of the country.

Mr. BROWN. Why was he sent there by the Department to make that survey if they had not confidence in him?

Mr. EDMUNDS. You must go to the Department if you want to know. I am unable to say. I do not doubt that the Department had confidence in sending him to make surveys. They have confidence in everybody they send to make surveys, and when they have had those surveys returned to them; if the Department believe the money ought to be expended and the scheme entered upon they say so in explicit language, as they do not say here, because my friend from Missouri is perfectly well aware that in the report of the War Department upon this general subject there was no recommendation at all. Some person in interest drew out afterward in the House of Representatives this special report, which is merely a resumé of General Wilson's report to the Department; and General Humphreys says in addition that he is unable to forward to the Secretary of War even the plans and estimates upon which the thing is proposed to be done. He has not himself at this day got the information; it is guess work.

Under circumstances of that description, an engineer, however worthy and hopeful and gallant he may be, is sent there to make his maiden effort in respect of these topographical and aqueous questions, if I may so speak, connected with that river, and after awhile he makes this report; and it is proposed, instead of deepening the river, which is now capable of passing commerce under some circumstances, to abandon the river altogether, and build a canal seven and a half miles long on its borders, paying I suppose for private property—though I do not know whether there are any people on the river at this precise point, but I infer that it is a cultivated and valuable tract of country—paying private damages for property for seven and a half miles, and cutting this canal on the very instant of the report of this sub-engineer, when the Engineer-in-Chief is not, as I repeat from the document itself, able to furnish the Secretary of War with the detailed plans and estimates, because he has not got them. If that is not making haste to spend the money of the people I am very much mistaken.

I am as willing as any man to vote all the money necessary to improve the Mississippi river or any other river, as far as we can with economy and propriety; but we ought not to enter upon a scheme which involves an expenditure of three, four, or five million dollars at one point until we shall clearly see, upon an express recommendation of the Secretary of War, with the plans and estimates before us, that we can judge upon, whether it ought to be done or not. It is only a very short time until the next session of Congress, only a week; and it will not be long after the summer closes until the next regular session begins. Let there then be further consideration given to this subject; and if this appropriation turns out to be necessary, and shall be recommended by the Secretary of War, I, for one, shall be quite as ready as any other gentleman to vote all the money that is necessary for this improvement. But we cannot justify ourselves in entering upon a scheme of such magnitude without full and complete consideration, which it evidently has not yet had.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Of course, when we work by rules we must obey rules. The Committee on Commerce have informed us by two of their members that they make no recommendations except such as are made to them by the Secretary of War. I think it is a well-established general principle that there are no rules without exceptions. I have not had time to look through this bill and compare it with the report of the Secretary of War fully, but picking it up as I did from the desk while the Senator from Michigan was speaking, I find that the committee have made some exceptions to the rule. The very next item in the bill following the one proposed to be stricken out is an appropriation of $200,000 for improving the navigation of the Mississippi river at Rock Island rapids; and in looking at the report of the Secretary of War I find that the Rock Island rapids stand in his report precisely on the same ground as the lower or Des Moines rapids. He makes no recommendation for either; and yet the Committee on Commerce have given, unasked, as they would say, without any recommendation from the Secretary of War, an appropriation for the upper or Rock Island rapids, and yet as a reason for not giving an appropriation for the lower rapids they say the Secretary of War has not recommended it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The bill as it came from the House of Representatives contained that appropriation of $200,000, and we consented and thought it right to let it stand at that, because it pursued the old method, and because the chief of Engineers said in this special report that it is "recommended for adoption"—that plan of improving the Rock Island rapids—so that we had an express recommendation, although a specific sum was not named, and consented to leave the House bill as it stood in that respect. Perhaps we were a little too generous in that.

Mr. BROWN. Does not the chief engineer say that he recommends and approves this bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not so understand what he says.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The House of Representatives put in both of these appropriations, one for the lower rapids and one for the upper rapids. The Secretary of War did not recommend either. Why? Because he had not before him at the time he sent in his report the papers on which to have a recommendation. That was the only reason. That is the reason given to me by the chief of Engineers himself. The plans and specifications were not before the Secretary of War, and for that reason both rapids in his report were treated alike and both omitted. They were treated alike by the House of Representatives, both being put in the bill; but when the bill comes here the Committee on Commerce, doubtless for the reason assigned by the Senator, doubtless for what the committee deemed a good reason, proposed to strike out the lower rapids and leave in the appropriation for the upper rapids.

As I have already stated, I called on the Engineer-in-Chief in reference to this matter, and said that it might possibly be urged that he did not recommend the plans of General Wilson. He was disposed to treat the matter lightly, and indeed to laugh at it. He said he did not know how any gentleman could read what he had said on the subject and come to any other conclusion than that he had adopted General Wilson's report and recommended it; but I told him that I might be met by the precise objection with which I am now met here, and to obviate that difficulty I asked from him the letter which I have read, in which he does approve and indorse the views and conclusions of General Wilson. The reason he gives us why he makes a special recommendation for the upper rapids is that there is no insuperable objection, as shown by the engineering there, to carry out the plan previously adopted, while in regard to the lower rapids there is this insuperable objection: that you may do the work according to the old plan, spend near $3,000,000 upon it, and then have a worthless work upon your hands.

The Senator tells us we are to lose no time: we are to meet again on the 4th of March. It is well known that at that session Congress will not probably remain here ten days or two weeks, and then the matter will go over to the next regular session; and before another appropriation can be made, which will be in June or July, 1868, it will be too late to do any work in that year, and we must lose in the mean time at least half a million dollars of our hard earnings, because Congress is unwilling to act now on the report of this young man. I should like to know how old he is? Perhaps he is as old as Napoleon was when he went to take command of the army in Italy. History teaches us that wisdom does not always go with gray hairs. Some old men are not wise; some young men are. Let me repeat again he has given to us certain facts; he has given us, for instance, the length of the rapids; he has given us the depth of water on the rapids; he has given us the character of the bottom of the rapids at the two points; they are wholly different, widely different; and it is shown that a plan which will improve one may be an utter failure as to the other. We have all the facts we can have, I apprehend, at any time before us. Gentlemen will not contend that because this gentleman is a young man he cannot make a survey. They do not pretend to dispute a single fact that is laid down in his report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He is a distinguished officer.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I do not know how distinguished he is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Distinguished as a cavalry officer.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I think the matter is understood by the Senate. I hope this clause of the bill will be retained.

Mr. GRIMES. The people of the whole Northwest are particularly and specially interested in the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines rapids of the Mississippi, and the commerce of the whole country is to a greater or less extent interested in it. The people that I in part represent are very deeply interested, and I justify the few remarks that I shall detain the Senate by submitting on this subject by that interest.

The first survey that was made by authority of law of the Des Moines rapids was made in 1836 or 1837 by Lieutenant Robert E. Lee, the late general of the rebel army. He reported that it was feasible to blow out the "chains" across the river which make the rapids; and appropriations of a small amount have from time to time been made for the purpose of carrying out his views. Another survey, but not a minute one I think, was subsequently made by General Warren, who decided that, although such a process as that might not make the most perfect navigation, yet it would very much—I think he used the expression—ameliorate the condition of the stream. Last year an appropriation was made for the same purpose, and General Wilson was sent to make a survey. General Wilson reports in favor of a canal, as I understand, instead of the course that was recommended by Lieutenant Lee.

On the strength of this recommendation of General Wilson, it is proposed that we appropriate $1,000,000 for the purpose of improving navigation "on the Mississippi river," and I suppose the word "on" is used in that phrase to convey the idea, and is to be regarded as authority by the War Department to make a canal instead of improving the navigation itself. I do not know how they manage matters at the Engineer Bureau now-a-days, but I know that formerly no great public work was ever recommended by the War Department to be undertaken until the plans and specifications and surveys and details were submitted to a board of skillful, competent, and experienced engineers; they reported for or against the project, and upon the strength of that report the Secretary of War sent in his recommendation to Congress. I am not prepared to say that a canal is the right way to improve these rapids. I do not think it is. I am unwilling, unless there shall be something more done than the mere survey of General Wilson, that the commerce of the country shall be liable to the interruption which I think a canal will impose upon it. But I am willing that the Secretary of War, calling to his aid a board of competent officers, shall, taking the report of General Wilson as made, in connection with the report that Lieutenant Lee made and that General Warren made, decide that question, and I am willing to abide the result. I propose, therefore, to strike out the word "on" and substitute the word "of," and to reduce the amount from $1,000,000 to $500,000. As there is an unexpended balance in the Treasury applicable to this improvement of about $200,000, that would give $700,000 for this purpose, and this, with the amendment which has already been adopted, proposed by me, will enable the Secretary of War to determine for himself whether we shall have a canal or whether they shall go on blowing up the rocks. In that way I think the proposition will be satisfactory to all parties, and we may get an improvement.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. If my colleague had not offered his amendment, I proposed to offer one, to insert after the word "rapids" the words "according to such plan as the Secretary of War may approve."

Mr. GRIMES. You may offer it now.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I suppose the word "on" is a misprint. If amended as I propose the clause would then read "for improving navigation of the Mississippi river at Des Moines or lower rapids, according to such plan as the Secretary of War may approve, $1,000,000."

Mr. GRIMES. Say a "board of engineers."

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I will put it in this form, "according to such plan as a board of engineers, to be appointed by the Secretary of War, may recommend."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will suggest to my friend from Iowa who offered the amendment, that it will be more acceptable to me if he will so change the phraseology as to have it read "according to such plan as the Secretary of War, on the report of a board of engineers, shall approve."

Mr. GRIMES. It amounts to the same thing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is slightly different; it gives a little more opportunity for consideration to have it in that form than it does to make the decision of the board absolutely final. If this work is to be so extensive, as it obviously is, if it be entered upon at all, then I think the decision of a board, without any right of review on the part of the Secretary of War, ought not to be final, ought not to be allowed; but the usual course taken in all these improvements ought to be taken in this; and that is, to make the Secretary of War the ultimate arbiter as to the propriety and necessity of the particular work, subject of course to the action of Congress afterward. I therefore ask my friend to modify his amendment; or if it be amendable I move to amend it in accordance with the suggestion I have made.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The phraseology is wholly indifferent to me one way or the other. My object is to get at the thing. If it will secure the vote of my friend from Vermont, and not drive off more on the other side, I will take it in the way he proposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not promise that it will secure my vote; but it will relieve me.

Mr. BROWN, (to Mr. KIRKWOOD.) Let us try what relieving him will do. [Laughter.]

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Very well, I am willing to change it, and let a board of engineers act first and the Secretary of War afterward.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Put it in this shape, "according to such plan as the Secretary of War shall, on the report of a board of engineers, approve."

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I accept that modification of my amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I move to amend the amendment a little further, and I shall then acquiesce in leaving it to stand, although my judgment concurs, the little I have about it, entirely with that of the Senator from Iowa furthest from me, [Mr. GRIMES,] that this canal is not the best way to help commerce there by any means.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. KIRKWOOD.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move now to strike out "$1,000,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$300,000," which, with the sum of $200,000, which is now to the credit of the rapids, will make the total sum to be expended this year $500,000, and I think that is as much as economy and prudence will justify us in devoting to that work at this time. That will enable the Department, if it thinks proper to enter upon this canal enterprise at all, to locate its route, to settle its land damages, and put itself in the process of beginning the principal work; and I think it a wise policy, indeed eminently wise, that for no such thing should we appropriate money any faster than it can be immediately used in the future; that accumulating appropriations, putting large sums, unnecessarily large, at the disposal of any officer of the Government is a very bad policy indeed. I hope that this amendment will meet the approval of my friends who are peculiarly interested in the prosecution of this work.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I am pretty strongly impressed with the opinion that the board of engineers will recommend and that the Secretary will adopt a plan for improving these rapids by means of a canal. I am very much more familiar with the Mississippi river than my friend from Vermont is, and I am fearful that if we make an appropriation of only $300,000 in addition to the $200,000 already appropriated, we shall lose a good portion of the work that may be done during the current year. The Mississippi is a considerably larger river than any they have in Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So is the sum of $500,000 a larger sum of money than any that is voted for any river in Vermont.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That may be, but it is to be dealt with accordingly. If the money is not used it remains in the Treasury. We appropriate the money, and if it is not used and cannot be used, though the engineer tells us it can be used judiciously in this way, it remains in the Treasury. It is not drawn out of the Treasury and put in the hands of the officers until it is necessary to be expended. Then there is no danger of loss to the public, and there is a probability of getting the work in such a condition that it will not suffer injury, if we give enough to go at a work of this magnitude in a respectable way; whereas if we go at it by appropriations of $100,000 or $200,000 at a time the chance is that each winter we shall lose a portion of what we have done the preceding summer. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think this amendment is very liberal. Of course the board of engineers has to act before any action can be taken by the Secretary. There is $200,000 now unexpended, and that with the appropriation proposed would give them $500,000 for this year's operations, which is really all that will be necessary and all that could be profitably expended in the year, even if they should adopt the plan of a canal; and I very much doubt whether they will do that. If the Senate see fit to give $500,000 for this year, which will be the effect of this amendment, I am perfectly content that it shall be so; and considering the necessary delay I think it is a very liberal amount.

Mr. BROWN. I trust if this appropriation is to be voted it will be voted in such a shape that it may be available and desirable, and not cut down to a trifling amount. If this is to be prosecuted as a canal and the building of a canal, we have the authority of the officer making the survey for the fact that the whole appropriation can be profitably expended during the first year. And if that shall be determined on by this board we have provided for, we ought to furnish the means by which it can be carried on. If that shall not be determined upon, but a less expensive plan, there will be no harm done by voting a sufficient appropriation. I look on this amendment as hostile to the whole appropriation.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont will not be adopted. These rapids have been in the way of navigation in the Mississippi river many years. They have been in the way of a largely increasing commerce, a commerce increasing from year to year, until now the commerce upon that river largely exceeds, if I mistake not, the whole coastwise commerce of the United States. There is scarcely any conception of the immensity, the greatness, of the commerce upon the Mississippi river.

The Senator from Michigan, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, insists that $300,000 is a very liberal appropriation indeed for making an improvement that the engineer estimates will cost between two and three millions; and even if it costs that amount it will be the best invested money that was ever invested, perhaps, in a public improvement. The Senator from Michigan says this is very liberal indeed. Without reflecting upon the bill which he has reported, I must say that I find decidedly greater liberality in favor of the rivers and harbors in his own State. I find in this bill for the improvement of the St. Clair flats, in Michigan, $150,000; for the improvement at the mouth of the Saginaw river, Michigan, $28,000; for the improvement of St. Mary's river, Michigan, $50,000; for the improving the mouth of Au Sable river, Michigan, $50,000; for improving the harbor of Aux Bees Scies, Michigan, $10,000; for improvement of Black Lake harbor, Michigan, $50,000; for improving harbor of St. Joseph, Michigan, $23,000; for improving harbor of Manistee, Michigan, $60,000; for improvement of White River harbor, Michigan, $57,000; for improvement of Muskegon harbor, Lake Michigan, $59,000; for improving harbor of South Haven, Michigan, $43,000; for improving harbor of New Buffalo, Michigan, $60,000; and for the harbor of Ontonagon, Michigan, $97,000—making $747,000 in the single State of Michigan, and I believe I have not counted all the items for that State.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator will pardon me. I simply said as to that, in view of what they could expend properly this year, it was a liberal appropriation; I did not say it was liberal as to the work itself, but that I did not think they could expend more than that this year. I had no reference in that remark to the magnitude of the work, but simply to what I thought could be expended this year. So far as the appropriations for Michigan are concerned, they are all recommended by the engineer department, and they are all for the benefit of the surrounding States. Michigan is almost wholly surrounded by water, is a peninsula, and of course there are many harbors to be provided for.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator stated that this appropriation was liberal, and I did not know in what sense he intended to be understood. He certainly stated that it was a very liberal appropriation, and when I came to look at the appropriations provided for the State of Michigan I found $747,000 appropriated, and I do not know that I have included even now all the items. Here is an appropriation to remove obstacles in the navigation of a great inland sea, a river upon which floats a commerce greater than the commerce between the United States and all the nations of the world.

Mr. WILSON. Do not brag.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator from Massachusetts advises me not to brag. Certainly figures demonstrate the fact which I have stated, and he knows it. It is a fact beyond any question or doubt. Now, these rapids are in the way of an easy navigation of the river; in fact at certain seasons of the year they stand in the way of any navigation at all, even with the lightest vessels, and it is exceedingly desirable, not alone to the State that I in part represent, but to the people of all the western States, that the Rock Island rapids and the Des Moines rapids should be improved. I hope the Senate will not hesitate to give the amount that may be necessary for the purpose. What that amount may be I of course know but little about. I can only rely upon the reports which we have here. We authorized last year the Secretary of War to make this investigation. The investigation has been made by a competent engineer, I presume, or else he would not have been ordered to do it. The Senator from Vermont tells us that he is a very young man. His report is approved by the Engineer-in-Chief, whom I know to be a competent man. I suppose that no member of this body will doubt the capacity and ability of the chief Engineer, General Humphreys, and I do not suppose any one will hesitate to say that if he has approved the work of General Wilson he would not have done so without knowing what he was doing. He says in his letter already read: "I concur in the views and conclusions of General Wilson as to the best mode of improving the Des Moines rapids; that is, by building a canal with locks."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does my friend from Missouri observe the fact that in this very letter General Humphreys first wrote the word "recommendations" and struck it out and used the word "conclusions," so that he was careful not to use the word "recommendations?"

Mr. BROWN. "Conclusions" is a little more conclusive than the other word.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps it may be, and if so you are entitled to the benefit of it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not know that I can draw any distinction—the Senator from Vermont may possibly be able to draw one—between the words "conclusions" and "recommendations." I apprehend that General Humphreys in writing this letter intended to indorse clearly the views entertained by the officer who made the survey in regard to the best mode of improving these rapids. If he did not intend that by his letter I should say that General Humphreys ought to improve in his mode of writing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no doubt from that letter that General Humphreys does now concur in the conclusions of this officer; but a conclusion as to the necessity of a work is one thing and a recommendation of $2,000,000, as you say the printed recommendation is, to be spent this year, is quite a different thing.

Mr. HENDERSON. Not by any means; he did not so recommend. He said it would cost over two million dollars, but he does not expect that $2,000,000 will be expended within the coming year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The recommendation, if you call it a recommendation at all, as I do not, was that by the 30th of June, 1867, this reporting officer says he can expend a million, and up to June 30, 1868, another million. If that does not make $2,000,000 in a little over a year I do not understand arithmetic.

Mr. BROWN. So much the greater reason for increasing the amount allowed.

Mr. HENDERSON. If that argument amounted to anything, it only demonstrates the necessity of appropriating the $2,000,000 now, as my colleague suggests. It is useless for us to hesitate about the amount of money to be appropriated for the improvement of these rapids, provided they can be improved at all. That is the real question. If they can be improved the people of the United States ought not to hesitate one moment about going to work to accomplish that object. Whatever is necessary to be done ought to be done in order that navigation may be facilitated over that part of the river. Here is a river thirty-six hundred miles in length, the most magnificent stream in the world, with its navigation unimpeded and uninterrupted through its entire length, except by these two rapids at Keokuk and at Rock Island. At these points commerce has to be entirely reshipped; freight has to be removed from one vessel to another in order to pass over these rapids during a large portion of the year, carried over them in lighters and again removed above or below to the other vessels. This ought to be obviated if it is possible to do so, and especially in consideration of the richness and the wealth of the commerce passing over them. No idea of a parsimonious appropriation should be permitted to enter into the brains of Senators on this subject. I do not want a lavish expenditure of money; I do not desire that one dollar shall be needlessly and recklessly expended, or that we shall now appropriate a dollar beyond the amount absolutely essential to remove these obstacles in the way of navigation upon this stream; but whatever sum may be necessary for that purpose the Senate ought without hesitation to appropriate.

The Senator from Michigan has in this bill $747,000 for his own State, and I freely accord it to the State of Michigan, because with the exception of six or seven States still west of Michigan it is perhaps the greatest State in the Union. [Laughter.] I have never hesitated to vote appropriations for building harbors; but it ought to be remembered that we in the West on this great river build our own harbors. We do not ask you to build a harbor at St. Louis nor at Keokuk nor at Burlington nor at Galena. We are not asking you in this bill to build harbors on the western rivers; but along the eastern sea-board and along the great lakes I have from year to year voted appropriations for harbors without hesitation, and the people that I represent do not ask me to do otherwise than to vote the most liberal appropriations for such purposes. We will build harbors for you; we take as much pride in your expanding commerce as you can take yourselves, and I do not hesitate to give all that you can in reason ask. But this is not for a harbor; this is to remove an obstacle in the way of navigation itself upon the greatest river of the earth. If we can give you $747,000 for improving harbors in the State of Michigan, why can you not give us at least a million for the improvement of navigation at the Des Moines rapids in the Mississippi? These rapids lie just in the middle of navigation upon that stream. Above the navigation is good; below it is good. A passage must be cut, as the Senator from California [Mr. CONNESS] suggests to me. He will remember that I have never hesitated to vote the most liberal appropriations to the Pacific coast. Wherever he wants a harbor in California my people have said give it to the Senator from California who so ably represents that State and never neglects the interests of his constituents. But now, when we are asking an appropriation to remove ten or twelve miles of absolute obstacle in the way of navigation upon the Mississippi river the Senator from Vermont says that it must be cut down; that $300,000 will be amply sufficient for this year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is said $200,000 was appropriated last year and is still to the credit of this work. I presume the reason why that money has not been expended is that it is useless to take $200,000 out of the Treasury unless we can do some good with it. Our people at the West do not ask your money unless you give enough to accomplish the work. We do not desire to take a penny when a dollar is needed. While my friend from Vermont comes to the conclusion that this thing ought not to be done on the Mississippi river, just look at what he does for the little harbor of Burlington in his State. Here are twelve miles of solid rock to be blown out of the bottom of a river, or else a canal of seven or eight miles to be constructed around the rapids, and all we ask is $1,000,000 in order to go on with this improvement at these rapids, that have stood for the last twenty years to my certain knowledge in the way of the most magnificent commerce on earth. The Senator has no idea what an obstacle it is and what complaints it causes and what cost it is to reship goods. But at the same time that he finds it in his heart to strike out this appropriation, which will involve from two to three million dollars—I do not pretend to say it will cost less, and if it cost $20,000,000 it would yet be the best appropriation that could be made—what is his action in regard to his own State? The Senator represents a gallant and brave little State, but it has no large streams. I presume he has never seen the Mississippi river; he does not appreciate its greatness, and it is an utter impossibility for him to appreciate the commerce that floats upon its surface. It is about three quarters of a mile wide, nearly a mile.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I admit it is a big river, a mile wide and some feet deep.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator will recollect that there is a fall or rapid at this point, and that the water is shallow there, and immediately after reaching Keokuk, at the foot of the rapids, there is deep water from there to the city of New Orleans, a distance of fourteen hundred miles. Immediately above, up to Rock Island, there is deep water, and from Rock Island to St. Paul, which is a distance greater than any stream in his State multiplied by six, it is again a deep stream. It will be a stream fit for navigation its whole length if we remove these obstructions. My friend, who thinks $300,000 ought to be enough for this purpose, after reporting from the committee of which he is a member to strike out this whole appropriation on the ground that it was not recommended by the War Department, introduces an appropriation of $80,000 for the improvement of the harbor of Burlington, Vermont, which is not recommended by the House nor by the War Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is recommended by the War Department expressly.

Mr. HENDERSON. Why was it not inserted in the bill by the House of Representatives?

Mr. EDMUNDS. For this reason, that by a mere blunder in the general report of the Secretary of War the appropriation required for the current year was left blank, and on inquiry they said that the plans had been entirely completed, and they wrote a letter to the committee stating that it was an accident, and requesting that the $80,000 appropriation be put in.

Mr. HENDERSON. That may be; but I find it in the printed bill, inserted by the committee which strikes out the Mississippi river appropriation. It seemed to me to be robbing Peter to pay Paul, taking away from the Des Moines rapids and giving to Burlington. I do not refer to this fact for the purpose of saying that I am opposed to giving an appropriation to Burlington, Vermont, for a harbor. If Burlington wants $100,000 for that purpose she may take it. I will vote for it even upon the recommendation of the Senator alone, if he says that it is needed. We in the West are liberal, and whatever the country demands we are ready to give. We want to make this country what nature designed it to be.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Nature designed that there should be a rapid there and no canal.

Mr. HENDERSON. Nature designed that man should do something himself. I suppose the Senator does not urge that man should be left as nature made him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is your argument, not mine.

Mr. HENDERSON. Nature designed these great rivers for man's use, and I suppose that nature designed even the harbor of Burlington to be made at the expense of the people of this country. This State of the Senator from Vermont is a gallant and glorious little State, but its streams are so small as to have dwarfed a mind that is otherwise as magnanimous as a mind can be, a true mind and one devoted to the best interests of the country; but he seems to be surprised that we who see the broad prairies of the West, who see the magnificent farms of the West twenty-five and thirty thousand acres, which it would be utterly impossible to get the tenth part of between the mountains of his State, have our minds expanded and enlarged, and we look upon a dollar perhaps as he does upon a five-cent piece; or rather he regards a five-cent piece as valuable as we do a dollar. That may be or may not be the case; but I think that he ought not, in the face of this report, to tell us that the young man who made it is too young. We are told in the good book of Job that wisdom belongs not entirely to the old, but sometimes it may be found in the heads of young men.

Mr. BROWN. Let us vote.

Mr. HENDERSON. If there is no difficulty about passing the appropriation, I will stop speaking; but I insist that these obstructions be removed, and that whatever is necessary for that purpose shall be voted. I shall not hesitate to vote the appropriations needed for other sections of the country; I shall not even move to strike out one single appropriation for any harbor in the State of my distinguished friend from Michigan who finds it in his heart to run nearly to a million dollars for the benefit of his own State. This is not for the benefit of Missouri; it is for the benefit of eight or ten of the most magnificent States of the Union. I mean in their natural wealth, the fertility of their soil, and their commercial greatness. Therefore, let us have a liberal appropriation, and let the Senator from Vermont withdraw his proposition for the small amount that he thinks about giving us. The truth of the matter is, that it will lie like your $200,000 appropriation and nothing will be done. We cannot commence work of this character; we cannot blow out rocks at the bottom of a river covered two or three feet with water, or begin to blow them out with your $300,000 appropriation. If we continue that course of policy we need a much larger appropriation. If we build a canal we need all the appropriation that the bill as it passed the House proposed. I say, therefore, whatever may be the recommendation of this board of officers, let us vote the amount that is needed. We will pay it back into the Treasury in two years from the annual profits made from the removal of these obstructions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will not undertake to compare the expansiveness of my mind with that of my friend from Missouri. I shall leave that to others, I have no doubt he has described his own mind correctly; and indeed I have always understood that his observations, if not his mind, were quite expansive. Nor will I undertake to particularly distinguish between my valuation of a sixpence or a five-cent piece and his of a dollar. I can only congratulate the creditors of the State of Missouri in the fact that at least one of her citizens is too liberal not to be willing to pay the dollars that she owes. The people of that State may certainly criticize the conduct of Vermonters in voting away public money when we have been taught that they are somewhat reluctant to vote their own, and even for the payment of their debts!

Now, then, Mr. President, let us return to the subject. I believe it is not Burlington, Vermont, nor the State of Missouri, but it is the simple question of how much money ought to be appropriated now for entering upon a scheme which is not yet entered upon by the Department; because I defy the gentleman to produce any recommendation of the Department for it. It is not in the printed report, nor in the special report, nor in this letter which is written by General Humphreys to one of the Senators, and which is only a concurrence of one engineer in the conclusion of another. I say, in that view of the case, it is unwise and unjust to the other interests of the country to be appropriating in advance heavy sums of money before we know how it is to be spent. This is an appropriation for the current year. There are $200,000 voted already. If we add $300,000 to it, there will be $500,000. The canal cannot be completed this year nor next; it will be the work of years. There are the land proprietors to arrange with, the preliminary arrangements and expenses to be met, the materials and machinery to be got on the ground, and all that. Is $500,000 not a sufficient sum for these preliminary purposes? And then when we get a further report at the next meeting of Congress from the Department showing what has been done with this money and what further is needed, I shall be quite willing to vote it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was not aware that the Senator from Vermont or any of his constituents held any bonds of my State. I think it quite gratuitous in him to make any allusion to the non-payment of interest upon the bonds of Missouri. Up to July, 1861, the State of Missouri never failed to pay every dollar of its interest as it accrued. And if the Senator from Vermont had been in that State since July, 1861, he would not feel it in his heart now, either with an expanded or contracted mind, to make any reflections upon that State.

The condition of Missouri since 1861 has not been such that we could possibly pay interest or principal upon anything. But I can state to the Senator that there is not a dollar of the indebtedness of Missouri that will not be paid; and the Legislature now is making provision for paying every dollar of it with all the interest that we ever agreed to pay, and I can assure him that such will be the case. During the war our citizens were taxed at the rate of thirty dollars a head poll tax in order to sustain the Union and to drive back the hordes of secession and protect ourselves and those who lived north and east of us. I can tell the Senator that if the United States had paid us the money we expended in keeping up a military establishment, not alone for our protection, but to drive back the hordes that came from the southern States, we could to-day pay every dollar of interest that we owe to Vermont creditors or any other eastern creditors or foreign creditors, and pay a large amount of the principal of our debt.

I will state to him that the people of the State of Missouri would not have suffered their credit to be thus tarnished, or ever to have been placed in such a condition as to invite the criticisms of the Senator from Vermont, had it not been for this war. He ought to be a little more charitable to such States as my own and the State of Kentucky and the State of Tennessee, where our citizens have been in the midst of the fiercest civil war, fighting among themselves as well as opposing the foe without, and who were coming upon our southern borders two or three times a year. The Senate of the United States generously and kindly voted the amount that is due us, and the other House has also voted it; and so soon as the accounts can be examined in the Treasury Department and audited, that money will be paid, and I hope then that there will be no longer foundation for such remarks as the Senator has indulged in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am sorry that my friend from Missouri is getting unnecessarily excited. All that I said was merely intended to remind him that a people and a Senator standing in the position that his people and he do could not with very good grace accuse a Vermonter of having too small or too close an idea of money. That is all.

Mr. HENDERSON. I certainly did hope the Senator would not take in the manner he did any reference that I made to that subject; for I have felt, and now feel, that there is no Senator in this body for whom I have a higher regard than the Senator from Vermont; and any remark that I may have made upon that subject was in a jocular tone and style and manner, and I supposed that he at the time took it in that way.

Mr. JOHNSON. The question is whether we shall appropriate the amount proposed now upon the terms which are to be annexed to the appropriation. It has nothing to do, as I understand it, with the conduct of Missouri, nor with what may be the general character of the State of Vermont. It is a simple question, what is right in relation to the country generally, they being all interested in the improvement of the Mississippi. The rapids which the improvement seeks to remove, in whole or in part, are such that for some eighty or ninety days during the season, when the Mississippi can be used at all for transportation, it is impossible to get a cargo and vessel over without lightering, to the very great loss of those who may be concerned along the river in the productions of the country. If, therefore, the facts stated by the two boards were now before us upon a report from the Secretary of War, and he was to recommend this appropriation, I suppose there would be no objection to making it. I do not understand my friend from Vermont or my friend from Michigan as saying that they would oppose it, if that was the manner in which it was presented to us. I understand the appropriation now to be placed upon terms which will bring it precisely into that condition before a dollar of money shall be expended. In the first place there have been surveys made by officers who are supposed to be competent, recommending this improvement; but, in the next place, if those surveys are not brought before us now on the recommendation of the Secretary of War, there is nothing to be done with the appropriation till another board of engineers, to be selected by the Secretary, shall have reported to him upon the subject, and reported some plan by which the improvement can be conducted, and he shall approve of it. It will then be substantially the same thing as if he was now in advance recommending to us an appropriation to carry out a plan of improvement which had met his approbation. It appears to me, therefore, that the objection, if my friend from Vermont will permit me to say so, is an objection which we lawyers are often in the habit of making, rather technical than substantial, rather formal than anything else. As I certainly would vote the appropriation, if the Secretary recommended it upon an examination made by competent men, I shall with the same pleasure vote for this amendment, because I look upon the appropriation as made virtually upon the strength of such a report.

And I need not say, Mr. President, that it is all important to the country at large, not to Iowa, not to the States bordering on the Mississippi, but to the country at large, that the navigation of the western waters should be made as good as it can be made. Nature has placed them there in a condition in which they cannot be at all times used; but she has put it into our power to assist her, if I may be permitted to use the expression, so as to make them navigable at almost all periods of the year; and one of the means by which we are to be united still more strongly together than we would otherwise be, is to improve existing communications for trade and to create those that may not be existing.

Mr. MORRILL. If this were a question, as would seem to be implied in the remarks of the honorable Senator from Missouri, [Mr. HENDERSON,] of the amount that should be appropriated to remove obstructions in the great river to which he refers, I should not feel that I had occasion to say a word; but as there seems to be an implication in the remarks of the honorable Senator that a want of liberality may have influenced the members of the Committee on Commerce in regard to this appropriation, I feel obliged, as a member of the committee, to say a word to disabuse the minds of Senators of any possible misconception on that subject.

If my honorable friend will look at this appropriation bill he will see that here is appropriated about five million dollars for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the United States. If he will glance his eye at this bill he will see that of that $5,000,000 not over $250,000, I think, is appropriated east of the Alleghany mountains, so that it is an appropriation for the rivers and harbors of the West; and if you will look to the construction of the committee you will see that by no possibility could such a bill as that be at this time reported unanimously from the Committee on Commerce if there were any idea of illiberality at all entering into the motives which influenced that committee.

Sir, I trust I have got by that altogether. If I felt that it was possible that I should be liable to be influenced or swayed by such a consideration as that, that I should guide my judgment upon a question of where within the limits of this Republic an appropriation was to be expended, I would not sit on a committee, nor would I vote upon an appropriation, nor would I suffer myself to retain a seat upon this floor. Nor do I really think the honorable Senator believes that any of us is actuated by any such motive; and therefore I may be permitted to say that all such considerations entering into the argument have nothing to do with the merits of the case. They may do well enough to hector my friend from Vermont, who is perhaps a little sharp in making an amendment, but I insist upon it that they have nothing to do with the merits of this case.

During the few years I have been in the Senate I have been so much in the habit of voting appropriations that I do not know that I should hesitate at anything that had the slightest foundation in it as an appropriation for almost any section of the country. I have voted appropriations here to all sorts of enterprises in the last six years, and almost entirely confined to that region of the country. I do not complain of it. I am proud of it, glad of it, and I see in it the prosperity of the whole country. In that prosperity my region of the country advances of course. I account for it in no spirit of illiberality and in no spirit of grasping on the part of the western people. There is a new country just being developed; the course of empire is that way; and therefore appropriations are naturally wanted there. The untold millions of acres of land that my vote has invariably been given for in all those appropriations in that direction, if they were sold, would swell the aggregate to a very great amount. My honorable friend who sits before me [Mr. BROWN] has had an appropriation for a land-grant railroad, in which the alternate sections are taken to the corporators; I do not know what portions of Missouri or the entire West it covers, but it is very great. I do not mention it to complain of it. I am proud of it, glad of it; I have invariably voted for it; but I insist upon it that when an appropriation is to be made there is not to be substituted for argument any appeal or anything like a statement that we are to vote upon the idea that "this is for the West and you must not open your mouths upon the subject." I do not like that. That is not an argument; that is a sort of menace which ought not to be indulged in.

I have no objection to the appropriation of $1,000,000 for the purpose wanted here; I would vote $5,000,000 to-day if it were necessary for that purpose; nor have I an underestimate of the importance of the great river, the "Father of Waters." That is not the difficulty. No such consideration at all entered into the consideration of the committee. They were governed by considerations of altogether a different character. Let me state the precise point. Here we found in this bill an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the improvement of navigation on the Mississippi river at the Des Moines rapids. This same committee recollected that last year we appropriated $200,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi river at the Des Moines rapids. Why this change of phraseology? It implies a change in the nature of the improvement, does it not? Certainly. The next inquiry was, who authorized this change in the improvement? The history of appropriations shows that since 1854 we have been attempting to improve this part of the rapids under the direction of the War Department on a plan which was to blast the rocks from the bed of the river. That is the approved system and the approved plan on which all these appropriations have been made. The Committee on Commerce, being charged with the duty of examining and recommending these appropriations, said at once, "Who has changed this plan, which has been in vogue for the last twelve years, or recommends it?" Upon examining that question we find that nobody has recommended it; that there is no recommendation; that is to say, there is no recommendation which the Committee on Commerce are authorized to say to the Senate amounts to a recommendation. This, then, is an appropriation of $1,000,000 to go into an improvement which has not been authorized, which has not been recommended, and which of itself is a departure from that well-approved plan upon which the Government has been acting for the last twelve years. That is exactly the ground upon which the committee declined to recommend this appropriation.

It will be seen by the report to which reference has been made that the War Department instructed the engineer in charge of the work on the Mississippi river to make an examination of the Des Moines rapids with reference to their improvement. It will be seen that the young officer who has been engaged in that work—and I take no exception on account of his youth or inexperience, for if the War Department saw fit to detail him I think the presumption is that he was competent to his work—recommends a change in the plan of the improvement of the rapids at this particular point on the Mississippi river. Very well. Is it right or is it wrong? If it is right, I am ready to vote the million of money; but who says it is right? My honorable friend from Missouri [Mr. HENDERSON] does not say that. If he will stand up here and in the fervor and zeal with which he goes into this, say "this is right, and I recommend the Senate of the United States to vote for it on the ground that the thing is practicable and feasible and is proper to be done," that is one thing. Then you begin to touch bottom; then you find a basis on which votes can be predicated. But does he say that? Not at all. He argues that the Mississippi river is a vast river; the commerce of the river is very great; you do not comprehend it. That is not necessary. That does not touch the point; that is not an argument resting on the point. The question is, How shall the Mississippi river be improved? Shall it be on the approved plan on which we have been acting for the last ten or twelve years, that is, by deepening the channel, or will you depart from the channel of the river and make an artificial channel? That is not a settled question; that is an open question, and I do not understand the honorable Senator from Missouri to touch it or pretend to argue it; nor do I understand that he has a definite opinion whether that thing is practicable or not.

Mr. HENDERSON. It will be fixed under this amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I shall come to that in a moment. Then we are to appropriate $1,000,000, upon what? Upon a plan on which the Government has not seen fit yet to enter. That is the reason the committee declined to recommend it.

Now, sir, what ought to be done? Wait. I submit, if we act in harmony with all the precedents, if we act in harmony with the ordinary usage on this subject, we must wait until the Government do recommend it, until it is examined by the engineer department and is recommended, and the plans and estimates are submitted. We have a right before we enter upon a scheme involving millions, as this does, to act with reference to the recommendations of the Government and the plans and specifications which are presented. It is said that the chief engineer has approved this new plan. I do not so understand. In a communication to the House of Representatives, under date of February 5, he says:

"Detailed maps, plans, and specifications will be forwarded as soon as the other important duties with which General Wilson is charged will permit."

I am not going to detain the Senate by an argument upon this point. What I mean to say is, that the Committee on Commerce did hesitate to recommend the appropriation of $1,000,000, not because they were not willing to improve the rapids, not because they grudging the appropriation or were illiberal, but because, acting on the precedents, they saw no reason to change the plan for the improvement of that river until the new plan had been submitted to the proper authorities and those authorities had recommended it, and then, in view of those recommendations, the committee might recommend it to the Senate, and the Senate, in view of the plans, specifications, and recommendations, might act intelligently.

With these views, I shall not vote to reduce the sum to $500,000. If the Senate say that the work shall go forward on this plan, which they have not seen, and which they cannot know the details of, then I agree that the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri nearest me [Mr. BROWN] is conclusive on us, and that is, that the estimate of the engineer being that $1,000,000 on this plan can be expended this year, that million ought to be granted now. If you are willing to take a leap in the dark, and are willing to take the recommendation of the engineer for the expenditure of $1,000,000 on this plan, take the whole of it. I shall vote, therefore, for the appropriation as recommended, if it comes to that, for there is no reason to divide it. If you authorize the War Department to embark on this new plan before you see it, before you know what it is, before you have any judgment on it; if those who are most interested in the work will stand up here and say that they know it is right, that they have seen it or inspected it and believe it is right, then go the whole figure, give the million, give what the engineer says he can profitably expend this year.

Of course, I wish to be understood as being in favor of adhering to the report of the committee to strike out this item, and waiting until the authorities having this matter in charge, under the instructions of Congress last year, bring in their plans and their specifications and their recommendations, and you send them to one of your committees having the general subject in charge, and that committee approve the plans and bring them back to the Senate for its judgment, and a report shall be made with an appropriation in harmony with them.

Mr. BROWN. The immediate question now before the Senate is whether this appropriation shall be reduced from $1,000,000 to $300,000. If I understand correctly the action which has been taken by the committee of this body, it has not gone into the question of the propriety of voting $1,000,000 or $300,000, but struck out the whole appropriation upon the technical ground stated by the Senator from Maine. It will be borne in mind, therefore, by the Senate, that when the Senator from Vermont moves this amendment to reduce the amount to $300,000, he does not act as the organ of the committee, he does not speak the sense of the committee; but it is a volunteer motion of his own, predicated upon his own judgment of what may or may not be needed, and not upon any evidence that has come to him from any of the Departments of the Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The sense of the committee was that you should not have anything at all.

Mr. BROWN. That is very true; but that is not the question before the Senate now. The question now is whether it shall be reduced from $1,000,000, which the engineer who has surveyed the work has estimated can be properly applied during one year, to $300,000, that would perhaps be totally insufficient for carrying on the work; and I say on that question the Senator from Vermont, who is so great a stickler for the authority of the Department and for the recommendations of the officers in charge, departs wholly and totally from the only recommendation which is before us, that is the recommendation of the officer who made this survey. If, therefore, we are to act at all; if we are to make an appropriation, I think we should follow the action which has been taken by the House of Representatives and make the appropriation estimated, that is the sum of $1,000,000.

This matter has not only been examined by the committee on the part of the Senate, but it has been examined elsewhere, and examined very thoroughly. It has been reported favorably by the committee of the other House; it has been passed by the House of Representatives, and it is only on the motion of the committee here, predicated upon a technicality, that it is designed to strike out the appropriation. I think the Senator from Maryland has shown very conclusively that all that is demanded by the committee in behalf of the judgment of the Department will be accomplished under the amendment which has been put upon the bill by the Senator from Iowa; that is, it will have first the approval of a board, it will have secondly the approval of the Secretary of War, as to the manner of carrying out this work. The Senator from Vermont seems to ignore altogether the necessity for carrying it forward at the earliest day. If it were a mere harbor appropriation it would matter very little, a harbor in which vessels could go and come irrespective of these obstacles, and in which the appropriation would be merely for some possible benefit; but here is a great river, bearing the greatest commerce in the world, which we all know to be obstructed by an impediment that is causing vast delays every hour, and why shall this thing be delayed for one year longer simply because the committee deem that this technicality has not been conformed to?

However, sir, I will not go into the question of liberality. I will leave Senators to settle that with their own consciences. I have no doubt the Senator from Vermont deals with this question conscientiously and as he believes his duty requires of him to do, and I have nothing to say against any action he may take. I rose simply to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the question now is on the reduction of the amount from $1,000,000 to $300,000, and that on that question the Senator from Vermont does not represent any authoritative action of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is entirely true, sir. The authoritative action of the committee was to strike out the appropriation altogether, and the main question on this amendment is on striking it out now, because after the amendment shall have been amended the resulting question will be on striking out the whole clause. We are merely attempting to perfect the clause, if it is to stand, as well as may be; but the question will be finally whether all we have put in now shall not be stricken out, so as to leave it as the committee recommended it should be left, with no appropriation at all. I think, therefore, I have a right, if I can give good reasons for it, to make this clause which it is proposed to strike out as unobjectionable as possible, lest if it stand it might bring us into difficulty.

Now, the question is what ought to be done, and that is the only question there is about it. The War Department have not recommended this appropriation. The previous engineers have recommended other ways of expending the money there than this canal; they recommended the improvement of the channel, and a great many thousand dollars have been expended in the improvement of the channel. Now, then, comes an engineer fresh from the war who, after looking it over one summer, decides that all that is wrong, and that an entirely new method of procedure ought to be adopted; and if it is adopted, he thinks $1,000,000, including the $200,000 already appropriated which would then leave the appropriation only $800,000, can be used this year. The House of Representatives has put in $200,000 more, in that view, than would be required. If we vote this $1,000,000, we vote it on the idea that a canal is the work to be constructed; but it remains to be determined whether a canal is the work to be constructed or not. The question, therefore, is whether it is not wisest, inasmuch as we determine nothing about the nature and character of this work, to keep these appropriations down so that we shall not overload the bill in such a way as to defeat all of them. That is the consideration which appeals to us.

Mr. CHANDLER. If my friend from Vermont will give way, I desire to interpose a motion that at five o'clock to-day the Senate take a recess until half past seven.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to prolong this discussion, and I should have said no more but in reply to the observations of my friend, from Missouri, which were directed principally and personally to me. I do not claim that the Senate ought to adopt this amendment because I move it. I must yield the force of the argument to him on that; but I claim that if the Senate intend to let this clause stand at all, as my friend from Maine has demonstrated they ought not, the sum to be expended for this year ought to be reduced to $500,000, and I believe that is substantially satisfactory to one of the Senators from Iowa, who lives nearest to the point in question.

Mr. GRIMES. There is one thing, I think, upon which we all agree, and that is, that these rapids should be improved in some way or other. If there be a proposition contained in this bill to improve any stream or any harbor that has merit this is the one. I think that is confessedly the opinion of this body, and of all who know anything about the subject. Now, I do not think that it is wise to either ask for more than we can use or for so much as to repel some friends of the proposition from voting for it; and I therefore propose to the Senator from Vermont that he suffer his amendment to read $500,000, instead of $300,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It makes it $500,000, because it is additional to $200,000 previously appropriated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MORRILL. As I understand the proposition of the Senator from Vermont, it is to reduce the appropriation from $1,000,000 to $300,000, exclusive of the $200,000 already appropriated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly; it leaves $500,000 for the use of the work.

Mr. BROWN. This has nothing to do with the amount appropriated last year.

Mr. MORRILL. So I see; so that if this amendment of the honorable Senator from Vermont be agreed to we shall appropriate $500,000. That is the way it will be. I wanted the Senate to understand that voting for the proposition of the Senator from Vermont is to vote $500,000 to this work.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What became of the motion of the Senator from Iowa to reduce the amount to $500,000?

Mr. GRIMES. I cannot make that motion till after this is put.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I intend to support that proposition. I think $500,000 is enough, perhaps, to appropriate at this time; but an appropriation of $300,000 is entirely insufficient. I am a friend of this measure, if we have a bill of this sort, and therefore I desire to vote for the proposition of the Senator from Iowa, and I shall vote against this.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand the Senator from Indiana does not desire to vote for the proposition of the Senator from Iowa; for, as I understand him, he desires to vote $500,000 to this purpose.

Mr. BROWN. In addition to what has already been voted.

Mr. MORRILL. But I understand the honorable Senator to say that he desires to vote for $500,000. That is the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Allow me to state exactly what I desire. I understand that there are $200,000 now at the control of the War Department for this purpose, and this bill proposes a million more.

Mr. GRIMES. I wish at this point to interpose an inquiry to the Senator from Vermont. Have not the expenses of the survey that has been prosecuted during the last season been paid out of the money that was appropriated a year ago?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not at all, because there was a special appropriation for that.

Mr. MORRILL. By reference to the report of the Secretary of War, my friend from Iowa will see that $200,000 unexpended is returned as to the credit of this work. If, therefore, the Senator from Indiana supports the motion of the Senator from Iowa, he will be voting $700,000—only $300,000 less than the original proposition of the House.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The language of the bill is supposed to make an appropriation now of $1,000,000; that is the way it reads. I am in favor of appropriating $500,000. That will be an appropriation by Congress indicating to the Department that this improvement shall be made upon some substantial and large scale corresponding with the ends to be accomplished. I shall support that motion, and not the present one.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. In my judgment if we reduce this appropriation according to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont we just fritter away the amount of money we appropriate; and we not only fritter away the money, but we delay by at least twelve months the improvement of that river, at a cost to the people living upon it of at least $250,000 a year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 11, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Edmunds, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, and Sumner—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Cattell, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fogg, Fowler, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, Patterson, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Stewart, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—31.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Foster, Gutarie, Howard, Nye, Poland, Riddle, and Van Winkle—10.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GRIMES. I now move to amend the clause by reducing the sum appropriated from $1,000,000 to $500,000, as I indicated before that I would do.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 23, noes not counted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move further to amend the clause by striking out the word "on" in the one hundred and fifty-ninth line, and inserting "of." It has been suggested in debate that the word "on" is a typographical error. If so, it should certainly be corrected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the Committee on Commerce, to strike out the clause as amended.

The motion to strike out was not agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to strike out the following clause from lines one hundred and seventy-two to one hundred and eighty-three of section one:

For constructing works and improving entrance into the harbor of Michigan city, Indiana, the sum of $75,000 was appropriated by the act of June 23, 1860. Said amount shall be paid to the Michigan City Harbor Company: Provided, That it shall be first shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War that the sum of $100,000 has been expended by the said Michigan City Harbor Company in the construction of a safe and convenient harbor at that place: And provided, That the passage of vessels to and from said harbor shall be free, and not subject to toll or charge.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am authorized to modify the amendment of the committee by proposing to strike out the words just read and to substitute for them the following, which is to be the second section of the bill:

And be it further enacted, That the appropriation of $75,000 for constructing works and improving the entrance into the harbor of Michigan city, Indiana, made in and by the act approved June 23, 1860, shall be expended for the purpose aforesaid upon the terms and in the manner hereinafter provided for other appropriations under this act: Provided, That it shall be first shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War that the sum of $100,000 has been expended by the Michigan City Harbor Company in the construction of a safe and commodious harbor at that place: And provided, That the passage of vessels to and from said harbor shall be free, and not subject to toll or charge.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not see the difference between what is to be inserted and what is to be stricken out.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is a difference, and the amendment in this shape is satisfactory to all parties. The money was to be paid to the Michigan City Harbor Company by the bill. This amendment provides for its expenditure under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, to make the bill correspond, I move to strike out the enacting clause of the second section of the bill as it came from the House, and also the word "that," and to insert "and" at the end of line one, section two.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

The next amendment was in section five, after "and" in line six to insert "to continue the survey of," and after "river" in line seven to insert "in accordance with the recommendation of General J. H. Wilson in his report of January 12, 1867," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause a continuance of examinations or surveys, or both, at the following points, namely: of the Mississippi river, above the Falls of Saint Anthony and between the Falls of Saint Anthony and Rock Island rapids; of the Wisconsin river, and to continue the survey of the Illinois river, in accordance with the recommendation of General J. H. Wilson, in his report of January 12, 1867. And he is also directed to cause plans and estimates to be made of the most practicable and effective mode of improving the harbor of Galveston, Texas, and of erecting suitable break-water at that point.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Committee on Commerce have directed me to offer the following amendment, to come in in section four, line twelve:

At Block Island, in the State of Rhode Island, and the reefs in Lake Michigan, near the harbor of Racine, Wisconsin, with a view to a light-house and break-water thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. The committee have instructed me to move an amendment to come in at the end of section four, which is the section directing examinations and surveys to be made. I move to add to that section "and the Potomac river in the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I am instructed to move still further to amend the same section by adding after the words "Cape Elizabeth" in line ten the words "the Union river and the Gut opposite the city of Bath."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to amend the fourth section by inserting after the word "namely" in line three the words "at the harbor of San Francisco, California, with a view to the removal of Blossom Rock, if the same shall be found necessary and essential to commerce."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Committee on Commerce have directed me to offer the following amendment, to come in after line one hundred and sixty-seven of section one:

For building and operating one dredge and snag-boat on the Wisconsin river, $40,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was unfortunately not present when the committee agreed to that amendment, and I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether there is any recommendations from the War Department for it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir, there is. I have it here:

"General Warten submits an estimate for employing a dredging-boat on this river to ascertain how far it is practicable to improve the stream by this plan. Its bars are formed of moving sand, like those of the upper Mississippi described in his report.

"For dredge and snag-boat, $25,000.

"Expense of operating one year, $15,000.

"Total first year, $40,000."

Again, the Department says:

"The views and recommendations of General Warten are concurred in by this Department."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the chairman be good enough to tell the Senate what were the considerations which prevented this being included in the bill originally?

Mr. CHANDLER. I lost the papers which were handed to me by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. Howe.] That was the way it happened.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I offer this amendment to come in after line one hundred and seventy-one of section one:

To improve the navigation of the Willamette river, Oregon, below the city of Portland, $30,000.

I move this amendment after consultation with the Committee on Commerce and without any objection on their part; and it is in accordance with estimates submitted by the War Department. I hope there will be no objection to it. It is a very small appropriation, and if inserted will be the only one in the bill for the Pacific coast.

Mr. CHANDLER. Permit me to inquire of the Senator whether he has the recommendation of the War Department?

Mr. SHERMAN. Does it come from a committee? If not, it is not in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have already stated that the committee have agreed to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. What committee?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Committee on Commerce. I have consulted the members of this committee, and they have agreed that I might offer it. I do not see any reason why this item should be left out of the bill. It is a very small appropriation, and it is found in the estimates of the War Department. There is the same reason for making this appropriation that there is for making the others.

Mr. NESMITH. I desire to state in connection with this subject that our entire State has had but $15,000 appropriated for these improvements. At the last session $15,000 was appropriated for the purpose of improving the navigation of the upper Columbia river, which is on our northern border. We now ask $30,000 for the improvement of the Willamette river; and the report of the Engineer Bureau, which is before me, shows that in the last two years the city of Portland has expended $60,000 in building a snag-boat, dredger, &c., and in improving the river. The city has the necessary boats, which can be loaned to the Government, and all we ask is this small appropriation to carry on the work. An immense commerce passes over this river. It is the great avenue of the commerce of the State of Oregon, eastern Washington, Idaho, and a large portion of western Montana.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "below the city of Portland," if those are the words indicating the particular part of the river where the money is to be expended. I fail to find in the report of the War Department any distinction between one part of the river and another; and I think it ought to be left to the Department and the engineers to decide where this money ought to be expended. The introduction into the amendment of the particular part of the river is quite unusual and does not seem to be warranted by anything that we have from the Department.

Mr. NESMITH. I will state that no attempt has been made to improve the navigation of the river at any other point than that specified; but, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the proposed modification.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will state for the information of the Senator from Vermont that Portland is the head of navigation of the Willamette river for ocean steamships and sailing vessels, and that above the city of Portland the river is only navigable in the summer time for boats of very light draft; and twelve miles above the city of Portland are the falls of the Willamette: so that this appropriation ought to be made for the improvement of the river below the city of Portland, the object being to improve the river so that ocean steamships may not be obstructed. The city of Portland is located twelve miles up the Willamette river from the Columbia, and there is a bar between the city and the Columbia river that obstructs to some extent the navigation for ocean steamships. When the water is low there is difficulty in crossing that bar. The city of Portland has expended $60,000 of its own money, has constructed a dredging-machine, and last year $15,000 was appropriated for the purpose, and this is required to complete the work.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The explanation is satisfactory to me, but it did not appear by the papers. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 912) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 912) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from their third amendment.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out all of said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following as a new section to come in at the end of the bill:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That no part of the moneys appropriated by this or any other act shall be applied to the pay or subsistence of any cadet from any State declared to be in rebellion against the Government of the United States appointed after the first day of January, 1867, until such State shall have been restored to its original relations to the Union. And the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN SHERMAN,
IRA HARRIS,
J. R. DOOLITTLE,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

R. P. SPALDING,
JOHN A. KASSON,
C. A. ELDRIDGE,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to know why the third amendment of the Senate is stricken from the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. There were only two questions in controversy between the two Houses—the first and third amendments of the Senate. The first amendment was one striking out certain provisos in the bill. The House of Representatives now withdraw their objection to striking them out, we inserting the body of the first proviso in a new section, declaring that no money should be paid for the support of cadets appointed from the rebel States after the 1st of January, 1867. In regard to the third amendment, which was inserted on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, both the House and Senate conferees thought it was not necessary after an examination of the subject. The House refused to concur in that amendment, and we yielded. That amendment provided that the chaplain should be relieved from certain duties. That can be done now without any law, and it is unusual to prescribe rules and regulations for the government of the Academy by a law. The Senator from New York, [Mr. HARRIS,] who is very familiar with the working of the Academy, gave us his judgment that it was not at all necessary. Then the last clause of the amendment seemed to restrict the power of the military authorities over parades. We thought it unwise to do so; at any rate, the House refused to concur in that amendment, and the Senate conferees agreed to recede from it.

Mr. WILSON. I suppose we must acquiesce in this decision, but I think it is a great mistake. I have no doubt on that point. Our amendment was recommended by the Board of Visitors. I think it is right, and it is the only way we shall ever reach it. The management of West Point has not been such as to satisfy the country in that particular. I am sorry that the committee have agreed to recede from that amendment, but I shall not make a contest on it.

The report was concurred in.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a copy of a letter of the 12th instant, addressed to him by his Excellency Lucius Fairchild, Governor of the State of Wisconsin, and of the memorial to Congress concerning the Paris Exposition, adopted by the Legislature of the State during the present session; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 590) for the relief of William Mann and Jacob Senneff;

A bill (H. R. No. 811) for the relief of certain drafted men; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1188) for the relief of James Tellow.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. At five o'clock the doors were reopened, and the Senate took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

ADJUSTMENT OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate take up Senate bill No. 578, a bill reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims. It will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can entertain the motion only by unanimous consent, another subject being before the Senate.

Mr. RAMSEY. What becomes of the river and harbor bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair states that that is before the Senate, and no other motion can be entertained unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. RAMSEY. I desire to move an amendment to that bill predicated upon the estimates of the War Office, with the consent of the chairman and of a majority of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Minnesota to give way for a moment until I can get this bill passed. The other can be passed over informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from New York can be entertained only by unanimous consent. No objection being made, the bill before the Senate will be laid aside informally by common consent, and the bill indicated by the Senator from New York be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 578) to extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri, and for other purposes." It proposes to extend the provisions of the act for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri, and for other purposes, approved June 22, 1860, for a period of three years from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before the passage of the bill, I should like to hear the provisions of the bill which it proposes to continue in force for three years read.

Mr. HARRIS. I can state them in a moment, so that the Senator from Missouri will be satisfied. In 1860 an act was passed authorizing persons who claimed lands in two or three States, mentioned in this bill, to produce the evidence of their claims before the land officers of the district, produce the proof, and that proof was to be reported by those land officers to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office was to report it to Congress. It was to come before Congress. It allows proof of these claims under foreign grants before the territory was ceded to the United States to be presented. This act was passed in 1860. Certain individuals prepared their proof, but were interrupted in producing it before the Commissioner of the Land Office by the rebellion. This bill extends the provisions of that act, which was for five years, three years to enable them to complete their proofs. That is the whole of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. VAN WINKLE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Annie E. Dixon, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 630) granting a pension to Annie E. Dixon.

The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. ANTHONY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 182) for printing additional copies of the Appendix to the Diplomatic Correspondence of 1865; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1051.

Mr. RAMSEY. I think we had better proceed with the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That bill is before the Senate.

Mr. RAMSEY. I wish to move an amendment to that bill.

Mr. SUMNER. Allow me one moment.

Mr. RAMSEY. There are several other gentlemen who desire to call up bills, and I think we had better proceed with the important bill that is regularly before the Senate.

Mr. SUMNER. Give me one minute.

Mr. RAMSEY. Here are two other gentlemen on my right who want a minute also.

Mr. SUMNER. Just a minute.

Mr. RAMSEY. I would if it were possible.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will ask the Senator from Minnesota to allow me to call up a bill for the relief of a naval officer, which cannot become a law at this session unless it is passed to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope we may have ten minutes or so to dispose of some small matters.

Mr. CHANDLER. There are at least twenty bills that gentlemen want to dispose of, and I fear we shall be very late in getting through with this.

Mr. SUMNER. Let us have ten minutes.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should be most happy to accommodate the Senator, but if I yield to him I shall be obliged to yield to a dozen more.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me for the purpose I have indicated?

Mr. RAMSEY. This bill is in the charge of the Senator from Michigan. It is the river and harbor bill. I should be very happy to accommodate the Senator, but there are two gentlemen on my right and three on my left who are making the same appeal.

Mr. SUMNER. If we have ten minutes I think we could pass as many bills almost.

Mr. RAMSEY. We shall get through with this bill, I imagine, in a short time, and then there will be an opportunity for passing all these miscellaneous bills.

Mr. CHANDLER. No; I shall then want to go on with another bill.

Mr. RAMSEY. I am an innocent party between the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, who has charge of the river and harbor bill, and these other gentlemen who are making appeals to me. I have nothing to say about it. I should be glad to accommodate them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can entertain no motion in regard to any other bill except by common consent.

Mr. WILLEY. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Commerce to allow me to bring up a little bill that will take but a moment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should be most happy to accommodate all these gentlemen; but really there are so many of them that if I give way at all, I shall have to give way in every case; and I insist on going on with the bill. I regret it exceedingly; but I cannot possibly give way in all cases.

Mr. RAMSEY. I have sent an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will have it read the moment debate on these incidental questions ceases. The bill (H. R. No. 1154) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes, is before the Senate as in the Committee of the Whole, and the Senator from Minnesota proposes to amend the bill by inserting on page 8, after line one hundred and seventy-one, the following:

For removing snags and boulders throughout the Minnesota river, $37,500.

Mr. RAMSEY. I will simply state that an estimate for this sum for this purpose was submitted by the War Department, predicated upon the survey of General Warren of that river, and that I have the assent of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, through its chairman and a majority of its members, to offer this amendment. The river Minnesota has never heretofore had any money appropriated to its improvement. It is a river of about three hundred miles of navigation, draining a country about as large as the State of Indiana, and one of the most fruitful countries in the Northwest—an immense wheat-producing region. It is, of course, the interest of the people of the East who consume this wheat, as well as of the farmers who produce it, that its transportation should be made as cheap as possible. The cost of transportation is an immense item with us, and the wheat that is raised with great labor and expense yields a mere trifle to the producer when it reaches a market after the cost of transportation is paid. I hope the Senate will consent to this amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask the Senator if there is any report from the Secretary of War approving it?

Mr. RAMSEY. Yes, sir; it is estimated for.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to hear the amendment read again.

The Secretary read it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to inquire if that is recommended by the Secretary of War or the engineer department.

Mr. RAMSEY. Yes, sir; as I understand, this report of General Humphreys is substantially indorsed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There are no recommendations there.

Mr. RAMSEY. Yes, sir; on page 8 of the report of General Warren of his survey of the Upper Mississippi and Minnesota rivers, there is an estimate of $37,500 for removing the snags, boulders, &c., throughout that river.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Who is that from?

Mr. RAMSEY. General Humphreys.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is no estimate, no recommendation.

Mr. RAMSEY. He recommends it certainly.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I understand that the Secretary of War merely sends in these as reports made by the officers, with no recommendation.

Mr. RAMSEY. All these recommendations of General Warren are indorsed by General Humphreys. There are many others; but I have very modestly refused to present any but this one. I will state to the Senator that although this is the first appropriation of one dollar, a survey was generously ordered by the last Congress, and a small amount of money appropriated for a survey of the Mississippi river above the upper rapids and the Minnesota river, a navigation of eight hundred miles. Although a million people live upon those waters and the trade of that amount of people will be accommodated by this improvement, not one dollar had before been appropriated even for a survey. The survey was as thoroughly made as could be made by that efficient, energetic, and able officer, General G. K. Warren, in the short time allowed, from August to the close of the season of navigation; and as the consequence of that report we come here and ask for this appropriation. All we get by this bill is $96,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi above the upper or Rock Island rapids. You are appropriating $500,000 here for the lower rapids and hundreds of thousands for points below. Almost all the trade that makes the rapids and its navigation important, that makes all the navigation of the lower river valuable, is the trade we send down there, the trade gathered out of this Minnesota river that courses through Minnesota from its eastern border to the west, and drains even the Territory of Dakota and the whole of western Minnesota. All we get in this bill for all that immense region, with a thousand miles of the Mississippi river within the State of Minnesota is $96,000; and now I ask $37,500 for the Minnesota river. You have given to some States almost a million dollars. It is true that we are a young State, and comparatively a small State; but I advise Senators that we are growing very rapidly. We added one hundred thousand to our population last year by immigration: our growth is very great; and it would be proper to anticipate the necessity for this improvement, even if it were not immediately wanted; but it is wanted now. I trust the Senate will consent, inasmuch as the committee agreed to this, to allow this small appropriation to go in the bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What committee have agreed to it?

Mr. RAMSEY. The Committee on Commerce—a majority of the committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Has it been considered by the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. RAMSEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESSENDEN. And recommended by that committee?

Mr. RAMSEY. Its chairman tells me so. After you appropriate this $37,000, you have only given us $130,000, with a thousand miles of river in our borders. And do you ever hope to develop the country unless you give some money for the improvement of navigation?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wanted to know if it came from a committee?

Mr. RAMSEY. I am informed by the Senator from Michigan that it does come from the Committee on Commerce; and with their consent I move it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to ask my friend from Minnesota in what way this money is to be expended? It seems to be for removing snags and boulders from the Minnesota river. I suppose it would be necessary to have a snag-boat in order to accomplish the purpose.

Mr. RAMSEY. There is a provision in the bill as it stands appropriating $96,000 for snag-boats upon the Upper Mississippi river, which can be used upon the Minnesota river.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not unfriendly to the amendment. My reason for speaking of it was that it struck me the amount was too small to accomplish the purpose.

Mr. RAMSEY. It is the amount estimated for by the Engineer of the War Office.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not unfriendly to it, but friendly.

Mr. RAMSEY. So I understand the Senator.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. In line fifty-seven of section one after the word "Sandusky" I move to insert "harbor, bay, and;" so that it will read:

For improvement of Sandusky harbor, bay, and river, from Frémont to Lake Erie, in Ohio, $20,000.

They are all connected together. It is a mere verbal amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move to amend the bill by inserting after line one hundred and seventy-one of section one, on page 8, the following:

For improvement of Providence river, Rhode Island, off Pawtucket bar and at the Crook, $25,000.

For improvement of the Pawtucket river, Rhode Island, $17,000.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he has a recommendation from the engineer department for that appropriation.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The recommendation I hold in my hand is from the Coast Survey and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CHANDLER. We have thus far taken no recommendations except from the engineer department of the War Office.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It comes within the rule, whether it comes from the one Department or the other.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The Senator from Maine tells me that the amendment is within the rule, whether the recommendation comes from the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Treasury. The recommendations are full and ample. The work is undoubtedly necessary.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish to inquire whether this amendment has the assent of the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It has not.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. As I understand, it cannot be offered without the approbation of that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand such to be the rule. Amendments to an appropriation bill involving an increased expenditure cannot be offered without the recommendation of some committee or of the head of some Department. The Chair thinks that the rule goes so far, but not exclusively in favor of one committee.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes six—

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Let me state once more to the Senate that I hold in my hand the recommendation of this appropriation by the Coast Survey and the Secretary of the Treasury. Upon the petition of very many of the principal inhabitants of that section soliciting the attention of the Government to this important matter, an officer of the Coast Survey was stationed there, and he has reported favorably. The Superintendent in charge of the Coast Survey recommends Congress to assent to that report, and the Secretary of the Treasury unites in that recommendation.

There can be no delay. Obstructions exist and those obstructions are accumulating. Which, then, is the proper Department from which to obtain the most perfect report. Is it the War Department or that Department that takes cognizance of the commercial affairs of the country. How long is it since the Committee on Commerce held this close alliance with the War Department. The object of a report from the War Department is to see that no greater appropriation is made upon works that are feasible, and for the thorough performance of the work. The policy of the work belongs to Congress, and Congress should act upon the report from that Department that is established to represent the commercial affairs of the country and to facilitate commerce. Here, then, you have a report from that Department favoring the policy of this work, and with it comes a detailed report more perfect than any engineer's report would be likely to be. I have myself examined that report and I speak from knowledge.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will ask the Senator if this amendment is proposed by the committee?

Mr. SPRAGUE. I understood that I had the assent of the Committee on Commerce to move the amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If it comes from the Committee, I have no objection to it; but if it does not, I object to it.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The only difference is this: the chairman suggested that it should be reported favorably from the Secretary of War. It was not understood by those who had the matter in charge that it should go to the Secretary of War for his approval. It therefore went to the Secretary of the Treasury, and it has passed through both the Treasury Department and the Coast Survey Office.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is a question of order that I raise, whether it is reported from the committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir, it is not reported from the committee. It has not the sanction of the committee. The recommendation comes from the wrong source. It is reported from the Coast Survey instead of the War Department. The committee have recommended no appropriations that were not recommended by the engineer department of the War Office, and this came through the wrong channel, I am sorry to say. I should have been glad if it were otherwise; but as it stands it is entirely outside of the action thus far of the committee.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I am just as sure as that I stand here that had this matter been presented to the Committee on Commerce they would have sanctioned it, coming as it does from the Secretary of the Treasury and from the Coast Survey. It was simply an error on the part of those who had the matter in charge in sending it to the Secretary of the Treasury instead of the Secretary of War. In fact I did not know myself what course to pursue, and was surprised when I was informed that it should go to the Secretary of War.

It is true that this is a river the head of which is in a State with a small population; but that State pays one fortieth part of the revenue of the country, when you consider the sums her citizens pay in their own State, in other States where their business operations are carried on, and by the consumption of articles imported, which pay imposts. Rhode Island is not in the habit of asking of Congress or of the General Government appropriations. I know of few in my experience. This is one of a few that I have ever asked for. The people of that State generally pay for such improvements themselves. Providence city has expended large sums in this behalf, and they would be willing to do so in this case perhaps; but the commerce of the country entering that river, distributing its supplies to almost every State in New England, at any rate as much in Massachusetts as in Rhode Island, as much almost in Connecticut as in Rhode Island, and who now asks that this improvement shall be made.

Mr. President, if this bill means anything, it means that we are to improve the rivers and harbors of the country, and so long as the proposition that I have offered has been carefully and thoroughly investigated, it seems to me whether it is presented with the sanction of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Treasury makes but little or no difference. It has been well considered. The improvement is necessary. The commerce, not of one State, but of six States is dependent upon the removal of obstructions which through sand-bars and otherwise fill up the river and impede commerce. Sir, there is no appropriation in this bill more important to the West and to the East than the one I now advocate. Examine for yourselves the western productions entering this country. Indeed I hardly know of one that is half as important as the one I now urge upon the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that he place these two items in section four for investigation and for estimate from the proper Department. It is very possible that the estimates from the Coast Survey may be just as reliable as those from the War Department. We might by law place these expenditures under the charge of the Secretary of the Treasury if we saw fit to do so, but we have placed them under the charge of the Secretary of War, and we have thus far received no estimates or surveys and acted upon none except through the War Office; and unless the Senate see fit to transfer these appropriations to the Secretary of the Treasury, we must continue to be governed by the estimates from the War Office. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that he place those two rivers in section four for estimates and surveys through the proper channels, and then in another year we can act upon them in accordance with the rules of the Senate and House. If these appropriations were put on here they would be stricken off in the House. I hope the Senator will accept my suggestion and place them in section four.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to inquire whether this motion of the honorable Senator from Rhode Island is not entirely in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair it is, clearly.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then I would inquire what difference it makes whether the recommendation comes from the one department or the other? Here, on the one hand, is a young engineer, fresh from West Point, who examines a western river and makes estimates which he sends to the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of War sends those estimates in a lump to Congress without adding his own recommendation in any shape or form. I do not understand from anything I have heard in the debate, or anything I have seen, that there has been a single one of these estimates, so called, made by the engineer department that has been made the foundation of a recommendation by the Secretary of War himself. If I am in error about this the Senator from Michigan will correct me.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Secretary of War has sent in as his own, adopted by him, the report of the engineer-in-chief.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Exactly; but where is his recommendation that these appropriations be made?

Mr. CHANDLER. He simply adopts the recommendation of the engineer.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Adopts them by having them printed and sent to Congress as the report of the engineer department, without saying one single word whether he approves it or not, as I understand. If I am in error in this, let the Senator show me the part or point of the report of the Secretary of War in which he recommends these appropriations in any other wise than by sending them in a lump to Congress as estimates by the engineer department. The amount of it is he does not know anything about them. All he knows is precisely what is reported to him, and he does not pass his own judgment upon it in any shape or form. Understand me: I do not object to it on that account, not in the slightest degree. If there is any deficiency there, it has been made up by the examination of the committee who do recommend the appropriations, which brings them within the rule. Without the recommendation of the committee they would not come within the rule.

Now, here is an eastern river, which has been thoroughly examined by the Coast Survey. Everybody knows the carefulness with which they make their examinations; everybody knows the skill with which those examinations are conducted; everybody knows how reliable those examinations are in all particulars. That report, having been made to the Treasury Department, the Secretary of the Treasury specifically recommends these appropriations. Now, I should like to know why this estimate does not stand just as well as if it came from a young engineer who has just gone on and made his estimates, and why it is not entitled to as much consideration? Senators say it does not come from the proper Department. The law does not place any of this work under any particular Department except as appropriations have been made and the War Department has been authorized to expend the money.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let us vote upon it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well; if the amendment of my friend from Rhode Island is to be voted on and agreed to, I have nothing further to say. I do not talk for the sake of talking.

Mr. CHANDLER. As no quorum was shown on the last vote, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment, in order to show that there is a quorum present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No vote disclosing the want of a quorum has been taken. The vote on the amendment was counted on one side and not on the other.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I will ask for another division.

The question being again put, the amendment was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes twenty-two, noes not counted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill on page 4, by striking out lines seventy-five and seventy-six of section one, in the following words:

For improving harbor of Lac la Belle, Lake Superior, $46,000.

I am reluctant, of course, to make a motion of this description against the wishes of my distinguished friend, the chairman of the committee, who represents the State in which this appropriation is to be expended; but the facts compel me, acting upon a sense of duty, to make the motion and to state the circumstances of the case to the Senate. It involves an expenditure of $100,000 or so, which is of course a mere bagatelle; but it may be worth saving.

The Lac la Belle Harbor Improvement Company is a corporation established under the laws of Michigan, and by the laws of Michigan, which I have at my desk, and is entitled to charge tolls for the passage of vessels through its canal, excepting the public vessels of the United States. This Lac la Belle Harbor Improvement Company is a corporation authorized by the laws of Michigan to build a canal from Lake Superior to Lac la Belle, which is a small lake or pond about three fourths of a mile from the shore of Lake Superior inland to the eastward of Keweenaw Point. The land between those two points is a level sand plain, only elevated six feet above the level of Lake Superior. The purpose of this corporation is to build this canal, making profits from its tolls, and opening this little inland lake as a harbor of refuge for vessels, and opening certain mines in the mineral region of that section of the State. On the 3d of July, 1866, this Congress granted to the State of Michigan, for the benefit of this particular work, one hundred thousand acres of the public lands in the vicinity of that lake, excluding the mineral lands that had then been designated as such, but including all that had not then been designated as mineral lands. The report of the engineers upon this subject is as follows:

"Improvement of the harbor of Lac la Belle, Lake Superior.—This is a small inland lake, about two miles in length, half a mile wide, and thirty feet deep, distant about three quarters of a mile from Lake Superior, and debouching on the south side of Keweenaw Point. A canal to unite this with Lake Superior has been in progress for two years past, the entrance into the latter being extended by carrying out piers to make the opening permanent. Great difficulty has been experienced in making the sides of the cut."

I beg Senators to notice the language, "the sides of the cut," not the piers or the harbor in the lake at all, but the sides of this identical canal, which is private property—

"permanent, in consequence of the character of the soil, which is light shifting sand, and this difficulty was increased by piling a large part of the excavated material on the sides of the canal."

"The greatest height of the land through which the cut passes does not exceed six feet above the surface of the lake. In August last the canal had been cut through and piers had been carried into Lake Superior twelve feet wide, four hundred and forty feet long on the south side, and two hundred and twenty seven feet on the north side of the cut; the least depth of water in the cut being eight and a half feet. It was proposed to prolong the piers until that on the south side should be six hundred and thirty-six feet, and on the north side six hundred feet long, which would bring them into sixteen feet water. A law of Congress, approved July 3, 1866, granted to the State of Michigan one hundred thousand acres of land to aid in the construction of this canal, the dimensions to be at least one hundred feet wide at the top, seventy-five feet wide at the bottom, and to have a depth of water through the entire length of at least twelve feet. This will, it is thought, be sufficient for the commerce of the place. It is doubted, however, whether these dimensions can be preserved without further protection to the banks of the canal, which will be constantly abraded by the motion of the water caused by the waves of Lake Superior and the passage of vessels through the cut. This protection may be afforded by a double row of sheet-piling on both sides of the canal, driven at the present water's edge—the prism of sand to be dredged out. In case no further donation of lands is granted, the following amounts will be required for this purpose: amount of appropriation at last session of Congress, 1866, $92,000; estimate for permanent completion of work, $92,000; amount required for next fiscal year, $46,000.

Now, upon that the House bill has inserted an appropriation of $46,000 to go into the pockets of this canal company in building the identical canal that they have got one hundred thousand acres of land already granted to them to build, and in respect to which they are entitled to charge the whole commerce of the lakes tolls for its passage into that lake. I think I am safe in saying this is the first instance in the history of the country when public money has been devoted to the private uses of a private corporation.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is under a misapprehension all the way through from beginning to end. In the first place, up to this date not one single farthing has been expended upon the harbors of Lake Superior, nor is there a harbor on Lake Superior at all. The whole coast of Lake Superior is open to the storms from the northeast, the north, and very much exposed even from the northwest, and there is no harbor on all the American coast of Lake Superior, even of refuge in case of a storm. Keweenaw Point extends a long distance down into Lake Superior. About twelve miles from the point is a little lake called Lac la Belle, about two miles in length and about half a mile in breadth, with very deep water—a harbor large enough to protect all the fleets of all the lakes. A year ago one hundred thousand acres of land were granted to the State of Michigan to open a canal of about half a mile from the lake into this Lac la Belle. That canal has been made, and steamboats of the largest class now pass in to Lac la Belle. As the Senator says, it is not yet finished; but it is to-day a safe and secure harbor of refuge. It is about equidistant from Marquette, Eagle Harbor, Eagle river, Ontonagon, and all the principal points on that lake; and here you get by this point of land—I will have the map here in a moment; I have sent for it—a safe harbor, if you can enter into it; that is, you must get in through this canal into the harbor, or it is no harbor at all, as a matter of course.

I have now got the map. [Exhibiting it to the Senate.] Here is Keweenaw Point, extending off into the lake, as every Senator can see, and twelve miles inside this point is Lac la Belle, and here is a harbor of refuge, as you will see, protecting the whole of Lake Superior, commenced last year under an appropriation of one hundred thousand acres of land from the Government of the United States. They have dug that canal; it is not quite finished; and now the War Department recommends an appropriation of $46,000 to make that a perfect and safe harbor.

Mr. President, if there is a single appropriation in this whole bill that ought not to be stricken out it is for that harbor there. It is the only harbor of refuge there is on Lake Superior to-day. True, it is not a place of large commerce, but there are mines around it, and it is springing up to be a place of considerable importance. As a simple harbor of refuge it is absolutely indispensable. It stands precisely upon the same basis as every other appropriation in the bill; and I ask the Senate whether they will abandon the whole of that commerce of Lake Superior without one single harbor.

Mr. McDougall. I agree with the chairman of the committee, that as a harbor of refuge for many years this has deserved more than any other port that lies along the shores of Lake Superior or Lake Michigan. It is not because it is a harbor where vessels can be built, or builded if you please, but it is a great harbor of refuge needed, demanded by the interests of Lake Superior, the greatest sea there is in the West. I trust that with due regard to the demand of the interests of the West this port—I do not call it a harbor; I call it a port particularly—may be regarded, and $50,000 is not a large numeral for the purpose of accomplishing the object. I trust the chairman of the committee may be supported in this appropriation.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not like to oppose any of these appropriations, because I do not know precisely on what principle the appropriations have been reported, whether it was to give so much indiscriminately to every harbor, or whether it was because money was needed, and more in one place than another; but this Lac la Belle is no stranger to us. I can remember when parties in this interest appeared before the Committee on Public Lands and assured us that if we appropriated a quantity of public land they would not only be able to build the canal, but make a most perfect and complete harbor; and finally they said if they could have the even sections—the odd sections in that country had been given to a railroad—but if we would depart from our usual course and report a bill giving them the even sections, so that they could have one hundred thousand acres of the public land, it would be such a subsidy that they would be able not only to build a harbor and canal, but to side it up. I believe the committee, however, did not yield the point so far as the even sections were concerned, but they did report a bill giving them one hundred thousand acres. I thought at that time it was a magnificent donation, because it was given to a company. If it had then been supposed we were to add a donation of money to it, I do not think the appropriation could have been carried in the committee. But if these appropriations are all to pass and none to be scrutinized, perhaps opposition to this one would be considered invidious. From the way in which the bill appears to have been reported, it seems as if we were to enter upon a wholesale business of improving the harbors of the country by giving them all about so much, whether there be any public necessity for it or not; but as this company have had a donation of land, I think we ought at least to have that appropriation spent; they ought to have time to spend all that before we make an additional appropriation. I shall, of course, support the amendment to strike out this clause.

Mr. McDougall. About the invidiousness of advocating propositions like this the Senator from Kansas should say but little; for he has asserted and fought for more things, and Kansas has, than any who have come before the Legislature of the Government of the United States—fought for them well. I do not dispute that. He fought for them, I may say, successfully; but it does not lay in the mouth of the Senator from Kansas to raise questions like this. I do not care to indulge in any argument on this subject; but the Senator knows well that Kansas has given us more trouble about improvements on the frontier and our progress there than any other part of the Union; and I take occasion now to remark the fact, not to be disguised, that the Senator from Kansas and his colleague, who is now gone to his fathers, did make more trouble about progress between the Rocky mountains and the coasts of the Pacific than any two men who ever sat in the Senate Chamber. It does not exactly suit me that he should rise in his place and undertake to discourse about a subject with which he is only imperfectly acquainted. I am better informed myself, far better informed than he is. I understand the conditions of the mountains and their necessities. I have been disturbed, disturbed much by the Senator from Kansas and his former colleague, now gone, by questions raised, where the question was—not what was the truth, but what would pay in Kansas; and they have made it pay in Kansas. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think if the Senate would give any attention to this matter there would be no votes for this clause of the bill; the proposition to strike it out would be adopted by the unanimous vote of the body. At the last session of Congress this corporation filed a petition for a grant of lands to make this canal, and I recollect very well the discussion in the Committee on Public Lands in regard to it. I was very reluctant to vote for that bill, because it was a purely local work, and there were very few persons to be benefited by it. I did not hear anything said then about a harbor of safety, a harbor of refuge. But there are some mineral interests there; there are some gentlemen engaged in mineral pursuits; and they have to carry their ores to a very considerable distance at an expense which will be avoided by making this canal. The owners of these mines had commenced the construction of this canal for their own benefit; but they claimed that it would be a public benefit by making a harbor there; that the lands would be brought into market thereby; settlements would be made; and therefore the Government could afford to appropriate some lands to this work that seemed to be a private enterprise. Upon that showing the committee, not, I believe, with my consent, and perhaps without the vote of the Senator from Kansas, reported this bill:

"That there be, and is hereby, granted to the State of Michigan, for the use and benefit of the Lac La Belle Harbor Improvement Company, a company organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Michigan, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a ship-canal to connect the waters of Lake Superior with the lake known as Lac la Belle, in said State, one hundred thousand acres of the public lands of the United States," &c.

In the neighborhood of that little lake—

"Provided, That the said canal shall be at least one hundred feet wide at the top, seventy-five feet wide at the bottom, and shall have, when completed, a depth of water through its entire length of at least twelve feet, running from sixteen feet of water in Lake Superior to fourteen feet of water in Lac la Belle: Provided further, That said canal shall be and remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States free from toll," &c.

And if the canal was not finished, the lands were to revert to the United States. Now, what has been done with those lands? Have they been selected? Have they been taken out of market and away from market for the benefit of this company? Have they been sold and the money realized? We know nothing about this. Whether this is enough to build the canal, we do not know. I think it was claimed that some seventy or eighty thousand dollars had been raised by the mining interests in that neighborhood to make this canal before the grant of the lands, and it was supposed, I believe, that this grant of lands would be sufficient to complete the canal. I am astonished that it is asked to make any appropriation in money when there is this grant of lands undisposed of, and we have no report in regard to it before this body. With such a state of case I cannot vote for the appropriation.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hold in my hand a report on this very subject. My attention has just been called to it:

"A law of Congress, approved July 3, 1866, granted to the State of Michigan one hundred thousand acres of land to aid in the construction of this canal, the dimensions to be at least one hundred feet wide at the top, seventy-five feet wide at the bottom, and to have a depth of water through the entire length of at least twelve feet. This will, it is thought, be sufficient for the commerce of the place. It is doubted, however, whether these dimensions can be preserved without further protection to the banks of the canal, which will be constantly abraded by the motion of the water caused by the waves of Lake Superior, and the passage of vessels through the cut. This protection may be afforded by a double row of sheet piling on both sides of the canal, driven at the present water's edge—the prism of sand to be dredged out. In case no further donation of lands is granted, the following amounts will be required for this purpose: Amount of appropriations at last session of Congress, 1866. —: estimate for permanent completion of work, $92,000; amount required for next fiscal year, $46,000."

This is a report from the engineer department made January 28, 1867. The Senator is mistaken in supposing there is no report in the case. That is all I have to say about it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As I said in the outset, it is always with extreme reluctance that I propose any amendment against the wishes of my friend, the chairman of the committee; but I thought it due to the Senate that they should know precisely what the facts of this case are before they vote this money. Those facts are simply these: this is a private corporation which takes toll, or will take toll when the canal is done so that vessels can use it, from the whole commerce of the lakes.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not so understand it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is so by the laws of Michigan, that I hold in my hand, authorizing the formation of the company. I know my friend does not so understand it. If he had he never would have asked this appropriation. My friend is mistaken in that respect, because I do not impute to him the intention to get any wrong appropriation here by any means; but that is the fact, as the laws of Michigan, that I hold in my hand, show. Now, then, having granted to this corporation only last July one hundred thousand acres of valuable lands, is it right, upon any evidence we have, that Congress should put its hands into the pockets of the people and take out $100,000, because this $46,000 is only an installment, to build that identical canal; not to improve the harbor outside of it, but to drive pilings on each side of it, so that the sand will not slip into this private canal. That is the question; and having stated it, I have done my duty. It is for the Senate to decide what is right.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. If this appropriation is to be applied to build this canal I shall not vote for it. I do not understand that to be the fact, however. My understanding of the fact is this: the part of Lake Superior upon which this work is to be done is one which has not any natural harbor; and I very well remember the discussion before the Committee on Public Lands, at the last session, as to the necessity of this canal; that by cutting the canal through from Lake Superior to this small interior lake the small lake would furnish a safe harbor. The trouble was there were no means to get from Lake Superior into it, and this appropriation of one hundred thousand acres of land was given to a company to open that communication. Now, I do not understand that the appropriation asked at this time is to complete that canal or to be applied to the building of a canal, but to the making safe of the harbor in the lake when reached.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will my friend allow me to read for his information—

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I have heard it read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will you allow me to read again?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Wait until I get through.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I understand that the lake itself requires improvement inside; that vessels cannot lay safely there when they reach it; and if that is the object of this appropriation—

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will say to the Senator from Iowa, if he will yield the floor a moment, that before the Committee on Public Lands, at the last session, this shore was described as a straight shore, furnishing no protection at all. There is no harbor there, no creek, no break in the shore known to the Committee on Public Lands, as it was represented by persons from the neighborhood, but simply a little distance from the shore, perhaps half a mile or a mile, there was a little lake.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I was just explaining that to the Senate if the Senator was listening.

Mr. HENDRICKS. And this canal is simply to connect the two lakes, Lake Superior with that little lake.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That is what I was trying to explain to the Senate. I said that on the shore of Lake Superior in this region there was no natural harbor; that it became necessary to have in some way a harbor, and the Committee on Public Lands came to the conclusion that it would be the best way and the cheapest way to have a harbor there, to have this canal from Lac La Belle into Lake Superior, and the appropriation of one hundred thousand acres of lands was made in order to make that canal. Now, I understand this appropriation of money is asked, not to complete that canal, not to aid in building that canal belonging to a private company, but to make a harbor in the lake when reached. That is the object of it. It is to improve the harbor and protect vessels when they get through the canal into Lac La Belle.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I wish to ask my friend from Iowa to listen to this official report on that identical subject. I will read that part of it which relates to this point:

"It is doubted, however, whether these dimensions can be preserved"—

That is of the canal—

"without further protection to the banks of the canal, which will be constantly abraded by the motion of the water." * * * "This protection may be afforded by a double row of sheet piling on both sides of the canal, driven at the present water's edge—the prism of sand to be dredged out. In case no further donation of land is granted, the following amounts will be required for this purpose."

Now, will my friend from Iowa tell me what "this purpose" is, unless it is the purpose of driving pilings on the side of the canal?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That is not the law. This appropriation states specifically what it is for.

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. SUMNER. I desire to make a report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill making appropriations for consular and diplomatic expenses.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I think we had better go on with the bill before us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the report will not be received.

Mr. SUMNER. Is it not a privileged question? It is always in order, as I understand, to receive and proceed with reports of committees of conference. Of course this report had better be acted on and disposed of now. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not interpose an objection.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Unless it be a privileged question I must insist on going on regularly.

Mr. SUMNER. It is the usage of the Senate I know to receive these reports and act upon them at any time when presented. Whether that is so by positive rule I am not sure.

The PRESIDENT, pro tempore. The Chair thinks the report of a committee of conference not strictly a privileged question; but it has been, as the Senator from Massachusetts suggests, the practice of the Senate to receive those reports ordinarily without objection at any time when they are offered.

Mr. SUMNER. This will take no time.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish to conform to whatever may be the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should dislike very much to see any objection interposed to action upon conference reports on the general appropriation bills. There is an indispensable necessity for acting on them the moment they are prepared.

Mr. SUMNER. The habit of the Senate is universal.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know it is the custom and perhaps the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no objection be made the report will be received and read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 904) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th of June, 1868, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered "one," and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Insert in line fourteen, after the word "dollars" the words: "Provided, that no money shall be paid to the present minister-resident at Portugal out of any fund whatever: and this provision shall continue in force until repealed by Congress."

That the Senate recede from their amendment numbered "two."

CHARLES SUMNER.

GEORGE G. FOGG.

REVERDY JOHNSON.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

THADDEUS STEVENS.

N. P. BANKS.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I believe that report excludes compensation to the present minister at Portugal. I ask for the yeas and nays upon agreeing to the report. I cannot express my view of that kind of legislation in proper language, perhaps, and I satisfy myself by asking for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SUMNER. I will make a brief explanation. It will be remembered that the House of Representatives, in the bill as it came from them, struck out the word "Portugal" from the list of countries where we have ministers. The Senate restored that word. The House then disagreed with the Senate; and the question between the two Houses has been arranged by leaving Portugal in the list of the States where we may have representatives, but with the proviso that nothing is to be paid to the minister-resident now actually there. The second point of disagreement between the two Houses was relative to the contingent expenses of the Foreign Department of this Government. It will be remembered that that appropriation at the last moment was cut down in the Senate from $65,000 to $30,000. The House disagreed with the Senate on that vote, and the Senate by the report of their committee recede.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The bill as it came from the House of Representatives appropriated a gross sum for the payment of ministers at different points. The House bill did not provide that our Government should no longer be represented at Portugal.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon; the House bill dropped Portugal from the list.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Very well, sir. Whether a minister may be sent to Portugal or not did not depend on that bill. Lisbon is made a point to which we send a minister by existing law; and the House bill if it had been agreed to would not have repealed that legislation, but Portugal would have remained a point at which we were to be represented, but we should have simply failed to make an appropriation for the salary of the minister there for the year provided for in the bill. What was the effect of the House bill? The Senate disagreed to that, and said that there should be a salary paid for the coming year to a minister at Portugal. A committee of conference is appointed, and they not only yield the point to the House in regard to the one year, but make it applicable to future years. The Senate committee of conference have gone further than the House itself had gone, not only refuse to provide for the salary of the minister for the year, but provide that in future years it shall not be paid if the same minister is retained at that court; and thus the Senate has been represented by a conference committee going beyond the demands of the House, yielding more than the House asked, striking out the salary for the year and for future years! That which was a provision for one year becomes under this report a permanent law so far as the present minister may be concerned. I do not think that is the manner in which the Senate should be represented on a committee of conference. I understand it to be the duty of a committee of conference to represent the sentiment of the Senate, not their own views. It is very well known to the Senate what were the views of the Senator from Massachusetts; but he was not appointed upon this committee to represent himself, but to represent this body after this body, after debate and a careful vote, said that that minister should be paid. Then the Senator consents to a report going further than the House had demanded. I think with such a report the Senate ought not to concur.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator from Indiana is mistaken in supposing that the Senate voted that that minister ought to be paid. That was not the conclusion to which the Senate came. It came to no new conclusion upon that subject. The House struck out Portugal, or at least sent the bill to us without putting Portugal into the list of Powers at which we were to be represented. The Senate inserted the word Portugal in that list, thus expressing the opinion that Portugal should not be erased from that list, that an appropriation should be made for a minister there: but at the same time the Senate knew that in the appropriation bill of last year was a clause that no money should be paid to the gentleman at present representing the United States at Portugal out of that or any other fund. My own opinion was that that was a permanent provision, and that so long as it remained on the statute-book no money could be paid in any year, either for this or any succeeding year to the present minister, although an appropriation might be made for a mission to Portugal. I am of that opinion still. It seems, however, that the House of Representatives, while consenting to put Portugal in and make an appropriation for a mission there, insists upon reenacting that clause and providing that it shall remain the law until repealed. I do not think that gives a particle of additional force to what existed before. I for one should be perfectly willing to drop the controversy; I did not approve of it in the first place; but my idea was in voting for the amendment of the Senate that while it provided for a minister to Portugal, the previous law yet remained unrepealed applicable to the person there. Therefore the Senate in voting to insert "Portugal" intended to express no such opinion as the Senator from Indiana seems to imply from the vote of the Senate, because it was openly stated here in debate that that clause still applied.

Mr. SUMNER. I content myself with simply calling for the vote.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 25, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Cattell, Chandler, Connors, Cragin, Creswell, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fowler, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Williams, and Wilson—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Doolittle, Foster, Hendricks, Norton, Patterson, Ross, Wade, and Wiley—10.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Davis, Dixon, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Johnson, McDougall, Nesmith, Riddle, Saulsbury, Stewart, and Yates—17.

So the report was concurred in.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1154) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I move to amend the bill by striking out in line one hundred and twenty-seven of section one, on page 6, the word "eighty" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "thirty," so as to make the appropriation for the harbor of Burlington, Vermont, $30,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Iowa that the amendment which he proposes, being an alteration of an amendment adopted in the words in which it stands, is not now in order.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Will it be in order at any time before the bill shall pass?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be in order in the Senate when the question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. The Senator can then move to amend this amendment before it shall be concurred in.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I shall renew my motion at the proper time.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments which have been made as in the Committee of the Whole. The Chair will put the question on all the amendments collectively, excepting those which may be indicated by Senators for a separate vote.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I ask that an exception be made of the amendment which I have just indicated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to except the amendment in reference to the Des Moines rapids.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no other amendment be designated for exception, the Chair will put the question on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, except those indicated by the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Vermont.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first excepted amendment will be read.

The Secretary read the following amendment inserted after line one hundred and twenty-five of section one:

For improving the harbor of Burlington, Vermont, $80,000.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I move to amend that amendment by striking out "eighty" and inserting "thirty." I find upon examining the report made by the Secretary of War, and which has been laid upon our tables, that he recommended the sum of $80,000 for this improvement. I find in the printed bill upon our table that sum increased to $80,000. Not seeing in the report of the Secretary of War any reason why this increase of $50,000 should be made over and above the amount recommended by him, I desire to know why it is so increased. Since I have called attention to the amendment before, the Senator from Vermont informs me that he has a letter giving the information. I have not yet had an opportunity of reading it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend from Iowa had been paying strict attention to the course of the debate he would have understood, during the observations of my friend from Missouri, [Mr. HENDERSON,] why this was. The subject was then alluded to, and it was then stated, and I repeat it, that in this printed recommendation of appropriations the sum was left blank entirely, and on inquiry—because living at this place I knew that surveys had been made, and everything was ready for the work—I ascertained that the sum was left blank by a mere accidental omission. Not choosing to have the Senate act upon my say so as to what was right or as to what should be appropriated, I asked the Secretary of War to communicate to the chairman of the committee, my friend from Michigan, the information he had, and what was recommended; and the letter that I hold in my hand was communicated to the committee. It states the amount of the whole estimate, and winds up by saying "An additional appropriation of $80,000 is proper, which amount I would recommend to be appropriated at this time," and that is signed, "A. A. Humphreys, brigadier general and chief of Engineers." It was upon that that the committee acted, and I hope it will be satisfactory to my friend from Iowa.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I had nothing to guide me but the printed report before the Senate, and there, on page 28, I found this item:

"For Burlington harbor and breakwater, additional appropriation required for this year, $30,000."

The letter read shows a necessity, I suppose, for an increase of $50,000. I thought it was necessary the Senate should have that information before increasing the Secretary's recommendation by that amount. I withdraw the amendment if it is in my power so to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly, the power of the Senator over his amendment is ample until it is amended or voted on by the Senate. The question is on the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The Secretary read the next excepted amendment, which was to strike out lines one hundred and fifty-nine and one hundred and sixty of the first section, in the following words:

For improving navigation on the Mississippi river at Des Moines or lower rapids, $1,000,000; and in lieu thereof to insert:

For improving navigation of the Mississippi river at Des Moines or lower rapids, according to such plan as the Secretary of War shall, on the report of a board of engineers, approve, $500,000: Provided, however, That any canal that may be constructed round said Des Moines or lower rapids of the Mississippi river shall be, and forever remain, free to the navigation and commerce of said river, and no tolls shall ever be collected thereon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not mean to oppose this amendment, but I wish to suggest to the consideration of the Senate to insert after the word "tolls" the words "or other exactions," so as to be sure to secure to commerce complete freedom. "Tolls" is a definite term; it means payment of a certain sum for passing through. I move to amend the amendment by adding the words "or other exactions," so as to cover the whole ground.

Mr. BROWN. I do not know exactly what would be the full scope of that language, and do not see the necessity for it. I think it had better remain as it is. There may be rules and regulations and requirements necessary to be observed there that might be held to fall under that. I do not want any toll or other imposition levied upon any of the commerce of that river, and I think the language is sufficient as it stands.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$500,000" and inserting "$1,000,000."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to amend the bill by striking out on page 7, lines one hundred and fifty-six, one hundred and fifty-seven, and one hundred and fifty-eight of section one, the words: "for preservation and improvement of Boston harbor, Massachusetts, $875,000."

Mr. SUMNER. I should like to hear some reason for that.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator from Massachusetts voted a short time ago in favor of giving us only $300,000 for improvement of the Mississippi river at the Des Moines rapids, requiring, I suppose, the cutting out of a channel two hundred feet wide in solid stone for some twelve miles for the passage of steamboats, some five or six feet deep, or at any rate four feet in depth. I do not see any recommendation by the Secretary of War for the improvement of this harbor.

Mr. SUMNER. Every item is recommended.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to know what the necessity for this very large appropriation is. I have looked through the report of the Secretary of War and I cannot find a recommendation. If some Senator will show it to me, I shall certainly withdraw all opposition to this clause. It struck me, however, that if we could get along with $300,000 to cut a channel through solid stone for twelve miles in order to pass over the lower rapids of the Mississippi a commerce which in one year will equal the commerce of Boston harbor for five years, I ought to have some reason for voting this very large appropriation. This is not the first, nor second, nor third that I have given willingly; and I now express my entire willingness to vote for this appropriation, or even a larger appropriation, provided I can find any estimate or any reason for it; and if the Senator from Massachusetts, who of course knows all about this matter, will give me the reasons for it, I shall most cheerfully still vote for it, notwithstanding his opposition to the other.

Mr. CHANDLER. We have an estimate for every dollar.

Mr. HENDERSON. That mere statement is unsatisfactory. I hold in my hand the document in which the estimates are contained on which this bill is founded, and I find but one harbor in Massachusetts recommended for improvement, and that is the harbor of Provincetown. Is this the same?

Mr. SUMNER. No, sir. I beg to assure the Senator that every item here has been estimated for most carefully by the proper Department, and these are appropriations necessary to save the harbor from deterioration, I may say, in one word, to save the harbor. Without these appropriations there will be, by the gradual and continual abrasion of the earth from these islands, a filling up of the harbor, which will interfere with its usefulness, and unless arrested completely destroy it. I will not, however, take time. I presume my friend is hardly in earnest. Even if I have voted against his proposition I trust he will not return upon me by voting against a proposition which is so essentially good as this, and after his magnanimous speech, too. I appeal to his magnanimity.

Mr. HENDERSON. I insist upon knowing in what document this recommendation appears. I have the only recommendation that the Secretary of War has made, Executive Document No. 56 of the House of Representatives, and I cannot find one dollar recommended for this harbor. I should like to know in what document I can find it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have just sent the clerk of the committee to the committee room for the document. While he is gone for it I will move to lay aside the bill informally and take up House bill No. 1166. ["Oh, no!"]

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not wish to delay the time of the Senate in order to defeat this appropriation. I ask the Senator from Michigan whether the recommendation for this improvement is in manuscript? I do not find it in the document which he placed in my hands.

Mr. CHANDLER. There are three printed documents, and it is in one of them. I have not the particular one before me. I have sent the clerk for it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no hostility to Boston harbor, and it will give me a great deal of pleasure to vote this or a larger sum if it has been recommended by the proper Department. I am perfectly willing to take the Senator's statement, and I therefore withdraw the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill by adding the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War is authorized, whenever in his discretion the public service shall require it, to suspend and withhold the whole or any part of any expenditure directed or authorized by this act; and he shall report to the next succeeding session of Congress his reasons for such suspension.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think that amendment ought not to be adopted. I think we have sufficient checks and guards already. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope for the sake of the public Treasury it will not be voted down, with all respect for my friend from Michigan. This amendment merely provides that the Secretary of War to whom these four or five million dollars are intrusted, shall have power, if in a special case there shall appear to be special reasons for it, to suspend the expenditure of the money and report his special reasons to Congress at its next session thereafter. It does seem to me, that in making these numerous appropriations, so many as there are, and involving so much money, the public interest that there should be this power of reserve in the expending Department, for special reasons not to carry out some particular appropriation until the matter can again be reported to Congress. We have required more than that in the case of the Des Moines rapids. I think it a highly conservative and proper provision to make as to the whole.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suppose that the President of the United States himself could, without any particular authority, suspend the expenditure of these appropriations, if he became satisfied that the state of the Treasury would not allow it, or that they would not accomplish the purpose; but if we are to insert a provision, which I believe has never been inserted in any prior appropriation bill, of this description, I submit to the honorable member from Vermont that the discretion ought to be with the Secretary of the Treasury instead of with the Secretary of War.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend from Maryland misapprehends the scope of the amendment. It does not relate to the state of the Treasury, but it relates to the state of re-examinations as work goes on upon these numerous public works that are in charge of the War Department. If it shall appear to the War Department that some specific appropriation cannot be economically expended at this time, if there be special reasons for that, I propose that the Secretary of War may suspend that work and report his reasons to us. It relates to the work and not to where the money is to come from.

Mr. MORGAN. It will be seen by looking at the first section of the bill that all the money appropriated is to be expended "under the direction and superintendence of the Secretary of War." I think it is perfectly safe as it is, and I hope this amendment will not prevail.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to strike out from line one hundred and thirty to line one hundred and thirty-seven, inclusive, of the first section of the bill.

The Secretary read the part proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

For the purpose of improving the navigation of the St. Croix river, Maine, above the ledge, $15,000: Provided, The Province of New Brunswick shall contribute and pay to the proper disbursing officer a like sum for said purpose; said payment being made on condition that in no event shall the Province of New Brunswick be called upon for more than half the sum actually expended for said purpose.

Mr. HENDERSON. My friend from Maine, [Mr. MORRILL,] in arguing against the appropriation for the Mississippi river, said that it had not been recommended by the Secretary of War, and that it was a very loose practice to enter upon these appropriations except in accordance with the recommendations of the proper officers. I have in my hands the report of the Secretary of War, and I can find no recommendation upon this subject. There is an appropriation recommended for the Saco river of $40,000, and that is contained in the bill; but I can find no recommendation for this purpose. Inasmuch as the money is to be expended above the ledge somewhere, I cannot understand but that there is some difficulty in getting over the ledge up into this portion of the river that is proposed to be navigated. I should like to hear from my friend from Maine on the subject.

Mr. MORRILL. If I could placate my honorable friend by any means in my power I should be very glad. If it would be any gratification to the honorable Senator, I should not much object to forego this $15,000. But my recollection is that he will find this estimated for in one of the documents to which the honorable chairman of the Committee on Commerce referred, and which will be here, I trust, in time to enable us to act on this bill some time during the evening. Very possibly after the honorable Senator here had time to reflect on the subject he would be satisfied with the statement of the chairman, and withdraw his amendment. I suppose he intends to admonish me against the unfitness and impropriety of resisting the appropriation for the Mississippi river, that magnificent river, the Father of Waters, where the men grow so magnificent and do not care for dollars. [Laughter.] I assure my honorable friend that in all I said to-day I did not intend to reflect at all upon the great Father of Waters, nor did I intend to reflect upon the great enterprise. I believe I said that I commended it, and I believe I said everything that could be said in favor of it.

Mr. CHANDLER. If my honorable friend will allow me, I desire to present to the Senator from Missouri the paper which I have sent for—

Mr. HENDERSON, (after examining it.) This paper is about Boston harbor, not the question we are now considering.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will send to the committee room now for the other paper.

Mr. HENDERSON. Have you one on the subject of the St. Croix river?

Mr. CHANDLER. I expect so. I have sent for all the papers and they will be here presently. I hope we shall have a vote.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator who has this bill in charge is very anxious to take a vote. He does not wish it postponed much longer. I had an idea of attacking the appropriations for the benefit of Michigan. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. I will withdraw my request for a vote to enable the Senator to do so. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON. There are very large appropriations for rivers and harbors in that State, as I stated this morning, and I had some idea of moving to strike out various items in these appropriations. I suppose, however, I must be satisfied with the efforts of the Senator from Vermont in that direction, who succeeded in getting one of them out of the bill. The others, I presume, must be allowed to remain.

In reference to this St. Croix river appropriation, I stated that I was not aware of any recommendation for it, but still it is in the bill. I am perfectly willing to vote for it, though the committee who report it proposed to strike out the appropriation for the Mississippi river, which I thought a very important one, and one that ought to have been made, and one that will be required before we get such an improvement there as is required by the commerce of the western country—that is, a canal around the rapids. There is no other way of improving them. The idea that the appropriation made this evening will be sufficient, even to commence the work, is to suppose too much. I doubt whether the appropriation of the amount agreed upon will be used at all, or whether one dollar of it ought to be used. I suppose the Secretary of War, under the discretionary power that he has, will not perhaps use a dollar of it under the circumstances, in making such an improvement as is requisite there, and that is a canal. The work ought to be done in that way, or else not done at all, in my judgment, and I say so from what I have long heard said by experienced steamboat men and engineers who have examined it; and the locality is close to where I live. I am satisfied that nothing else but a canal will do.

I have no prejudice against these appropriations; and if they are necessary, I am satisfied that there is no part of the country which will receive them more gratefully and more willingly than the State of Maine.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 912) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868; and that it had also agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 904) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 900) to fix the compensation of the officers of the revenue-cutter service, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 252) to permit Captain John A. Webster, jr., of the steamer Mahoning, to receive from the Government of Great Britain a gold chronometer; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 275) to extend the time for the use of certain vessels for quarantine purposes at the port of New York.

GOODS FROM BRITISH PROVINCES.

On motion of Mr. CHANDLER, the bill (S. No. 622) to repeal the provisions of law authorizing the introduction of foreign goods into the United States without inspection at the usual ports of entry, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to repeal sections two, three, and four of the act to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes, approved June 27, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. POMEROY. I should like to have it explained precisely what these sections are that we are repealing by this bill. I do not know what we are repealing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am charged by the chairman of the committee with the duty of explaining this bill. By an act passed in 1864 it was provided that in certain cases goods brought into the northern boundary of the country from the British Provinces might be loaded in cars, sealed in the British Provinces, and carried through into the interior of our country to almost any place without inspection until they arrived at their final destination. That has been in practice now for two years and a half, and it has been found that constantly enormous frauds are being perpetrated under it, and that it does not answer the objects the law had in view. Experience has proved that the protection of the revenue and the interests of the country require that that should be stopped and that there should be an inspection at the border of the country. The Treasury Department recommend most strongly that this section be repealed. Living on the border myself, and having had means of observation, I entirely agree to that conclusion.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time, and passed.

BUILDING LIGHT-HOUSES.

On motion of Mr. CHANDLER, the bill (H. R. No. 1166) to authorize the building of light-houses therein mentioned, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Commerce proposed several amendments. The first was after "Michigan" in line seven to insert "at a cost not exceeding $10,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For building a light-house on a proper site at Trowbridge Point, in Thunder bay, in the State of Michigan, at a cost not exceeding $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after "Michigan" in line ten the words "at a cost not exceeding $14,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For building a light-house on a proper site at Menota, on Lake Superior, in the State of Michigan, at a cost not exceeding $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "California" in line thirteen to insert "at a cost not exceeding $10,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For building a light-house on a proper site at Santa Cruz, in the State of California, at a cost not exceeding $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines fifteen and sixteen, in these words:

For building a light-house on a proper site at or near Braddock's Point, Georgia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was charged by the committee with the duty of investigating the propriety of some of these items which in the hurry of the moment we reported should be struck out, and on investigation I am satisfied that the light at Braddock's Point is one that we ought properly at this time to appropriate for. It is at the south end of Tybee Island and makes a part of the northern entrance to Savannah. I think it ought to stand, but we ought to add according to the estimates of the Light-House Board a limitation on the cost. I move, therefore, to amend the clause proposed to be stricken out by adding to it these words, "at a cost not exceeding $15,000;" and if amended in that way I hope the amendment recommended by the committee will not be agreed to, so that this clause will stand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Prior to taking the question on striking out the words which have been read, the Senator from Vermont moves to perfect the words proposed to be stricken out by inserting after line sixteen the words "at a cost not exceeding $15,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on striking out the words amended. The motion to strike out was not agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines seventeen and eighteen, in these words:

For building a light-house on a proper site to mark Combahee bank, Georgia.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to know from the committee why they recommended the striking out of that appropriation. I suppose it was inserted at the instance of some of the Departments or bureaus, the Light-House Board probably, as a place where a light-house ought to be erected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. One of the reasons for this was that the committee with all the industry several of its members were capable of exercising had not a sufficient knowledge of geography, and could not acquire it by the maps and light-house charts, to find out where that particular place is; and on looking at the map of the coast of Georgia only a hundred miles or so, we thought for the present, for this year, the commerce of that region could get along with the appropriations we had recommended, with the reservation I have made as to Braddock's Point, which we thought needed a further investigation, and which on investigation, I think, ought to be appropriated for. That was the reason, the only one we had, and I think it ought to be satisfactory to the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twenty after "Georgia" to add "at a cost not exceeding $15,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For building a light-house to mark Tybee Island Knoll, Georgia, at a cost not exceeding $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "Carolina" in line twenty-two to insert "at a cost not exceeding $15,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For building range lights on Morris Island, as guides in crossing Charleston bar, South Carolina, at a cost not exceeding $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "Virginia" in line twenty-five to insert "at a cost not exceeding $16,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For rebuilding the light-house on a proper site at Deepwater shoals in James river, Virginia, at a cost not exceeding $16,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "Georgia" in line twenty-eight to insert "at a cost not exceeding $45,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For rebuilding light-house tower and keeper's dwelling on a proper site at Saint Simon's, Georgia, at a cost not exceeding $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following words from line thirty to line thirty-four:

For rebuilding Wolf Island beacon lights, and buildings connected therewith, Georgia.
For rebuilding Sapelo Island light-house and beacons, Georgia.

For building three light-house and buoy steam-tenders.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line four of section three, to strike out the word "responsible" before "bidder;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That no contract shall be made except after public advertisement for proposals in such form and manner as to secure general notice thereof, and the same shall only be made with the lowest bidder therefor, upon security deemed sufficient in the judgment of the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section four, in these words:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to regulate and fix the salaries of the respective light-houses in such manner as he shall deem just and proper: Provided, That the whole sum allowed shall not exceed an average of $600 to each keeper.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The apparent recommendation of the committee to strike out that particular section is a mistake. On reconsideration the committee think it is best to allow the section to stand. The law already gives this same discretion to the Secretary, and it has since 1828; and this section merely increases the compensation of light-house keepers by $100 a year; and the committee thought, from their investigations and knowledge of the services of that class of public servants, and the fact that they are obliged to stay in their places and have no opportunity to attend political conventions or do anything else than mind their own business, they were entirely deserving of this little increase; and the conclusion of the committee finally was to let that stand. I hope, therefore, the amendment will not be adopted.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHANDLER. The committee have instructed me to offer the following amendment, to come in on page 2, after line fourteen of section one:

For rebuilding a light-house on Pigeon river or vicinity, Lake Superior, Minnesota, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed and the bill read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PORT OF ALBANY.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to take up now for consideration Senate bill No. 609.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 609) allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into the port at Albany to be secured and paid at that place was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Albany, in the collection district of New York, is declared to be a port of delivery within that district; and there is to be appointed a surveyor of customs, to reside at that port, who shall, in addition to the customary duties performed by that officer in other places, perform the duties prescribed in an act entitled "An act allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into Pittsburg, Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Nashville, and Natchez, to be secured and paid at those places," approved March 2, 1831. The surveyor, before taking the oath of office, is to give security to the United States for the faithful performance of his duties in the sum of $10,000, and is to receive, in addition to the customary fees and emoluments of his office, an annual salary of $600.

The same privileges granted to the ports of delivery mentioned in the first section of the act of March 2, 1831, and the restrictions created by that act are extended and made applicable to all goods, wares, and merchandise imported into the United States at any port of entry and destined to the port of Albany. That the Secretary of the Treasury may extend the privileges of the warehouse acts of August 6, 1846, and March 28, 1854, and the regulations of the Treasury Department relating thereto, to the port of Albany.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to hear some explanation of that bill before I vote for it. Is it a proposition to make Albany a port of entry?

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir; a port of delivery, the same as St. Louis; and this is to allow goods to arrive there in bond and pay duties there the same as they do in St. Louis.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PORT OF CAMDEN.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move now to take up for consideration House bill No. 1032.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1032) relative to the port of Camden, New Jersey, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The port of Camden, in the State of New Jersey, is by the bill annexed to the collection district of Philadelphia, and an assistant collector, to be appointed in accordance with the laws of the United States, is to reside at Camden, who shall have power to enter and clear vessels in like manner as the collector of Philadelphia is authorized to do; but such assistant collector shall nevertheless act in conformity to such instructions and regulations as he shall from time to time receive from the collector of Philadelphia. The assistant collector is to receive for his annual salary $1,500 in full for all services to be by him performed, and in lieu of commissions and fees. The assistant collector is to be authorized to enroll and license, according to the laws of the United States, all vessels engaged in the coasting trade and fisheries, owned in whole or in part by residents of that portion of the Bridgeton district lying north of Alloway's creek, in the county of Salem, New Jersey; and all such enrollments and licenses shall be as valid and effectual as if they had been effected in any other port of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would respectfully ask the committee whether that comes from the Treasury Department? The collector at Philadelphia heretofore has done the whole work.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is a mistake.

Mr. JOHNSON. I merely wish to know whether the propriety of this measure is suggested by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NIAGARA SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 344) to incorporate the Niagara Ship-Canal Company.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator surely cannot hope to pass that bill to-night at this period of the session. I presumed from the fact that he delayed calling it up so long that he would scarcely call it up at all. It is a measure involving $8,000,000; a proposition that will be disputed and debated by the Senators from the State of New York, in which the work is to be built; a proposition that involves the issuing of a large amount of bonds of the Government. It seems to me it ought not to be taken up now. To-morrow at one o'clock I shall have to ask the Senate to take up the bill in regard to the compound-interest notes—a question that ought to be settled; it ought to have been settled before this. I trust the Senator will not press this bill now. If he does, it will only lead to debate and to a long session to-night, and there is every probability of its being crowded off to-morrow. We have now but five working days in which to finish all the leading bills of the session. It is utterly impossible, therefore, that the Senator can expect to get favorable action on this bill at this time. Under the circumstances I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator to withdraw it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw it for the purpose of enabling the Senator to make an explanation.

Mr. CHANDLER. This is a bill in which my constituents, as well as those of the Senator from Ohio, have a very deep interest. I want a test vote on it, and I am willing to have that test vote on the question of taking it up. I am exceedingly anxious to get a test vote showing the strength of the bill in this body. If that vote is had, and I am voted down, I shall submit. I propose now that the vote on taking up the bill by yeas and nays be regarded as a test vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. The question of taking it up will be debated. I know Senators around me will debate it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will not utter a syllable.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am willing to make a test vote of the motion to adjourn, if you choose.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is rather hard on me at ten o'clock at night.

Mr. SHERMAN. I renew the motion to adjourn.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to make an appeal to the Senator from Ohio. I have a small bill on which I should like to have the action of the Senate, and I am sure it will pass without debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Discussion is out of order unless the Senator from Ohio withdraws his motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should be glad to oblige the Senator, but it is rather too late to take up bills now.

Mr. FOWLER. This is a little bill that I desire to pass.

Mr. SHERMAN. If I withdraw my motion, the Niagara ship-canal will come up.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I hope the Senator from Ohio will give way to allow the Senator from Tennessee to call up his bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am willing to withdraw the motion if the Senator from Michigan will not press the canal bill, which will lead to an interminable debate.

Mr. FOWLER. I believe he will not.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I withdraw my motion.

Mr. FOWLER. I move to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 557.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is not in order. The motion of the Senator from Michigan is before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I renew my motion to adjourn.

The Senate refused to adjourn; there being on a division—yeas 13, nays 18.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now I hope we shall proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 244.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion pending is to take up that bill, and upon that motion the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. LANE. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, let us have a test vote on the Niagara ship-canal bill.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to; there being on division—yeas 13, nays 19.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and concluded the call.

Mr. BROWN. I had paired off on this vote, but as I perceive the Senator with whom I paired has voted I presume I had better do so. I vote "nay."

Mr. WADE. I understood that my pair with the Senator from Missouri was only in case he was not present. I saw that he was here, and I therefore voted.

Mr. HENDRICKS, (who had voted in the negative.) I forgot that the Senator from California had paired me off with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. HOWARD,] who is confined to his room by indisposition. I therefore ask permission of the Senate to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no objection be made the vote of the Senator from Indiana will be withdrawn.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fogg, Fowler, Howe, Morrill, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Fessenden, Foster, Henderson, Lane, Morgan, Norton, Saulsbury, Sherman, Willey, and Williams—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Davis, Dixon, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Kirkwood, McDougall, Nesmith, Nye, Patterson, Riddle, Van Winkle, and Yates—18.

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read, is in Committee of the Whole, and the question is on the amendment to insert as section twenty-eight the following:

SEC. 28. And be it further enacted, That this act shall not take effect unless the Legislature of the State of New York shall within two years from the date hereof give its assent thereto.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I cannot at this time enter into a debate on this proposition; but I regard the adoption of this amendment as fatal to the commerce of this country and to the intercourse of the nation from one State to the other against the will of any particular State that happens to choose to bar the passage across it. I do hope the Senate will refuse to adopt any amendment of this kind; and upon this amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. STEWART. I certainly hope that this section will be stricken out, because if the States can obstruct commerce, and they have got to be consulted about the removal of obstructions, I do not think the provision in the Constitution that Congress may regulate commerce is worth a cent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is not on striking these words out, but on putting them into the bill on the recommendation of the Committee on Commerce. The question is, Shall this amendment reported by the committee be adopted?

Mr. MORGAN. That amendment was adopted at the last session, as I understand.

Mr. HOWE. No; you are mistaken.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to have the Chair, or the Clerk state what the record is, whether that amendment has not been adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the amendment reported by the committee proposed a period of one year in the bill. An amendment to that was moved to strike out "one year" and insert in lieu thereof "two years," and that amendment was made. The question now is on the amendment as amended. On that no vote of the Senate has been taken.

Mr. MORGAN. What do I understand to be the motion of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No motion at all. That amendment as it now stands for two years never having been agreed to, my suggestion was that I hoped the Senate, as representing the commerce of this nation, never would agree to such an amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Do I understand the Senator from Vermont to object to one year or two?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to it entirely.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well. Mr. President, this is a proposition for Congress to create a corporation to enter into the State of New York and construct a canal. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont if he can point me to any case in the history of this country where Congress has established any precedent of the kind. I should like to have him show me any case where a charter has been granted to a private corporation to enter any State of this Union and construct a canal or any other public work entirely within the jurisdiction of a single State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course there is no time to enter into an extended debate on a question of this description. I will answer my friend from New York in this way: it can be made manifest to him or to any other intelligent gentleman who studies the history of the formation of the Constitution of this country, the proceedings in the Convention that formed it, and the debates there, that it was the purpose of that Convention to give to the United States as a nation the complete control, when they choose to exercise it, of intercommunication between the States. Now, if this ship-canal—

Mr. LANE. Mr. President—

Mr. EDMUNDS. In a moment. I shall be through in a moment.

Mr. LANE. I wish to hear the Senator at length on this subject, and I therefore ask him to give way to a motion to adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont must not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If this ship-canal is merely an intra-State work for a mere local purpose, then we ought not to grant this charter to the corporation at all; but if it is to connect the commerce of the western part of the nation with the east, then it is immaterial whether the mere locus happens to be in one State or in two or in twenty. We ought not to ask the consent of any particular State to improve the navigation of the Mississippi at one place or another, or any harbor. We exercise the nation's will in providing for transit and intercommunication; and it cannot be demonstrated or maintained either in reason or right that any one State has a right to set her foot on the pathway of the nation and say we must bow to her will before we meet and interchange our commodities. But as I said, Mr. President, I only wished to state the proposition, because the time will not allow an extended debate.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, if a canal is to be built around the falls of Niagara it should be built by the State of New York. If the State of New York refuses to build it, and you can show a public necessity for it, then it should be built by the Government through its engineers, and it should be a free canal, except mere nominal tolls to pay current expenses. That, sir, and that alone, is the way in which this ship-canal should be built. But before this be done you must show a public necessity for it, which has not yet been shown. I am very glad to find that the Senator from Vermont has made his point so directly. He comes here and asks the Senate of the United States to grant a charter to a corporation to enter upon the soil of one of the States of this Union and to construct a public work; and he further asks that Congress shall appropriate $6,000,000 for the purpose. I ask him, I ask any Senator, to point to a case in the history of this country, from its first foundation, of anything of the sort.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There are many things that have transpired in the history of our Republic, and more novel things probably than have struck the Senator from New York exactly square. I dare to call myself almost as much of a New Yorker as he is himself, although I do not represent the commercial interests that are in his particular charge, and that fought the opening of the great lakes and the great Northwest out into the Atlantic Ocean and out of the great seas, that they may communicate freely with the nations who are abroad, and make themselves continuous with the commerce of the world. It is not convenient or profitable to be let free even, or to have a freedom of Erie to Ontario and on the St. Lawrence. Why? They think it will damage their present personal business. It is not convenient for the Central railroad, not convenient for their business. It is not convenient for their mills at Rochester, not convenient for their present business.

The Senator from New York desires to legislate for his own local interests. He should legislate as a Senator for the interests of the entire Republic. Those interests require the opening of our great channels of trade so that it may pass out into the high seas, as it were. I understand exactly, and I dare say the Senator from New York does, that local considerations have controlled too much the policy of legislation of the State where I was born, and from whence I came, and about which I have the right to speak. The commerce of the great lakes, Michigan and Huron and Erie and Ontario, down there to the St. Lawrence and the Atlantic should have the privilege of passage over our own land. They have never had it. It has been asked by every thoughtful man, asked by every student of our physical geography. It has been a great political necessity understood by all men; a great physical and economical necessity. Why has it not been done? It has been denied by local interests and technical obstructions. I can understand how local interests now undertake to obstruct when the Senator from New York speaks; I can understand how technical objections can be made by others; but it has been the opinion of the best-informed and wisest men of the period of time in which I have lived that it was a thing needed, demanded ever since the nation heard or understood or began to conceive of the great Northwest, her great seas and her great rivers, her great interests, her great commerce, that she should have the privilege of going out by the St. Lawrence into the Atlantic ocean.

Mr. COWAN obtained the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

Mr. COWAN. I will yield for a motion to adjourn, but not for any other purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am aware that there are Senators absent who desire to participate in this discussion and feel considerable interest in this bill, and as the hour is late I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must put the motion. It is not debatable.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not wish to debate it. I was going to appeal to the Senator from Michigan to allow the pending bill to be passed over informally to enable me to call up a private bill which will not take a minute.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope that will be done.

Mr. COWAN. I only yield to a motion to adjourn.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I hope the Senator will go on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon withdraw his motion to adjourn?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, sir.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is not possible to finish this bill to-night, and I appeal to the Senator from Michigan to allow it to go over informally that I may call up a private bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania give way to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. COWAN. I would rather not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COWAN. Mr. President, I think it would be well if the Senate were to deliberate fully before they embark themselves upon a project of the nature set forth in this bill. There are a great many difficulties that cluster about it which I am satisfied are not in the contemplation of those who are now in favor of it. I propose to notice very briefly some of them.

And first let me remark that a very strong and clear distinction is to be taken between this project and another to effectuate the same purpose through a different means. The Senator from New York has very well remarked that the nation might make a canal around the falls of Niagara. I am not prepared now to dispute but that it might; but I am prepared here in my place to say that the nation has no authority to charter an incorporated company for the purpose of doing that work; and that if the nation had that authority and were to exercise it, it would be one of the most dangerous encroachments upon the stability of the Union of which you can conceive. This work will lie wholly within the State of New York, wholly within its territorial jurisdiction; and if the Federal Government can incorporate a company to make that improvement in that place and to make the improvement contemplated here, there is no reason in the world why they cannot charter incorporated companies to do anything else within the State of New York. That the power to regulate commerce confers a power to remove an obstruction that lies in the pathway of commerce I shall not undertake to deny. That there is an obstruction to commerce at this particular point everybody knows. That it ought to be removed, if possible, I suppose nobody is willing to controvert. But that is not the question. The question is whether the Federal Government, by virtue of any power conferred upon it, can create an incorporated company to enter into the State of New York and exercise its franchises there for that purpose.

It is said that those who have read the debates of the Convention which formed the Constitution, and those who know the history of the Constitution and of the causes which induced the Convention to confer upon the Federal Government the right to regulate commerce, know very well that it was conferred for this purpose. I say that the very reverse, the very contrary, is the case; and that those who have read the debates of that Convention, and those who know that history, know that such a power as this never was contemplated when that clause was inserted into the Constitution, and it was inserted for an entirely different purpose, and is ample for the purpose for which it was intended.

Now, I should like to know from learned lawyers who advocate this scheme, when this corporation is made to whom will it belong? When a corporation is created by the supreme authority of the country, that corporation is within the control of the courts of the country for the purpose of enforcing the trusts imposed, for the purpose of seeing that the franchises are properly exercised. Suppose this corporation were to do something not warranted by its charter, I should like to know from my learned friend from Vermont into what court he would go to correct it?

Mr. McDOUGALL. Any court.

Mr. COWAN. Can he go into the courts of New York?

Mr. McDOUGALL. Yes.

Mr. COWAN. The honorable Senator from California says yes, he can go into the courts of New York. Can he go into the United States courts?

Mr. McDOUGALL. Yes.

Mr. COWAN. Then I ask, suppose the courts of New York were to enjoin, and the United States courts were to relieve against the injunction; what then?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I will answer the question.

Mr. COWAN. You had better answer it all in a lump when I get through. That will be the better way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania must not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. COWAN. Here are two sovereignties; here are two distinct sets of courts; and it is clear both of them cannot have jurisdiction; that is an absurdity.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Why not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Order must be observed.

Mr. COWAN. From the very reason of the thing, if there is any reason left. It may be that reason, too, has departed; but if reason is left, from the very reason of the thing two sovereignties cannot exist over the same subject at the same time. This corporation will either belong to the State of New York or belong to the United States; it will be either within the jurisdiction of the courts of the one or the courts of the other. Now, I should like to know from some learned gentleman, who can sit still long enough until he gets the chance to do it, how this is to be remedied? Which of these two classes of courts will be the proper ones to have jurisdiction over this corporation?

Mr. McDougall. Allow me—

Mr. COWAN. Not now; keep quiet until I get done. It is extraordinary that I must be interrupted every minute.

Which of the two shall it be? If it is the courts of New York, then the United States courts have nothing to do with it; and then you will have the extraordinary spectacle of the Federal sovereignty creating a corporation which is to be regulated, controlled, and kept within the limits and bounds of its charter by a court of another jurisdiction. If the jurisdiction is confined to the Federal courts, then you have the other extraordinary anomaly of a corporation entirely within a State, the subject-matter entirely within a State, regulated and controlled by the Federal courts and their jurisdiction.

Mr. President, this cannot be. It is not in the nature of things that it can be. It is incompatible with the idea of our system, and directly, as I judge, in the face of the constitutional power delegated to us.

Again, where is it to end? If we can create corporations and put them in New York such as this is, we can create other and different corporations. If we can remove an obstruction which lies in the pathway of commerce upon the borders of New York and within her territories, then we can remove the obstruction which lies in the Alleghany mountains within the State of Pennsylvania and within her jurisdiction.

Mr. McDougall. Allow me a moment—

Mr. COWAN. No; I will not yield at all. I would rather not be interrupted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania must not be interrupted by any Senator without his consent. Order must be observed.

Mr. COWAN. I have refused half a dozen times already, and the gentleman does not understand it.

Now, that is the difficulty; and as I said before, if one corporation can be created and put into the State of New York, then any number of corporations can be placed there within the Federal jurisdiction and subject to be regulated by the Federal courts. Then you will present another most extraordinary spectacle that citizens of New York, or citizens desiring to speculate in New York, will first hesitate and inquire with which government they can make the best terms. Can we get larger powers, more valuable franchises from the Federal Government than we can from the State of New York? If so, then they will go to the Federal Government to get them. If, on the other hand, they can make a better bargain with the State of New York, then New York perhaps may retain her especial jurisdiction over this class of persons—corporations. Surely gentlemen do not contemplate this result.

But it is said that this work is of a national character. Who decides whether it is of a national character or not? The body assuming jurisdiction over it. The Congress of the United States may decide that it is of a national character, but the Legislature of New York may decide that it is of a local character; and hence you have a conflict there, and a conflict which strikes at the very root of the Union formed among the States for their general security. I cannot conceive of anything which would be better calculated to destroy the peace and harmony of the several States than this alleged power on the part of Congress to grant corporate franchises to be exercised within the limits of the States. If this Government has any power at all to relieve against the mischief existing there, if it has any power whatever to devote its means and its resources to a canal or railroad around the falls of Niagara, the work must be done by Congress as a gratuity. It has no right to delegate that power to a corporation created there, invested with these franchises, where it is to exist forever as a monopoly. As a matter of course it must necessarily be so, because it would be exceedingly unfair to the corporation if, when created, it were not a monopoly. I say Congress has no power whatever to create a corporation for such purposes.

But we are told by eloquent Senators that we have the power under that clause which gives us authority to regulate commerce. Mr. President, did any man ever suppose that the right to regulate commerce included within it the right to create a common carrier? What will this canal be, what will this railroad be, when it is created? Nothing more or less than a common carrier. A railroad company and a railroad itself is in no wise distinguishable from a road-wagon with six horses and a driver upon it. It is simply a common carrier, a machine which takes up a box at a particular point and delivers it at another point, owned by a single person, although that person may be a corporate person, with a hundred natural persons as corporators; but the corporation itself and the work it constructs constitute in the law but a common carrier. I agree that we have a right to regulate that common carrier; I have no doubt about it; and why was the power given? If the history of the Constitution had been properly read we should have seen why. We have thirty-six States, and a single State may throw itself, to use the language of the Senator from Vermont, across the pathway of commerce, and tax the inter-State commerce of the people of the Union, just as I understand the Camden and Amboy railroad is made the instrument by New Jersey to tax the inter-State commerce of other States; just as the Baltimore and Ohio railroad is made the instrument on the part of Maryland to levy taxes from the inter-State trade and travel of the other States to put into her State treasury. I can say to the Senator from Vermont that it was to prevent that that Congress was given the power to regulate commerce. Under the old Articles of Confederation each State had the right to levy off the inter-State trade and travel the same taxes, the same duties, and the same tolls that she levied off her own citizens. Now you observe how that works. Maryland had the right under the old Articles of Confederation to levy upon a traveler coming from Baltimore to Washington just the same amount of taxes, in the shape of tolls, that she had to levy upon her own citizens; but it was soon discovered that the citizens of Maryland might very well pay this tax themselves, provided they had the liberty to tax all the rest of the people in the world who came to the capital and put it into their State treasury. Therefore it was that Congress was given the power to regulate commerce; and, in my judgment, if to-day Congress were to pass an act declaring that no State should levy taxes in this way, to put into her State treasury, from people who were in no wise bound to obey it, such an act of Congress would be good, and the courts would enforce it, and they would carry out that power which was delegated to us. There is nothing in the world to prevent an act of Congress from being passed declaring that the Camden and Amboy railroad shall not be used by New Jersey as a tax-collector off the citizens of New York and Pennsylvania who choose to cross between Philadelphia and New York. An act of Congress which would forbid the State of Maryland from making a tax-collector out of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad for the purpose of putting taxes into the Maryland State treasury I say would be a good act of Congress, and the courts would enforce it.

That is the power to regulate commerce; and when the history of it is examined it grows out of that reason. We have the right to regulate the common carrier; we have the right to regulate all those persons who hold themselves out to the country as common carriers; and, in my judgment, it ought to be done; and if the country ever comes to a settled condition, I hope it will be done; that Congress will regulate, not usurp, authority to create corporations; not usurp the right to enter upon States in violation of the reserved rights of the States, in order to expend their money, or allow it to be expended in the creation of monopolies.

Therefore, Mr. President, I think it would be well to consider this measure most maturely; I think it would be very well for its friends to consider it maturely. I think if I were a corporator proposing to embark myself on this speculation I should like to know whether the machinery which is at our command, Federal machinery, would be able to secure my rights in and about it. There is the difficulty, and the difficulty stated as briefly as I know how to state it. I put aside all questions of the expediency of doing this work, the policy of having it done. I have nothing to say about that. I suppose nobody will controvert but that it would be a good thing to avoid the difficulty there which occurs in the outlet from the great lakes to the ocean; but that we have the right to do it by this means and through this medium is what I positively deny. The Senator from New York asked the question, and it was a pertinent one, when before has the Federal Government undertaken the exercise of such a power as this? Never. Where was the power delegated? Where is it? In what part of the Constitution? And if it was there, and if it was exercised, then I ask what becomes of the States and their right to create corporations? What will become of our State corporations?

Then there is another question which is most intimately connected with all this: who shall tax this company that you are about to create? Shall New York have the right to tax it, or shall it be free from taxation on the part of the States? If it be free, then you will have a parcel of Federal corporations in every State which are liberated from the ordinary burdens of State taxes to support the State government. If, on the other hand, your corporation is liable to be taxed for State purposes, what is to prevent the State from taxing it out of existence? When the corporations created by the State and the corporations created by the Federal Government come into conflict, if the State has the right to tax them, the State may tax the Federal corporations out of existence, and would have the right to do it, and ought to do it. So that when you come to examine it in every way, it is not only unconstitutional and wrong, but it is not feasible. It cannot exist, in my judgment, in the nature of our Government. It is not possible, because it involves the destruction of the one or the other of the two powers. They are incompatible. If New York charters this company, then the United States cannot charter it; if the United States can charter it, then the State of New York cannot.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania what he thinks about the national charters of national banks in the States of Pennsylvania and New York, and their charters of State banks? Is there any great difficulty about that, or about taxing either?

Mr. COWAN. I have a very clear and decided opinion upon the charters of national banks in the State of Pennsylvania and in the State of New York. I have not obtruded it upon the public because I had no disposition to add another element to the difficulties which now surround our financial situation; but as the honorable Senator has put the question distinctly to me, I answer it quite as distinctly. I do not think the charter of the national banks in the States is worth that, [snapping his fingers.] The old charter of the United States Bank was only sustained upon the ground that it was chartered for the purpose of being a fiscal agent for the Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has not the Supreme Court recognized these banks?

Mr. COWAN. I know nothing about that. I never knew the question had been started whether they have recognized them or not; but the Supreme Court recognizing an institution when there is no question before them as to its authority is not very much guide for the law. When the question comes up as to the right of the Federal Government to thrust itself into the States and create banks and corporations for the purpose of banking there, and not for the purpose of making them fiscal agents of this Government, not necessary for the collection and disbursement of revenue—when that question comes up and the Supreme Court decides it in the affirmative, then I will agree that the law is settled on that point. That has been the difficulty I have had with national banks from the outset; and you run into the same series of difficulties, you involve the country in the same troubles, by that system, except to a smaller extent, that you do by incorporations which have for their object the creation simply of common carriers.

Mr. President, if we desire to preserve the Union, if we desire to preserve harmony among the States and preserve their rights, their right to govern their own internal concerns, which I believe never was denied on the part of anybody, and if that is essential to the maintenance of the Union, then we should be exceedingly careful about things of this kind. When you get into a controversy with the great State of New York, with its four or five million inhabitants, when your sovereignty comes to clash with that, and you find Pennsylvania and other great States, such as Ohio, backing New York, you may have more difficulty in preserving this Union than you had in coercing the South into sustaining it.

These are things to make wise men pause, to make them hesitate, and make them be exceedingly careful before they set their foot down to know that it is on firm ground. I think this time of national excitement, this time when all is turbid water and nobody is able to see very clearly, is not the time to adventure upon a usurpation of this kind, however much the work may be necessary, however much it would be policy even, if you please, that the national Government should expend its money and make a gratuitous work of it. That is an entirely different thing. I suppose the State of New York would have no objection to that; I suppose she would waive perhaps her right to tax any gratuitous effort that was made by the General Government to get around the falls there; but I am very certain that she will never give up the right to tax any corporation you may put there; and I am very certain she will never, when she understands it, give up the right of her courts to control that corporation; nor would she have any right to do it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Mr. President, it is so long since I studied the law of common carriers that I cannot exactly understand the full force of the argument of the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania—it is so long since I thought that had anything to do with great public law. The law of common carriers may be very well from Reading to Philadelphia in the carrying of coal and iron; but the law of common carriers does not govern the relations of our inter-States and inter-nations. The authority for doing this is in this simply: that it is a great question of national interest, not involving the State of New York as a specialty. New York has but little to do with it; it comes from Lake Superior; it comes from all the rivers that flow into Lake Superior; it comes from Lake Michigan; it comes from Lake Huron; it comes from Lake Erie; it comes from all the country that has an outflow into the St. Lawrence, on our great northern lines; and the enterprise is altogether national.

The Senator from Pennsylvania is laboring under the difficulty that a Senator from South Carolina once did—an illustrious man now gone to his fathers. He did not know that there was such a river as the Mississippi until he was invited with great earnestness to go out to the great convention held at Memphis. He (for he was of illustrious fame) was chosen as president of that convention, and he came back to the Senate of the United States and organized a committee here in this body and made a report, and he found out that the Mississippi was a great sea, and his entire idea of policy as to how improvements should be made within the lines of our continent had been changed. He changed them, and Mr. Calhoun's report to the Senate was probably a retreat equal to the retreat of Xenophon, or Moreau out of the Black Forest. The Senator from Pennsylvania may have occasion to find when he has not only crossed the Alleghanies, but crossed the Mississippi, that he has many things to learn that have not yet come within the range of his immediate comprehension.

Sir, this work is one which should have been accomplished long since. In the hands of any other Government it would have been done. The objection to it as a question of constitutional law cannot be enforced by any one. It is a great work required by the Government for great public purposes, and it is inter-State and international both. It is a long time since that we have learned, and most students have learned, that we have to accomplish these great works by the united force of the united Government. I do not know of any enterprise that is more demanded of the united Government of the States of North America than this work now, to make a pathway from the lakes to the Atlantic on our own soil. England started long in advance of us. We have not even stepped upon her footpaths. It is no honor to us that we have failed so long to make this pathway to the ocean.

As for the question of constitutional law, in discussing constitutional law we should remember that the Constitution is not all written in words. It was organized in the minds of men. It is to be understood and comprehended by a larger sense than the mere form of words. Our right to give organization to this enterprise, to give it birth and strength and life is as unquestionable as anything that belongs to congressional legislation.

Mr. MORGAN. I think it is late enough for the Senate to adjourn. It is for the Senate to determine whether they will adjourn or not. It is now near eleven o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator make a motion?

Mr. MORGAN. If Senators wish to adjourn, I should be glad to do so.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to give notice that I shall be obliged to-morrow to call up the Army appropriation bill. The bills left unfinished that require the action of the Finance Committee are that bill, the miscellaneous appropriation bill, which has been sent to us and which the committee must take up to-morrow, and the tax bill, upon which the committee must enter at once. It will be impossible, in my judgment, unless we go on with these bills immediately, straightforward, to get through or begin to get through with the business of the session. It is for the Senate to judge how long a time they will spend in debating this bill, and what is to be done with it. The bills I have mentioned must take precedence if the Senate mean to complete the work of the session.

Mr. HOWE. Let us have a vote on this bill now.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall not press the Senate to adjourn; but if they conclude to go on with this bill I must read a communication that I have here from the comptroller of the State of New York. I read it for the purpose of showing that the views I entertain on this subject are entertained by the financial officers of the government of New York.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will give way I will make a motion to adjourn. We ought not to weary ourselves out now, as we shall have so much to do this week.

Mr. MORGAN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 15, noes 14; and (at ten o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 26, 1867.

Prayer by Rev. JUSTIN D. FULTON, D. D., of Boston, Massachusetts.

On motion by Mr. ANTHONY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

CONGRESSIONAL PRINTER.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate proceed to the election of a Congressional Printer.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the rule which requires the election of officers of the Senate to be made by ballot be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be dispensed with by unanimous consent. No objection being made, that rule is dispensed with.

Mr. ANTHONY. I nominate John D. De-frees, of Indiana, for Congressional Printer.

The nomination was agreed to.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. FOGG presented the credentials of Hon. JAMES W. PATTERSON, elected a Senator by the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1867; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of an appropriation to improve the harbor at Pere Marquette, in the State of Michigan; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

He also presented a memorial of the central executive committee of the Ben. Butler Republican clubs of New Orleans, Jefferson, Algiers, and Gretna, Louisiana, recommending Hon. R. King Cutler for provisional governor of that State; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HENDRICKS presented a petition of the National Bank Note Company of New York, praying that the Postmaster General may be authorized to settle their accounts with the Post Office Department upon a just and equitable basis; which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. LANE presented resolutions of the Legislature of Indiana, in favor of the equalization of soldier's bounties; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. YATES presented the petition of Mrs. M. E. Estabrook, whose deceased husband was captain of company D, seventh regiment Illinois volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented a petition of officers and members of the New Jersey Historical Society, praying that the historical library of Peter Force may be purchased by the Government; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. POMEROY presented resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of the establishment of certain mail routes in that State; which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL presented a memorial of the Maine Historical Society, praying that the historical library of Peter Force may be purchased by the Government; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. CHANDLER presented resolutions of the Legislature of Michigan, in favor of the protection of the fisheries of the upper peninsula of that State from the encroachments of foreigners; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of Michigan, in favor of an appropriation to aid in the improvement of the channel of navigation between Lake Superior and Eagle Harbor, in the county of Keweenaw, in that State; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of Michigan, in favor of a donation of lands for the endowment of female colleges in the several States; which were referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWE presented resolutions of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of the establishment of a mail route from Rural to New London, in that State; which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TRUMBULL presented a petition of soldiers in the war to suppress the late rebellion, praying for the passage of the bill which allows a bounty of eight and one third dollars per month to all soldiers for the terms of their respective service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. TRUMBULL, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of the Adams Express Company, praying that the Secretary of the Treasury may be authorized to issue to them Treasury notes in the place of the notes lost by the sinking of the steamer Bio Bio at New Orleans on the 22d of March, 1863; and that the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition and papers.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Charles W. Whitney, praying for additional compensation for building the iron-clad gunboat Keokuk, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 86) referring the papers in the case of F. A. Gibbons and F. X. Kelley to the Court of Claims, reported it with amendments.

Mr. POMEROY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred the petition of the McGregor Railway Company, praying aid to extend their railroad from O'Brien county, Iowa, to Yankton, Dakota Territory, and the bill (S. No. 504) to improve the value of Government lands on the line of the McGregor Western railway, by aiding said railway company to construct said railroad, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 509) to amend certain acts in relation to the Navy, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HENDERSON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 177) to provide for the payment of certain awards for losses sustained by loyal Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

TRIAL OF RIDGWAY'S BATTERY.

Mr. NYE. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 290) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to grant the use of guns for trial of Ridgway's battery, have directed me to report it without amendment; and as it is very brief and simple in its terms I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to grant the use of two eleven-inch Dahlgren guns to John Ridgway, of Boston, for use in experimental trials of Ridgway's patent-revolving battery.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES FULTON.

Mr. FOWLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 577.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 557) for the relief of James Fulton, paymaster United States Navy. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Government in the settlement of the accounts of James Fulton, paymaster United States Navy, to allow a credit of $17,213 95, for clothing and small stores abstracted from the inspection building in his charge while on duty at the navy-yard, Washington.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. FOWLER. The Committee on Naval Affairs have made a very full report on this subject. I ask that it be read.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not care to have it read if the Senator will state what it is.

Mr. FOWLER. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CRAGIN] can explain it fully.

Mr. CRAGIN. I made the report in this case. It is the case of Mr. Fulton, who was paymaster at the Washington navy-yard. When he took possession of the yard a large amount of property these came into his hands as inspector, and there was a clerk who had been employed by the former inspector there who was continued under him. This clerk was recommended as an honest and faithful man, but it turned out afterward that he was guilty of stealing this property, and he has been indicted by the courts here and is now awaiting his trial. On investigation it proves that some seventeen thousand dollars of property had been taken. It does not appear that it was all taken while Mr. Fulton was paymaster in charge there; a portion of it may have been taken while his predecessor was in the office; but the Department are clearly of the opinion, and so are the committee, that Mr. Fulton is in no way to blame. He was charged with very onerous duties there. It was at the time of the breaking up of the rebellion. He had not only to pay some fifteen hundred laborers employed at the navy-yard, but some twenty-five hundred men who had been employed upon the Potomac were all thrown upon his hands, and a large amount of property was turned over to him at the close of the rebellion. It is in evidence that he had to work night and day and even Sundays to keep up with his business. He is an entirely trustworthy and honest man, and it was by the criminality of his clerk that he has been brought into this position. The case is one of great justice, and the bill ought to be at once passed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. What was the property? It was not money?

Mr. CRAGIN. Clothing, silk handkerchiefs, hat ribbons, and those things that this clerk could conceal under his coat and carry off day by day from the office unknown to anybody.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is this amount of $17,000 the estimated value of the goods?

Mr. CRAGIN. That is the amount of the value of the goods stolen in all, dating back some time. This clerk was employed under the former paymaster, and the presumption is that a portion of the goods were taken before Mr. Fulton came there.

Mr. FOWLER. I will read for the information of the Senate the letter of the chief of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing on this subject:

BUREAU OF PROVISIONS AND CLOTHING.
February 11, 1867.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the letter of Hon. J. W. GRIMES, chairman of the Naval Committee of the Senate, with the papers in the case of Paymaster J. Fulton, referred by you to this bureau, and to report:

That Paymaster Fulton has always maintained the highest reputation at the Department and in the service for integrity and fidelity in the discharge of his duties.

Owing to the insufficient number of paymasters in the Navy at the time he was ordered to the Washington navy-yard, in February, 1865, it was impossible to assign another paymaster with whom to divide the duties, which were of so laborious and complicated a nature as would otherwise have made it advisable to do so.

His accounts for the expenditure of very large sums of money have been promptly and fully settled.

His duties in disbursing money were such that he was much absent from the inspection building, and this gave to his clerk, who was thus necessarily left in charge, the opportunity to pursue a continuous and systematic course of dishonesty.

Mr. Fulton received from his predecessor the very highest recommendation of this clerk for honesty and ability, and therefore very naturally gave him full access to articles of value at the inspection building, when other duties obliged him to give his personal attention at the pay office, in another part of the yard.

Such confidence had this clerk inspired that Mr. Fulton, as well as those paymasters who had preceded him, had taken the clerk's written account of the articles on hand, instead of making that thorough personal examination which would have been desirable.

In Mr. Fulton's case, more than in any other, this was pardonable, since, owing to the pressure of business incident to the close of the war, his duties were more arduous than had ever been performed by any paymaster at that yard.

The difficulties of Mr. Fulton's position, owing to the breaking up of the Potomac flotilla, were very great, and I have no doubt that he gave to the public property intrusted to him all the care and attention which he would have given to it had it been his own.

Considering Mr. Fulton's case an exceptional one, I hope that an examination of the papers in the case (which are herewith returned) will secure a favorable report for that officer.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
H. BRIDGE, Chief of Bureau.

Hon. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

D. RANDOLPH MARTIN.

Mr. HOWARD. I move to take up for consideration House joint resolution No. 271.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 271) authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust and settle the claim of D. Randolph Martin, assignee of the Washington, Alexandria, and Georgetown Railroad Company. It authorizes the Secretary of War to adjust and settle the claim of D. Randolph Martin, assignee of the Washington, Alexandria, and Georgetown Railroad Company, for the use and occupation of the road of the company by the United States from and after the 11th of January, 1862, until August, 1865, and to pay him such sum as may be found equitably due for such use and occupation.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY P. BLANCHARD.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1051, for the relief of Henry P. Blanchard. It is a bill which has already passed the House, and which at two former sessions passed the Senate. Now, it is only necessary to pass it here to complete the act.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope the Senator will let us get up some public business.

Mr. SUMNER. This will only take a minute.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have got charge of a bill which has passed the House of Representatives which I know the Senator is for.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator will be for this also. It is a bill that has twice passed the Senate at former sessions, and it has now passed the House. It is a bill for the relief of Henry P. Blanchard, who was marshal at Canton.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Henry P. Blanchard, for his services as marshal at the port of Canton, in China, from February 22, 1858, to July 1, 1860, the sum of $2,354 24.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. HOWE. I should like to know what that bill is.

Mr. SUMNER. I have already stated that it is a bill that has passed this body twice and has now passed the House of Representatives. It is reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations. There is a report accompanying it which was made to this body some two years ago.

Mr. HOWE. I thought it was a bill that had come from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SUMNER. Oh, no, it is a different bill. It is for services as marshal at Canton.

Mr. CONNESS. It is entirely right. There is no doubt on the subject.

The bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 213) to extend the provisions of the act in regard to agricultural colleges to the State of Tennessee.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 224) giving additional compensation to certain employes in the civil service of the Government at Washington, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. No. 220) for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels-of-war and steam machinery, disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ITHAMAR C. SLOAN of Wisconsin, Mr. COLUMBUS DELANO of Ohio, and Mr. SAMUEL McKEE of Kentucky, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the second and disagreed to the first amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 222) prohibiting payments by any officer of the Government to any person not known to have been opposed to the rebellion and in favor of its suppression, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. COLUMBUS DELANO of Ohio, Mr. JOHN B. ALLEY of Massachusetts, and Mr. ANTHONY THORNTON of Illinois, managers at the same on its part.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 276.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 276) to establish a Department of Education. It proposes to establish at the city of Washington a Department of Education for the purpose of collecting such statistics and facts as shall show the condition and progress of education in the several States and Territories, and of diffusing such information respecting the organization and management of schools and school systems and methods of teaching as shall aid the people of the United States in the establishment and maintenance of efficient school systems, and otherwise promote the cause of education throughout the country.

There is to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a Commissioner of Education, who is to be intrusted with the management of the department, and who is to receive a salary of $4,000 per annum, and who is to have authority to appoint one chief clerk of his department with a salary of $2,000 per annum, one clerk with a salary of $1,800 per annum, and one clerk with a salary of $1,600 per annum; which clerks are to be subject to the appointing and removing power of the Commissioner of Education.

It is to be the duty of the commissioner to present annually to Congress a report embodying the results of his investigations and labors, together with a statement of such facts and recommendations as will, in his judgment, subserve the purpose for which this department is established. In the first report made by the commissioner under this act there is to be presented a statement of the several grants of land made by Congress to promote education, and the manner in which these several trusts have been managed, the amount of funds arising therefrom, and the annual proceeds as far as they can be determined.

The Commissioner of Public Buildings is directed to furnish proper offices for the use of the department herein established.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to amend the bill by striking out the word "department" where ever it occurs and inserting the word "bureau." I do not see how we can avoid considerable complication by calling this, which is to be but a bureau, a department, when we have Departments, and the degree of their consequence is well understood. The head of a Department is entitled to seat in the Cabinet. The distinction is so clear and well established that I think there can scarcely be a difference of opinion as to the propriety of keeping it up. It certainly can add nothing to the dignity or to the efficiency or usefulness of this establishment to call it a department as contradistinguished from calling it a bureau, which it is to be. A department, meaning one great branch of the administrative part of this Government, should not be dwarfed by giving the term and name and designation now to an establishment which is to have two or three clerks. The head of the department is called a commissioner, the same term and designation that is applied to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, of Agriculture, and the other bureaus of the second order of importance in the Government. I hope the Senator having charge of the bill will see the propriety of this change.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not think there is any great importance in the word that is employed here. I beg leave to say, however, to the Senator from California that there is no law that makes the head of a Department a member of the Cabinet.

Mr. CONNESS. I am aware of that. I did not say there was.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understood the Senator to say that the heads of Departments were members of the Cabinet.

Mr. CONNESS. That is true.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No; I have never understood that the distinguished head of the Agricultural Department is a member of the Cabinet.

Mr. CONNESS. That is not a Department.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I believe it is so called in the law.

Mr. SUMNER. By law it is a Department.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is by the law called a Department; and I do not understand—

Mr. CONNESS. If the Senator will pardon me, I will say right here that it is now stated to me by a Senator that the head of that Department, I will call it, has upon more than one occasion declared that although entitled to a seat in the Cabinet by reason of the dignity of the Department, yet he has never contended for it and never sought it.

Mr. WILSON. He thinks he will get it soon. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNESS. This is no matter to jest about. If the term has been introduced in connection with the Bureau of Agriculture, I hope it will not be continued as to this.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I attach no very great importance to the word, whether it be bureau or department. This is a House bill, and I will state to the Senator from California one reason for having it a department: that the head of it may select and appoint his own clerks. If it is a bureau you cannot confer that power upon him. The Constitution authorizes Congress to vest the appointment of inferior officers in the heads of Departments, but not in the heads of bureaux. I think it would be somewhat important that the man put at the head of this department, if the bill becomes a law, should have the selection of the two or three clerks that the bill authorizes him to employ. I think it would be better than to have them appointed by the head of one of the Departments of the Government; and to what Department will you attach it? If the amendment of the Senator from California should prevail, it would be necessary to make several other amendments in the bill.

Mr. GRIMES. If the Senator will allow me to make a suggestion, it seems to me all this difficulty may be obviated by uniting this department with the Agricultural Department, and thereby we shall secure the services of the eminent gentleman who is at the head of that Department, and who is undoubtedly well qualified for this. [Laughter.]

Mr. TRUMBULL. That Department seems to have business enough of its own, and this is a separate matter; and I do not wish, as the Senator from California says, to treat it jestingly at all. I regard the bill as one of great importance to this country. It is particularly important now. If peace and harmony are ever to be established among the people of this Republic we must educate them; and now, in the disorganized state of southern society, when all their schools have been broken up for years, and a generation is growing up without education, it is important that we have some head to this educational interest in the country. The nation has done a great deal for education. In all the new States we have appropriated a section of land in every township for that purpose. We have also donated large tracts of land for seminary purposes and for agricultural colleges. The nation has been doing much to educate the children of the land. But, sir, we have no head to this. No means have been devised by which the improvements in science and education may be brought together and disseminated throughout the land.

Although some Senators affect to treat it with a smile as an unimportant matter, I believe it to be one of the great interests of this nation which should be fostered. I have always been in favor of donating lands for educational purposes. Sir, if we had a head to this branch of affairs, those lands would not have been squandered as they have been in many of the new States. Oftentimes from a want of system one of the first things the first settlers who have gone into a township have done has been to sell the sixteenth section for a trifling sum. Instead of waiting till the country became somewhat settled and the land valuable they have let it go for nothing. If we had had a department of education from the beginning, I believe it would have been one of the best bureaus or departments which the Government could have had.

I do not wish to take up time in regard to it; but I trust that the Senator from California will not persist in his amendment, which would require some other amendments. There can be no great importance in it, at any rate; it is a mere name; and it would involve the necessity of sending the bill back to the House of Representatives, as well as making other changes in the bill; and there is one reason which I have suggested to him, which I am sure he will appreciate, why it is better to use the word "department." Under these circumstances I trust the amendment will not be made.

Mr. DIXON. I agree with the Senator from Illinois that this bill is important; and when we look to the condition of the country and the great changes which are taking place in the country, and especially in the great matter of suffrage, it seems to me the bill is doubly important; for, sir, he is blind who cannot see that sooner or later the whole people of this country are to vote. If so, how
